The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $3,900 for salaries, offices of the District of Columbia (3 clerks of license bureau) for the fiscal year 1921, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the petition of Samuel Colcord and others praying for whatever compromises may be necessary with respect to reservations in order to bring about the early ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany. I ask that the letter of transmittal, which is addressed to me, may be printed in the RECORD and that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter of transmittal is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1920.

To the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: To you as the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and majority leader of the Senate we are presenting, signed by many of the most distinguished names in the country, an appeal which is addressed not to the Senate alone but also to the President, to whom it was duly presented on the 29th day of March.

Written and signed several weeks past, it can not now be construed as proposing any immediate action by the Senate in respect to the treaty, but only as bespeaking a friendly attitude toward it and a favorable reception of it if and when it is resubmitted to the Senate in a way that will give the opportunity.

It is our earnest desire and hope that it may be returned to the Senate in a way not to intensify partisan rancor and make another and perhaps ultimate rejection certain, but in such manner as will insure immediate agreement upon the vital question of the entry of the United States into the League of Nations. If then there be any questions left undetermined they may not be such as will keep the world waiting in suspense, suffering, and peril while discussion and negotiation continue.

Respectfully, but earnestly requesting your friendly and serious consideration of these suggestions, we are,

With respect,

SAMUEL COLCORD,
S. HOMER WOODBRIDGE,
CHARLES H. STOCKTON,
ARCHIBALD HOPKINS,
JOHN SPENCER BASSETT,
J. FRANKLIN JAMESON,
The Committee of Presentation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9781) to amend section 217 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 523) thereon.

Mr. McCORMICK, from the Special Committee on the National Budget, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 524) thereon.

CONDITIONS IN THE NEAR EAST (S. DOC. NO. 266).

Mr. LODGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to ask for the printing of Part 1 of the report of the American Military Mission to Armenia, by Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, United States Army. The entire report would make two or three substantial volumes. It is a very important report, and I should like to have it all printed. The first part gives a synopsis of the conditions in Armenia and Turkey, subjects which are engaging the attention of the Senate. I ask that it may be printed as a Senate document, omitting all illustrations.

I also ask that instructions may be given that the copy be carefully preserved, because it contains photographs and maps which are of value, and I do not want to have them destroyed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Why should not the entire report be printed? I have not read any part of it, not even the synopsis to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, but it must be a very valuable document.

Mr. LODGE. It is of very great value, indeed; but it embraces a great mass of papers, and there is a pronounced shortage of paper at this time. The difficulties are physical. Furthermore, if the entire report were ordered printed, it would also very much delay the Senate in getting the synopsis.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not objecting to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I simply thought it would be a good idea for the information of the country to have the entire report printed.

Mr. LODGE. It would be, and I hope later it may be done. It is a most valuable report. The object of the committee was, first, to get the synopsis printed, and at this moment, in view of the great shortage in paper, not to try to print two or three volumes, which would cause long delay and which it would be very difficult, really, to get printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that, if there are illustrations in the report, a special order would have to be made by the Senate that they be printed.

Mr. LODGE. I expressly asked that the illustrations be omitted.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the Senator make the request.

Mr. LODGE. I asked that the illustrations be omitted, because the printing of them would involve long delay.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts how many copies would his request, if complied with, give to each Senator; that is, the printing of Part 1 as an ordinary public document without other specifications?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] can give the Senator the exact figure.

Mr. SMOOT. Each Senator would be entitled to two copies under the first printing as a public document; but I will say to the Senator that if the printing of additional copies be found to be necessary, that can be taken care of later by an order of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To what extent?

Mr. LODGE. A document may be printed by Senate resolution up to $500 worth, but the Joint Committee on Printing have authority to issue an order to the Public Printer for the printing of additional copies up to $200 worth.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think $200 would go very far in printing the summary of the report, which contains about 75 typewritten pages.

Mr. LODGE. There are 44 pages and the appendix; altogether there are about 60 typewritten pages of matter the size of a folio page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will be granted.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4073) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, and I submit a report (No. 518) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Missouri Valley Bridge & Iron Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, its successors and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway, trolley, and railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway bridge and the mouth of the Big Blue River, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4167) to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge approaches, and extensions or additions thereto, by the city of St. Louis, within the States of Illinois and Missouri, and I submit a report (No. 519) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the construction and completion of the municipal bridge approaches and also extensions or additions thereto, which said construction and completion was authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved June 25, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, extended, for the period of three years from February 11, 1921.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects of this act, the city of St. Louis may receive, purchase, and also acquire by lawful appropriation and condemnation in the States of Illinois and Missouri upon making proper compensation therefor, to be ascertained according to the laws of the State within which the same is located, real and personal property and rights of property, and in order to facilitate and support interstate commerce, may make any and every use of the same necessary and proper for the acquirement, construction, maintenance, and operation of said municipal bridge approaches, and extensions or additions thereto, consistent with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11877) granting the consent of Congress to Madison and Rankin Counties, in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River between Madison and Rankin Counties, and I submit a report (No. 521) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Madison and Rankin Counties, State of Mississippi, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, one end of said bridge being in Madison County and the other in Rankin County, State of Mississippi, at or near Meeks

Ferry, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAHONING RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12889) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River, at or near Division Street, in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, and I submit a report (No. 522) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Division Street, in the city of Youngstown, in the county of Mahoning, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) to extend the authority of the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa., and I submit a report (No. 520) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the authority granted in the act of Congress approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to authorize the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa.," is hereby renewed and extended to permit the commencement of the construction of said bridge within one year, and its completion within three years, from the date of the passage of this resolution, as provided under section 6 of the act of Congress approved March 23, 1906, being an act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MR. HOOVER AND THE FARMER.

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 348), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Mr. Hoover and the farmer," and the letter from Henry C. Wallace to Senator GORE, in re Hoover and the farmers, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The manuscript ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

[From Wallaces' Farmer, Mar. 19, 1920.]

[In a recent issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Mr. Hoover answers Wallaces' Farmer and tries to show that he acted fairly in fixing hog prices in the fall of 1918. But in his answer Mr. Hoover tries to humbug Congress just as he tried to humbug the farmers. If Mr. Hoover had lived up to his agreement, the hog producers of the Corn Belt would have received $50,000,000 more for the hogs marketed from October 1, 1918, to March 1, 1919, than they actually did receive. But the thing that really hurt the farmer was not the loss of money but the deliberate effort to deceive him—to play him for an ignoramus who would not see how he was being worked.]

MR. HOOVER AND THE FARMER.

"The article, 'What's the matter with the farmer?' which appeared in our issue of February 13 has stirred up the forces which have been planning to make Mr. Herbert Hoover the next President of the United States. It was criticized by some of the daily papers, which seem to be definitely committed to the Hoover propaganda, and it has brought an answer from Mr. Hoover himself. This answer from Mr. Hoover affords such a beautiful illustration of his methods of evasion that, in justice to the farmers of the country, it seems necessary to deal with it. It is an astonishing answer to come from a presidential candidate.

"It will be remembered that in the article, 'What's the matter with the farmer?' we said that Mr. Hoover more than any other one man was responsible for starting the dissatisfaction among the farmers of the country. This was said simply as an explanation of one of the reasons why there is such widespread dissatisfaction among farmers.

"It seems that this article in Wallaces' Farmer came to the attention of Senator GORE, and he proceeded to have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the daily publication which reports all the proceedings of Congress.

"When Senator HENDERSON read the article he brought it to the attention of Mr. Hoover, and on February 23 Mr. Hoover addressed a letter to Senator HENDERSON and sent him certain reports issued by the Food Administration. This letter and the accompanying documents were printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In his letter Mr. Hoover said: 'One statement' (referring to the article in Wallaces' Farmer) 'is absurd on its face; the other, relating to hogs, can easily be demonstrated inaccurate by the actual documents.' He then went on to say:

"'The approach of the armistice and a sharp fall in forward prices of corn caused the plan' (he means the plan of making good his 13 to 1 promise on the price of hogs) 'to break down, because farmers naturally interpreted the falling corn to mean ultimate falling hogs, and a panic in marketing started. The live-stock committee of farmers was summoned to meet in Washington to consider the whole situation on October 25, 1918.'

"Mr. Hoover submits with the letter the circular issued October 26 dealing with the price of hogs.

"Now, from the foregoing, it is very clear that Mr. Hoover wishes the people to believe: (1) That a panic in marketing had started and something had to be done to stop it, and (2) that the meeting held in Washington October 25 was called to deal with this emergency, the inference being that this was the first meeting of the committee to deal with fall hog prices.

"The fact is that the first meeting called to consider the matter of putting in force the 13 to 1 corn-hog ratio was held on September 24 or 25 and is reported in a document issued by Mr. Hoover on September 25, 1918, or a month before the October meeting, which he seems to want people to believe was the first meeting. It is not necessary to republish this document issued September 25. It is only necessary to say that it bears on its face the clear evidence that Mr. Hoover did not propose to carry out in good faith his 13 to 1 promise, but intended to juggle the figures in such a way that he would seem to be carrying it out when in fact he was not.

"This report, which was issued September 25, was followed by a report issued October 2, which reveals still more clearly the purpose to evade the promise, and this in turn was followed by two documents, dated October 3, dealing with the same matter. Why did not Mr. Hoover send all of these documents along with his letter to Senator HENDERSON for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

"Mr. Hoover says, 'A panic in marketing started.' When did this panic start?

"On July 1, 1918, the average price of hogs in Chicago was $16.40. They advanced gradually through the month of July and on August 1 the average price was $19.05. During the month of August the average price dropped as low as $18.65 on one day, but swung back promptly to $19, and from August 28 until September 5 the average price was above $19. On September 6 the average price was $18.95, which was the lowest price during the month of September. It advanced to $20.40 on September 16, and on September 28, the date when the report of the September 25 meeting first became generally known, the average price was $19.80.

"Now, note what happened. The average price of hogs in Chicago on October 1 was $19.50. Then, as the news of what Mr. Hoover was trying to do got out, hog prices started on the toboggan. They fell steadily until on October 24 they reached an average price of $15.85, a perpendicular drop of $3.65 per hundred in 24 days. That was the result of Mr. Hoover's September meeting. No wonder he avoids mentioning it. Naturally, he would like it to be forgotten. He caused hog producers to lose millions of dollars, with no corresponding benefit to consumers.

"Mr. Hoover would have Congress believe that this 'panic in marketing' came from the approach of the armistice. Nothing of the sort. It was precipitated by Mr. Hoover's effort to avoid keeping his promise, as brought out at the September meeting which he carefully refrains from mentioning. And it was this terrific slump in prices and the roar of indignation that went up throughout the country which compelled Mr. Hoover in the meeting held on October 25 to abandon his efforts to juggle with the 13 to 1 corn-hog ratio and to abandon all pretense of making good on that ratio.

"In the third paragraph of his letter to Senator HENDERSON, Mr. Hoover says that the committee recommended the abandonment of the 13 to 1 plan, as it could, 'under the new conditions,' only work out to the disadvantage of the farmer, and recommended the substitution of a minimum price of $17.50 per hundred. The only 'new conditions' were the disastrous conditions following the September juggling with the matter. The committee evidently agreed to Mr. Hoover's revised opinion because, as many of them have since stated, it was evident that Mr. Hoover did not propose to keep his promise fair and square, and they thought the only thing to do was to get the best out of him that they could.

"In the meantime, when the news of the action taken at the September meeting got spread about, various live-stock associations, agricultural papers, and others protested in the most vigorous way. For example, a special meeting of the Corn Belt Meat Producers' Association was called. This is the strongest organization of stockmen in the Central West. The president of the association, Mr. Sykes, was a member of Mr. Hoover's committee. Prof. Evvard, of Ames, was another member of that committee. Both Prof. Evvard and Mr. Sykes were present at this meeting of the directors held on October 22, and after reporting their experience at the September meeting of Mr. Hoover's committee and talking the whole matter over the following resolution, which both of them indorsed, was adopted by the directors:

"'Resolved, That the representatives of this association who attend the meetings called by the Food Administration to still further consider the price of hogs are hereby instructed to insist that the hog-corn ratio adopted by the Food Administration, November 3, 1917, be carried out in good faith and in accordance with the original intent, and that all promises, direct and indirect, made by the Food Administration for the purpose of stimulating production be made good in both letter and spirit. If, because of changed conditions, the Food Administration finds it impossible to make good its promises, then our representatives are instructed to state that the farmers and stockmen we represent will abide by whatever must be done to win the war and feed our people, but respectfully ask to be excused from further council in the matter until the Food Administration secures whatever authority it may need to carry out in absolute good faith any agreement it may enter into. The representatives of this association are further directed to express to the Food Administration our sincere belief that the policy it is now pursuing will inevitably tend to reduce not alone hog production but agricultural production of all kinds.'

"This was not the only protest. On October 16 a mass meeting of farmers was held at Lincoln, Nebr., and the Nebraska State Board of Agriculture, in Bulletin 263, issued a report containing the resolutions adopted, which include the following:

"'We do insist that a promise to us should be kept just as inviolate as promises made to men in any other occupation. We do not believe that our Government would permit any of its representatives to let their promises, either expressed or impiled, become merely scraps of paper.'

"It would not be difficult to gather together a large number of similar protests which went up from the farmers of the country.

"Mr. Hoover, in the fifth paragraph of his letter, says: 'Finally, it can also be noted that the average price of hogs for the year October 1, 1918, to October 1, 1919, was very close to $19 per hundred pounds, and it represents the full ratio in all the predominant hog and corn States. The farmer realized fully $2.50 per hundred more than he has realized this season in an unassured market.'

"This is typically Hooveresque. The impression is given that he controlled the market from October 1, 1918, to October 1, 1919, and therefore made good his promise, notwithstanding all of the criticism which has been made. What are the facts?

"Mr. Hoover did not control the market during 1919. His control ended about March 1, 1919. From October 1, 1918, to March 1, 1919, while Mr. Hoover was controlling the market, the average price of hogs at Chicago was $17.64 per hundred. From March 1, 1919, to September, 1919, when Mr. Hoover had no control over the market, the average price of hogs was $19.97 per hundred; and yet Mr. Hoover calmly claims credit for these higher prices which followed immediately after his control ceased.

"During the month of February, 1919, the lowest daily average price of hogs on the Chicago market was $17.50 and the highest daily average price was $17.93. Mr. Hoover's control practically ended with that month. This is what happened: The price opened on March 1 at $17.51. It began to climb immediately. By March 11 it had reached $19.17, and from that it climbed steadily until on March 31 it was $19.90. In April the average price was lowest on the 1st, $19.90, and reached $20.91 on April 24. In May it was never below $20, and reached the price of $21.21. In June the low price was $19.76 and the high price $21.39. Could there be a better illustration of the injustice farmers suffered than Mr. Hoover's control of hog prices? How thoroughly the trend of prices after he stepped out of control discredits all of his talk about his great trouble to keep up prices.

"We have dealt with this matter at such length simply because Mr. Hoover invited it himself when he sent his letter and documents for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He challenged there the correctness of statements made by Wallaces' Farmer, and it seems to us necessary to prove that he was wrong.

"There seem to be a great many innocent people who think that this talk of Mr. Hoover for President is the result of a spontaneous demand springing up all over the country; that he is being sought by people who would like to get away from domination by partisan politics. The fact is that there is abundance of evidence to show that for considerably more than a year past there has been organized effort by strong forces to make Mr. Hoover a presidential candidate. As far back as January, 1918, Edward Price Bell, correspondent of the New York Globe and the Chicago Daily News, cabled from London a dispatch which we quote as follows:

"'A strong article will appear to-morrow on Herbert Hoover, by Sir William Good. Among other things Sir William will say: "I shall be greatly surprised if Hoover is not some day President of the United States."'

"In an article published in the March, 1920, issue of the magazine Reconstruction, Alfred W. McCann, a well-known New York food expert, says: 'Many months ago, Tom Wilson, of Wilson & Co.; J. Ogden Armour, of Armour & Co.; and Theodore F. Whitmarsh, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, informed me on different occasions that they intended to support Hoover for President.'

"Mr. Hoover's letter to Senator HENDERSON and the documents he submitted in support of it have been republished in a 16-page pamphlet, and this is being sent out to papers all over the country. No name appears on the pamphlet, and there is nothing to show who is going to this expense, but evidently it is some one who is not unfriendly to Mr. Hoover's presidential aspirations.

"When he was 22 years of age Mr. Hoover left the United States, and until 1914 spent his time in foreign countries, promoting engineering and mining enterprises of one sort or another. He has been very successful financially, and understands the methods of big business. As a presidential candidate no doubt he would be very satisfactory to the large business interests. The farmers of the country, however, have already had enough experience with him to know that he is not the man they want in a position of power."

"WALLACES' FARMER,
"Des Moines, Iowa, March 3, 1920.

"Hon. T. P. GORE,

"DEAR SENATOR GORE: I see that you had the editorial in which I undertook to answer the question, 'What's the matter with the farmer,' reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 20.

"I note also that in the RECORD of February 24 Senator HENDERSON has caused to be printed a letter from Mr. Hoover and certain documents which are part of the records of the Food Administration. These documents are referred to by Mr. Hoover in his letter as demonstrating the inaccuracy of the statements made in my editorial.

"Naturally a controversy of this sort can not be carried on in the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; but, inasmuch as you caused my article to be published, it is due you that I should have something to say concerning the reply made by Mr. Hoover.

"You will note that Mr. Hoover's document No. 1 is the announcement made by the Food Administration November 3, 1917, carrying the promise that as to hogs farrowed in the spring of 1918 'we will try to stabilize the price so that the farmer can count on getting for each hundred pounds of hog ready for market thirteen times the average cost per bushel of the corn fed into them.'

"It was this promise which was given nation-wide publicity and which induced farmers to increase greatly their hog production in the spring of 1918.

"Now note carefully that Document No. 2 is dated October 24, 1918. This seems to be characteristic of Mr. Hoover.

"The fact is that the matter of carrying out the promise was first considered at a meeting of the committee held in Washington September 24 or 25, and reported in a document issued by the Food Administration September 25. It was at this meeting that Mr. Hoover undertook to juggle the figures and evade his definite promise. The report of the action taken at this meeting and the statements made in a document issued by Mr. Hoover October 2 (which he does not transmit with his letter) aroused such widespread indignation and condemnation in the corn and hog country that the meeting of October 23–25 became necessary, and Mr. Hoover was compelled to change his tactics completely and abandon all pretense of keeping the promise made November 3.

"To illustrate the indignation over the action of the Food Administration, I quote a resolution adopted by the directors of the Corn Belt Meat Producers' Association, the strongest organization of stockmen in the Central West, on October 22. The president of the association was Mr. Sykes, a member of Mr. Hoover's committee. Both he and Prof. Evvard, another member of the committee, were present and agreed to the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the representatives of this association who attend the meetings called by the Food Administration to still further consider the price of hogs are hereby instructed to insist that the hog corn ration adopted by the Food Administration November 3, 1917, be carried out in good faith and in accordance with the original interest, and that all promises, direct and indirect, made by the Food Administration for the purpose of stimulating production be made good both in letter and spirit. If, because of changed conditions, the Food Administration finds it impossible to make good its promises, then our representatives are instructed to state that the farmers and stockmen we represent will abide by whatever must be done to win the war and feed our people, but respectfully ask to be excused from further counsel in the matter until the Food Administration secures whatever authority it may need to carry out in absolute good faith any agreement it may enter into.

"The representatives of this association are further directed to express to the Food Administration our sincere belief that the policy it is now pursuing will inevitably tend to reduce not alone hog production but agricultural production of all kinds.

"On October 16 a mass meeting of farmers was held at Lincoln, Nebr., and in Bulletin 263 the Nebraska State Board of Agriculture issued a report containing the resolutions passed, which included the following:

"We do insist that a promise to us should be kept just as inviolate as a promise made to the men in any other occupation. We do not believe that our Government would permit any of its representatives to let their promises, either expressed or implied, become merely scraps of paper.

"I could give you many more illustrations of the widespread dissatisfaction caused by Mr. Hoover's efforts to evade his promise, but I think the foregoing are sufficient to prove my statement that Mr. Hoover was responsible more than any other one man for starting the dissatisfaction among the farmers of the corn belt.

"I simply submit in addition the following memorial addressed to the President and Congress of the United States. Note the thoroughly representative character of the associations whose names are signed to it:

"At a meeting held on March 8, 1918, at Chicago, Ill., attended by representatives of the associations whose names are subscribed hereto, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted as expressing the mature views of the stockmen of the corn-belt States:

"Resolved, That conditions which have prevailed during the past six months have been most discouraging to the live-stock producer. During most of this period prices received for the fat stock have been below the cost of production. If the needs of the Nation demand the sacrifice of our live stock, the stockman will cheerfully make the sacrifice; but he can not continue to produce at a loss.

"Resolved, That the fixing of prices of agricultural products by indirection and at secret conferences with middlemen by men who do not understand production problems will inevitably bring disaster to the Nation. The experience of the past three months has thoroughly shaken the confidence of corn-belt stockmen in the wisdom of those who have undertaken to stabilize live-stock prices and regulate live-stock marketing.

"Resolved, That the division of authority between the Food Administration and the Department of Agriculture is most unbusinesslike and has resulted in a confusion of tongues and multiplicity of advisers who often work at cross purposes, to the great bewilderment and embarrassment of the producer.

"Resolved, That the maintenance of agricultural production on a scale sufficiently large to feed our own people and our allies can not be hoped for unless a constructive agricultural policy shall be at once formulated and put in operation by men who understand the principles which govern production and who enjoy the confidence of the farmers and stockmen of the Nation. In the meantime, we demand an immediate readjustment of live-stock prices on the basis of cost of actual production, and that such adjustment be safeguarded by Congress and maintained for the present and the coming feeding season of 1918 and 1919.

"In adopting the foregoing resolutions we are actuated not so much by the desire to protect the live-stock industry from disaster as by the earnest hope that a wise production policy may be adopted in time to avert the impending most serious shortage in all foodstuffs, which will assuredly imperil the great cause for which our Nation is fighting.

"State Live Stock Association of Illinois, Corn Belt Meat Producers' Association of Iowa, Indiana Cattle Feeders' Association, Missouri Farmers' Association, Illinois Swine Breeders' Association, Minnesota Live Stock Breeders' Association, Michigan Live Stock Association, Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association, The National Live Stock Exchange, The Chicago Live Stock Exchange.

"I do not need to assure you that I had not the silghtest intention of discussing Mr. Hoover's candidacy for the presidential nomination. The dispatches which went out from Washington gave such a wrong impression of the state of the farmer's mind that I wrote the article, 'What's the matter with the farmer?' with the idea that a clear and truthful statement of the case might help clear the atmosphere.

"Very sincerely, HENRY C. WALLACE."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4211) to fix compensation of officers of the National Army who incurred disability while in the service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4212) to authorize the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey to construct a bridge across the waters of the Delaware River, between the city of Easton, in the State of Pennsylvania, and the city of Phillipsburg, in the State of New Jersey; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4213) granting a pension to Leroy C. White (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 4214) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz., for a certain described tract of land (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4215) to provide for the punishment of certain persons who interfere with interstate railroad transportation; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. DIAL (by request):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) for the relief of Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs of Joshua Nicholls; to the Committee on Claims.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. STERLING submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries for 10 graduate nurses who shall act as public-school nurses from $1,200 per annum to $1,500, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment providing that the percentages of captains and commanders in the Supply Corps be increased from 4 and 8 to 6 and 12, respectively, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ELIZABETH A. AGNEW.

Mr. GLASS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 349), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Elizabeth A. Agnew, widow of Frank E. Agnew, late the upholsterer and locksmith in the employ of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

STEAMSHIP "MATOA."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1005) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa, which was, on page 2, to strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SCHOONER "HENRY O. BARRETT."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1222) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett, which was, on page 2, to strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD STRIKES.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I had intended during the morning hour at this session of the Senate to have introduced a bill supplementing the short discussion of yesterday on a subject which appeals to me as perhaps the most important for the Senate to face at this time of any subject before it. It is that relating to the strike conditions which particularly affect the State that I in part represent.

However, on reading the newspapers this morning and supplementing that with a telephone conversation with the Attorney General, I think perhaps it is not necessary to actually introduce the bill I had in mind. In this morning's New York Times there appears an article with the Washington date line which states that—

PALMER SAYS LAW IS ADEQUATE.

In an interview this afternoon Attorney General Palmer said: "The Government will not run away from its responsibilities. There is plenty of law on the statute books for the protection of the people. The law will be enforced."

As I said, I confirmed that later this morning with a phone conversation with the Attorney General, and he said to me practically the same thing, in effect. I feel, Mr. President, that he is entirely correct in that statement, and that further law at this time to meet this particular situation is unnecessary, and would not assist in actually settling the difficulty.

The Government, in my judgment, inherently has the power of self-defense, and certainly this strike has reached a situation, especially in New Jersey, wherein the executive power of the Government, not the legislative power, but, especially in view of this statement, the executive power of the Government, must be exercised to its fullest extent in order that the situation may be relieved.

Yesterday on the floor of the Senate a Senator remarked that we are possibly facing a situation whereby a strike would be general on the railroads. So far as New Jersey is concerned, it has in practical effect reached that stage. One of the largest railroads in the State, the New Jersey Central Railroad, discontinued all its passenger service yesterday. This means that hundreds of thousands of commuters, who are mostly engaged in business in New York, can not get back and forth to their places of business. It means, of course, a lack of transportation of milk and supplies coming from suburban sections into New York City, and it means, as far as it is possible to understand, a situation almost without a parallel in this country.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the statement of the Attorney General is correct. Otherwise I was prepared to introduce a bill that would give power practically without limit to the Executive, when the health and life of the people of the country were threatened, under which the Executive would have the power to call in all the instrumentalities of the Government in order to cope with the situation.

It is perfectly well understood that it is not going to help the situation to put perhaps 40,000 men in jail. It is physically impossible to do it, and is not, in my judgment, the method to employ, anyhow. But, as I stated yesterday, I believe similar situations, so far as Congress is concerned, could be assisted in the future if men are required to give due notice, where they represent practically in their vocation the life and the health of the Nation, before actually leaving their responsibilities; and if they do not give due notice, that they shall automatically be considered as breaking the law.

This business of trying to discover whether a conspiracy actually exists after the men have left their work and Rome is burning, it seems to me, is not sufficient protection in itself in these days; and when I discuss our present difficulties I am not taking just one side of the question, either. There are two sides, and I hope when the Attorney General is investigating, or rather when he is acting, he will also act along the lines of the profiteering side. When we read in the papers that in some cases rents have been raised for small habitations from $12 to $20 a month, or from $15 to $25 a month, without any improvements whatever having been made to the property, I can well understand that there is a feeling of unrest among a large number of people employed, and that this to some extent naturally inspires uprisings of this character.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. EDGE. I am not going to take the time of the Senate, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts, because I do not think that we can relieve the situation to-day by hurrying perhaps ill-conceived legislation. I am delighted that the Attorney General feels that he has the power. I think this is a time to go ahead and act and look up the law afterwards, if it is necessary to do it.

I do not mean to be unfair to these men at all, but I feel that when the health and actual life of the people are at stake it is worse in a way than a war between nations abroad. It is a war within our own country, or at least that type of war which will in its final analysis result in more deaths and more suffering to the people of the country, perhaps, than a war between great nations, and it must be handled without reservation. We must handle it also so far as profiteers are concerned when we are considering tax laws, so as to reach the abnormal percentages of profit that have been made during this orgie of making money quickly.

That is one side, but, on the other hand, we must prevent men from leaving their employment when by leaving their employment they are practically leaving a helpless, innocent people without the daily needs of life. In the meantime the employers should not deal with the strikers until they return to their work. Also, there should be adequate protection for volunteers who are striving to render real service.

I trust that we may not put this responsibility behind us. The trouble with the American people is that they have been so successful, they have made so much money, to express it frankly, that when they have a difficulty like we are facing right now, which worries them for the time and by which they are inconvenienced, yet if in to-morrow's papers the headlines appear that the strike seems to be fairly well in hand or has been broken, then we go along in our daily avocations and enjoy ourselves as we did before and forget all about it.

Sooner or later we must face this situation from both sides and settle it. We are only piling up and pyramiding day after day when we say we are satisfied because it has apparently been temporarily checked, and go ahead and wait for the next outbreak. We pyramid until we get to a position where, of course, something horrible is going to happen. If we are going to suffer, and I am afraid we are before we can bring the American people to a realization of what is facing them, let us suffer now and get it over with. It is coming sooner or later.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, of course, but if this is going to lead to debate I should like to know what is the regular order.

Mr. EDGE. I recognize that I am somewhat out of order.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to interfere with the Senator, but——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of concurrent and other resolutions is the regular order.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to dispose of a petition and a report of a committee.

Mr. THOMAS. I interrupted the Senator simply to give him consolation by reminding him that the Senate is investigating the strike and by next July or August we will have a report upon it of some sort.

Mr. EDGE. I assure the Senator from Massachusetts that I will conclude in three minutes.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. EDGE. Answering the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, as far as the investigation is concerned I have personally little faith in investigations. An investigation without providing a remedy for the difficulty that has been uncovered by the investigation is simply a waste of time, and most of our investigations result in no real affirmative action after the investigation.

I do not think we need an investigation particularly in this matter. I think we all know the situation. We have all been to an extent dodging it. We have all been with our backs to the wall, hoping that something would happen somewhere and that it would adjust itself.

It will not as long as the profiteer abnormally raises his rent on the one hand and as long as society generally realizes that they are having to pay more and more on the other.

I take the stand here frequently that I do not believe in criticism without some constructive remedy. Neither do I. My remedy lies in two things that Congress can do. In the meantime the Executive, through the Department of Justice, I think, can do a great deal without legislation. The legislative remedies are these: On the side of the profiteer, readjust the tax laws so that we can get, as far as it is physically and humanly possible to get, the profits that are abnormal. On the other side, I believe, as I have suggested in this running talk, that Congress should enact a law affecting those men who are engaged in a pursuit directly connected with the health and life of the people of the country which will require them to give due notice of grievances before they actually leave their posts, and if they do not comply with a law prepared in that way that they automatically become lawbreakers. In that way we may deter some such movements as we are now facing.

On the other hand, I reiterate that it is just as important to get after abnormal profits which we see are being charged on every hand at this time. These are the two remedies which I suggest for existing conditions.

In the meantime, I do not see that we can do anything to help a great State and the surrounding States in the present difficulty except to depend upon the executive department. The Attorney General says that he has the law, and I believe in a case of this kind, where the health of the country is at stake, that he has the law, for, as I have said, the Government unquestionably has the inherent power of self-defense, and I hope that the Attorney General will act without hesitation.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me, I desire to call his attention to the fact that this is not a case of abnormal profits on the part of the railroads. An examination of the operation of railroads during the period of Government control shows that the roads failed to pay expenses. I do not see where the element of profiteering arises in that case.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I do not wish to be misunderstood in what I have said as to abnormal profits. I was not discussing any particular activity or vocation. When I spoke of abnormal profits, I referred to the profits charged by various classes of dealers in commodities, men who own and rent houses and men who sell goods, not to the railroads. We all appreciate that they have been among the enterprises that have been overregulated, but the regulations apparently do not often reach the rank and file.

Mr. EDGE subsequently introduced a bill (S. 4210) to prevent interference with the operation of the instrumentalities of interstate or foreign commerce, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

EMBARGO ON PERISHABLE PRODUCTS.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I send to the desk half a dozen telegrams from among many which I have received in regard to the embargo which has been placed on the shipment of perishable freight to eastern markets. I should like to have the telegrams read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The telegrams were read, as follows:

Telegrams received by Mr. DIAL from planters, business men, and municipal officials of Beaufort, S. C., regarding damage suffered and in prospect by reason of embargoes on perishable freight, due to railway strikes:

From Hon. Niels Christensen, State senator, merchant, planter:

"Necessary to move truck crop. Imperative if section is to be saved from financial disaster threatened by railroad strike."

From J. W. Gray, planter:

"Railroads have refused to receive my lettuce shipments. My lettuce must move now or ruin in field. Can you help?"

From H. F. Burkmyer, planter:

"Embargo on perishable truck for eastern markets means financial ruin. Can not something be done?"

From the People's Bank:

"Unless farmers can make shipment of truck now ready losses will be immense. * * *"

From W. E. Richardson, president the Beaufort Bank:

"Our entire farming territory demoralized. Lettuce crop, representing year's work at heavy expense, must be moved. Will not stand this week. Unless Government does something to adjust railroad strike immediately, this section is practically ruined financially."

From Beaufort Truck Growers' Association:

"During the war, when the Government appealed to the farmers to produce food to the limit, Beaufort County met the appeal in a spirit of patriotism. We now have a highly perishable crop which must be harvested without delay. Each 24 hours entails a loss running into thousands of dollars. We appeal to the powers of Government to give us relief, and expect you to make the appeal effective."

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, Beaufort is a rich truck-growing section; it is on the coast, some 500 miles from Washington. While there is no strike down there yet, the roads refuse to receive for through shipment the trucking produce, and great quantities of lettuce and other vegetables are going to waste there now because the roads will not receive them for through shipment.

In connection with the strikes which we are having, some of the employees claim that the cost of living is prohibitive, and yet at the same time they refuse to handle freight. That, of course, is one reason why living is high, namely, because they do not continue to run the trains and handle the freight. It seems to me that now is the time for all citizens, whether in public position or private, to express themselves upon this question. The time has come to settle it and settle it right. When railroad or other employees have their rows they do not consider the innocent farmers or the truck dealers who have accumulated large quantities of fresh vegetables and other products which will not keep; they do not consider the loss that will be entailed upon those men; but when they have some row, real or imaginary, between themselves and the railroads, or some row among or within their own organizations, they shut down our commerce.

I believe that a large number of the employees of the railroads are patriotic men; I feel that they want to go along, do their duty, perform their labors, and carry out their obligations to the company and to the public; but some of the walking delegates and unreasonable and extreme leaders encourage and incite a strike when there is no grievance behind it and when the question in dispute, if there be any, should be arbitrated and adjusted in some amicable way. The time for that kind of business is rapidly passing.

I voted against the Cummins bill, but I did not do so on account of the antistrike provision which it contained, and I so stated at the time. That bill having passed, I am sorry the antistrike provision was not retained in it; and if it had been retained, I should have liked to have seen it made a little bit stronger, as I said at the time.

Last year, directly after I took my seat in this body, I cast a vote to exempt certain classes from antitrust legislation. At the time I so voted I thought that it was wrong, but not having had much opportunity to look into the question, and following the beaten path, I cast my vote in that way. That is one of the few votes cast by me in this body which I regret. I have been ashamed of that vote ever since, and as soon as I have an opportunity I am going to correct it.

Mr. President, I am ready to go further; and, in all seriousness, I think the time has come when Congress should repeal all class legislation. We threw a little sop to the farmers last year, but they did not need it; they did not ask for it. Most of my constituents are farmers, but they are hard-working, honest people; they are willing to pay their debts, and they do not want to be exempted under the law. When we enact such legislative expedients here we are time servers. It will not do. Whenever we deviate from the direct path of legislation we are bound to get into trouble, and the more we deviate the deeper we will get into trouble.

So I wish that to-day bills would be introduced to repeal all class legislation or legislation granting special privileges. Some candidates might go down to defeat at the election, but they had better do that than to keep this country always in turmoil. There is something higher, Mr. President, than being returned to the House or the Senate, and I feel now that the time has come when we should let everybody in this country know where we stand.

The people away out in the country do not realize the situation that exists about these strikes. Last year four delegations of men came on here in one day, stating that the railroads would not accept the shipment of their tobacco down in South Carolina. They said that the farmers were losing many thousands of dollars a day. Now, these people who struck did not consider the comfort and the welfare and the happiness and the prosperity of the man who bought the seed and sowed it and put in the crop and cultivated and raised it, expecting that the railroads would run.

I say that these employees of railroads are under a contract—I do not mean a written contract or a verbal contract—but they are under an implied contract with the public that they will do their duty and will let those trains run, and in all decency and in all right and in all respect to themselves and to their neighbors and to the companies and to their Government they ought to carry out their contract, and then, if they intend to quit, give reasonable notice.

Not only that, Mr. President, but this Government ought to protect people in their employment. If a man wants to join a union and the union wants to let him join, I have no objection; but if a man wants to work and does not want to join the union, he should have just as much liberty to work as a union man has, and he should have protection, and, if necessary, this Government should use its troops to see that he is protected in the enjoyment of his labor, the same as a man is protected in the enjoyment of his property. Then, when people will not allow other people to take their positions because they have quit their jobs, when they go and throw rocks at a passenger train, or, as we read this morning, so far forget themselves and their duty to the public as to throw bars of iron into a train and hurt the passengers, they ought to be taken into court and, if convicted, put on the chain gang.

We should realize, and at once, what it is that confronts us, and I say, Mr. President, that we should act, and act promptly. I see intimations that some of the departments of the Government here are divided. It has been said that the great Department of Justice is hampered by the acts of subordinates in another department. That ought not to be in a democratic form of government. If they can not agree, somebody should be made to vacate, and that before sundown; and if those departments can not work in harmony now, then we should abolish some of them. It is time that the people of this country—the great mass of taxpayers and laboring people—should be protected, and know what to expect.

I may say to my colleagues that the people of this country are going to wake up. They are not going to allow a handful of voters, notwithstanding they are organized, to dictate to them whom they shall support. They are going to hold us to a strict accountability all over the country. Nearly every man to-day is paying an income tax, and he is going to want to know that that money is properly expended. We should encourage retrenchment, and we should set the example right here in Congress. I feel that a great deal of the unrest in this country emanates right from here. This is the hotbed and hatching place of a good deal of it.

One of the best things that could be done here in Washington would be for the commissioners to enforce the vagrancy law.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. Perhaps the Senator will pass judgment upon the Adamson Act, its advocacy, and the circumstances of its enactment.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I was not a Member of this body when the Adamson Act was passed; but, as I said before, and as I say again, I feel that it is one of the most iniquitous laws that ever passed in this Congress, and I would vote to-day, before night, to repeal it. I feel that the country will not get over the ill effects of the passage of that law for generations to come, and it ought to be repealed.

Mr. McCORMICK. Assuming that it is as iniquitous as the Senator suggests, what would the Senator say of the circumstances of its advocacy and of its advocates?

Mr. DIAL. I presume they thought it was necessary to enact it at the time it was done; but the Senator's party is in the majority here, and if you want to repeal it, introduce a bill for that purpose, and I will vote with you.

Mr. President, we ought to go to work right here in Washington and make some necessary reforms. When I came here I saw the parks full of surplus people; full of loafing people. You could not get on a street car and get a seat; they would not get up even to let a lady have a seat; and things of that sort. Here your schools are crowded, and everyone is always calling for more pay; and I notice, Mr. President, that nearly every day a murder is committed here. I feel that you have mighty poor enforcement of law in the city of Washington. People are always wanting appropriations, appropriations, appropriations. If you will allow me, I can send down to South Carolina and get about three judges to come up here and make the local government self-supporting in less than 30 days. We would run out about 100,000 of this vagrant crowd here, both white folks and negroes. I told my secretary to write a vagrancy bill for me, but I was glad to find that in 1910 my predecessor had secured the enactment by Congress of an admirable vagrancy law, and it stands upon the statute books to-day; and the authorities here ought to wake up and go to work and enforce it.

Why, I noticed yesterday where a negro killed a little child and then killed himself, I believe. At least, he ought to have killed himself. He ought to have been out in the country cutting wood, or raising potatoes, or making a living in producing something for the people to live upon. We want people to get out of the congested districts and go back on the farm, where they can live and do their duty and support themselves. So I hope we will wake up and do something to remedy the existing condition. I do not mean that we need additional law. I think we have plenty of law now; but the trouble is, we have too many laws and too many investigations. If we will enforce the laws that we have, enforce them like men, enforce them fearlessly, and have no favorites, and repeal some of the class legislation that we have passed, then we will set a good example in this country, and it matters little whether we be returned to Congress or not.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) The morning business is closed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 11892, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if he expects to reach a final vote on the bill to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope to get through with it before 2 o'clock to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Elkins	McCormick	Sheppard
Ball	France	McCumber	Simmons
Borah	Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Gronna	Moses	Smith, Md.
Calder	Hale	Myers	Smoot
Capper	Harris	Nelson	Spencer
Chamberlain	Harrison	New	Sterling
Comer	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Swanson
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dial	Keyes	Poindexter	Watson
Dillingham	Lenroot	Pomerene	Wolcott
Edge	Lodge	Reed

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it will be so ordered. The Secretary will read the bill for action on the amendments of the committee.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "$12,000,000" and insert "$20,000,000," so as to read:

That the sum of $20,000,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, for the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment increasing the amount from $20,000,000 to $24,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment may go over. I make this request because I think the discussion of the bill will be mostly upon this item. The other amendments can be passed upon, and after disposing of them we can have this one item disposed of toward the end of the discussion of the bill, and perhaps get a better attendance in that way than if we had the discussion at the present time, with all the other amendments yet to be passed upon.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to its going over. However, I want to have my amendment pending.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to passing it over temporarily and considering the other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over until other committee amendments are disposed of.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That $5,000,000 of the sum herein appropriated may be allotted for the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and $7,000,000 of the sum herein appropriated may be allotted for the prosecution of works of improvement heretofore authorized by Congress: Provided further."

Mr. SMOOT. This amendment ought to go over in connection with the first amendment, because if we adopt the House provision, then I think this proviso ought to be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state to the Senator that I do not think so. Col. Taylor stated that if he were allowed, even under the House provision, to have the lump sum he thought he could save two to three million dollars. So whichever sum is adopted, I think this amendment should be agreed to. I believe it is in the interest of economy and will tend to save money to the Government. However, if the Senator prefers that it shall be passed over, I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have it go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over until other committee amendments are disposed of.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 5, to insert:

Every report submitted to Congress in pursuance of this section or of any provision of law for a survey hereafter enacted, in addition to other information which the Congress has heretofore directed shall be given, shall contain a statement of special or local benefit which will accrue to localities affected by such improvement and a statement of general or national benefits, with recommendations as to what local cooperation should be required, if any, on account of such special or local benefit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 7, to insert:

Delaware River, from Trenton, N. J., to Easton, Pa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 15, to insert:

Woodbridge Creek, N. J.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 19, after the words "New Jersey," to strike out "including that section above the Washington Canal," so as to make the clause read:

Raritan River, N. J.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to insert:

Northwest River, Va.-N. C.: With a view to securing a channel 6½ feet deep at mean low water and 50 feet wide on the bottom on the bar at the mouth and over the shoal 2 miles above the mouth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 22, to insert:

Sterlings Creek, Accomack County, Va., and channel to and connecting said creek with Pocomoke Sound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

Channel leading from Oyster, Northampton County, Va., to Atlantic Ocean.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 2, to insert:

Channel connecting York River, Va., with Back Creek, Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 4, to insert:

Carters Creek, Lancaster County, Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 5, to insert:

Morattico Creek, Lancaster County, Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 9, after the word "from," to strike out "the foot of Kings Island" and insert "Drakies Cut," so as to make the clause read:

Savannah Harbor, Ga., from Drakies Cut to the sea, with a view to consolidating all projects relating to Savannah Harbor, widening, straightening, and deepening the same in such manner as to depth and width as may be deemed advisable to respond to commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 13, to insert:

St. Marks River, Fla.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 6, line 14, I move to strike out "Florida" and in lieu thereof to insert "Wakulla County, Fla."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I would like to know from the chairman of the committee the object of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand from the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that there are two St. Marks rivers in Florida, and it is proposed to insert the name of the county so as to identify the stream covered by the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There are two rivers by that name in Florida, Mr. President. I did not at first understand the object of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That was the purpose of it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The river is located partially, if not wholly, in Wakulla County. Certainly I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 14, to insert:

Charlotte Harbor Channel, South Boca Grande, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 15, to insert:

Narrows between Choctawatchee Bar and Santa Sound, Fla., including the swash channel from Camp Walton to Mary Esther.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, in line 16, strike out "Choctawatchee" and insert in lieu thereof "Choctawhatchee," and at the end of line 16, after the word "Santa," insert the word "Rosa," so as to read:

Narrows between Choctawhatchee Bar and Santa Rosa Sound, Fla., including the swash channel from Camp Walton to Mary Esther.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 18, to insert:

Charlotte Harbor to Punta Gorda, with a view to increasing the dimensions of the channel from Punta Gorda to the Gulf, including Boca Grande Channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 21, to insert:

St. Petersburg, Fla., and to deep water in Tampa Bay, with a view to increasing the dimensions of the channel and existing project from the docks to deep water in the bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 6, after the word "ocean," to insert "connecting St. Johns and Indian Rivers, Fla.," so as to make the clause read:

St. Johns River, Fla., from Jacksonville to the ocean, connecting St. Johns and Indian Rivers, Fla.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the committee amendment in this case be disagreed to, and then I desire to offer one in lieu thereof.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer a committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 6, page 7, after the word "ocean," insert the following:

And St. Johns River from Lake Harney to Indian River to create a navigable waterway from St. Johns River to Indian River.

So as to read:

St. Johns River, Fla., from Jacksonville to the ocean, and St. Johns River from Lake Harney to Indian River to create a navigable waterway from St. Johns River to Indian River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 8, to insert:

Apalachicola River, at Apalachicola, Fla., and Apalachicola Bay, with a view to modification or enlargement of existing projcet, including preliminary examination and survey along route B as described in Senate Document No. 316, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, to present loading berth in order to provide a channel from Apalachicola to this point, with a depth of, to wit, 18 feet.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer a committee amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, line 10, after the word "bay," insert the word "Florida," and strike out the remainder of the paragraph, so that it will read:

Apalachicola River, at Apalachicola, Fla., and Apalachicola Bay, Fla.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that if I thought the House was going to agree to all these propositions, I would want some explanation of them, but I am quite sure from the manner of the passage of the bill in the House that there will have to be some good reasons given for these items or they will never be agreed to by the House.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 17, to insert:

Mississippi River, La., with a view to securing an outlet to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico by the most practicable route for a permanent channel of a depth not exceeding 35 feet, and investigating this matter consideration shall be given to the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal, New Orleans.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The word "in" should be inserted in line 21, between the words "and" and "investigating." I move that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to have the Senator tell the Senate what this proposition will ultimately cost.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was asked for by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. The purpose of the amendment is to find out what the cost will be. These surveys, of course, do not commit the Government to any proposition. They are made for the purpose of getting the facts, and especially submitting estimates to make recommendations as to whether a project is feasible. I can not tell the Senator what the probable cost would be.

Mr. SMOOT. It is only another way of getting the head of the camel under the tent, and his whole body will be there in a very little while. The very fact that an investigation has been made of it, and a favorable report made by the engineers, which, of course, can be easily obtained, will furnish the ground for insisting at some future time that a direct appropriation should be made to carry out the project. It seems to me from reading the amendment that if this work is undertaken it will lead to the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars. When we come to think of making a channel 35 feet deep in order perhaps to open transportation for a little business there, that would never justify one one-hundredth part of the expenditure, I doubt the wisdom of expending the people's money even to the extent of making an investigation of such a project.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for a division.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Elkins	McCormick	Simmons
Beckham	France	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	Myers	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	New	Thomas
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Townsend
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dial	Keyes	Poindexter	Warren
Dillingham	Kirby	Reed	Watson
Edge	Lodge	Sheppard	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment: On page 7, line 21, after the word "feet," I move to strike out the words: "and investigating this matter consideration shall be given to the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal, New Orleans."

Mr. President, I desire to say that this is no time for the Government of the United States to be spending money in surveying a project that on its face would require the amount involved. Every rotten proposition for river and harbor improvement which we have had in the United States has been initiated in exactly the same way as here proposed. As I have said before, when a survey is ordered and the engineer undertakes it he feels that it is his duty, if possible, to report favorably upon it because Congress has acted in reference to the matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall yield in just a moment. It is true that occasionally a project is so bad that the engineers can not even recommend its undertaking. Now I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah is wholly wrong in the broad statement that he has just made with reference to the action of the engineers in connection with surveys. So far from it being true, as stated by the Senator from Utah, that the engineers feel under some constraint to report favorably on these projects, the record, I think, shows that most of them which have been investigated by the engineers have been reported upon unfavorably. So far as my knowledge goes—and I have been a member of the Committee on Commerce for a long time—I think a very large per cent of such projects have been reported upon unfavorably and a very small percentage have been reported upon favorably.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the Senator's recollection. I have not now the figures in reference to the matter, but I remember looking at them years ago when the river and harbor bill was under consideration, and the figures at that time did not support the Senator's statement.

I desire to say, in answer to the Senator from North Carolina, there is not any doubt that when the engineers are ordered by Congress to make a survey they have the idea that Congress desires the project in question examined with a view, if possible, of making a favorable report upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I merely wish to state, if the Senator will permit me, that that has not been the course of the engineers in recent years. Certainly after a great deal of propaganda in this country against river and harbor construction and work the engineers began to report pretty generally against the projects, and a project had to be very strongly fortified before it could get by the engineers.

Mr. SMOOT. A project does not have to be very strongly recommended by anybody to get by the committee if a Senator or Representative from the State in which the project is located is a member of the committee.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in relation to my amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say that I shall make no objection to the amendment of the Senator to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say that if we have any confidence whatever in the engineers, why should we in authorizing the survey direct the engineers that in "investigating this matter consideration shall be given to the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal, New Orleans"? Have those words been incorporated in the amendment with the idea that the Government is going to purchase the Industrial Canal at New Orleans? That canal may be a project entirely outside of the proposed improvement, and it seems to me the words referred to are merely an indication to the engineers that Congress would like to have them report in favor of the purchase of the Industrial Canal at New Orleans, if the proposed project is to be favorably reported.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, I desire to suggest that it is barely possible that in the investigation the engineers might find that the Industrial Canal could be utilized without going to the expense of further deepening the channel. Why should the matter not be considered in connection with the proposed survey and a full report be submitted? The report might show that it is not necessary to deepen the channel if the canal be taken into consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if he thinks there is an Army engineer who would make the survey, knowing that the Industrial Canal at New Orleans is there, without taking into consideration the matter as to whether or not the work could not be done at less expense if that canal were purchased?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But the Senator from Utah, by eliminating the language, would lead the engineer to believe that it was not to be considered at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all, Mr. President. The engineer could make a survey of the whole situation, but this is virtually requesting him to consider the purchase of the canal. I could tell the Senate of some of the other canals which have been purchased ultimately by the Government under just such provisions as this; and, in my opinion, they have been very expensive purchases on the part of the Government. So, it seems to me, if we are going to have a survey, and if the Senate is going to spend money for a survey for this purpose, we should let the engineer make a survey upon the whole project as it exists, and not with a view of binding, so far as the engineer can bind, the Government of the United States to take over any canal, no matter by whom it is owned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely want to say that anybody who knows anything about the methods of providing for river and harbor improvements knows that in providing for a survey there is no direction to the engineer as to how he shall report or how he shall act except according to whatever limits there may be within the survey itself. Such surveys are simply to furnish information to Congress. Then the duty and responsibility rest upon Congress in the future as to whether or not they will adopt any given project.

My knowledge with reference to the practice in late years, at any rate, corresponds with that of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], that more of these projects which are surveyed are reported upon adversely than are reported upon favorably. The engineers do not consider a provision of this kind as a direction to them to make a report, one way or the other, but simply a provision upon the part of Congress to ascertain the facts upon which it shall base its future action.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, considering the surveys ordered in the pending bill and in later years, I should hope that the engineers of the Government would report a greater percentage adversely than they formerly did when Congress appropriated money for expenditures on rivers in order to make them navigable and not on creeks and small streams.

Mr. President, it seems as if surveys are frequently ordered without a thought of the projects for which they provide ever being adopted; but perhaps it looks good to the people at home for the engineers of the Government to make a survey of a particular creek or stream within a congressional or senatorial district.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to say that I have been in Congress for 21 years; that I was a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives for six years, and the same methods and the same plans that are pursued in connection with surveys in this bill have been pursued ever since I have been here.

Mr. SMOOT. The same plans, yes; but not the same kind of projects.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; exactly the same kind of projects.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the truth of the statement just made by the chairman of the committee is obvious to anyone who has given any sort of attention to the river and harbor bills of recent years. They are based upon the same plan, and I suppose they always will be. One feature of the plan is very conspicuous in all of the Senate committee amendments; it is to interest ever section of the country in some particular project, and, upon the principle of you pat my back and I will pat yours, they all go through.

I realize, Mr. President, from the experiences of seven years the futility of opposing items in a river and harbor bill. They are always favorably considered; they tend to distribute the public money in different communities; they are based upon the theory of water competition, the advantages and beauties of which have been sung here in every key from the deepest bass to the highest treble since I have been here; and, of course, upon that theory I presume millions upon millions of dollars have been taken from the Treasury and have been expended with no resultant profit, and from which there never will be any resultant benefit, so long as our system of transportation remains as it is and as it has been.

We can expend all the money in the Treasury upon the improvement of rivers and creeks and tributaries; we may so improve some of them as to make them physically efficient for navigable purposes for the carrying of freight and passengers, but until the railroads are compelled to cooperate with waterway systems and with companies engaged in utilizing them for traffic purposes our expenditures will be vain and useless. Nobody who has given any sort of study to it denies that proposition; yet nobody attempts, even in legislation connected with river and harbor bills, to require the establishment or enforcement of any such system. Fifteen or sixteen railroads centering in St. Louis from either direction will interchange traffic and continue to do so without regard to a 35-foot channel, if such were the case, from St. Louis to the Gulf down the Mississippi River. Germany met the problem long ago and solved it by requiring intercommunication, cooperation, and distribution of freight according to bulk and need for speed, in consequence of which her river systems and her railroad systems both flourish and prosper. Nothing of the kind is attempted here; and nothing of the kind will be attempted here, I am afraid, so long as we vote indiscriminately to appropriate money from the National Treasury for every scheme which may receive the approval of the Board of Engineers.

During the 10-year period between 1906 and 1916 the commerce on the Mississippi River and its tributaries decreased from 4,412,000 to 1,621,000 tons, or 63 per cent. I understand it has been decreasing since. How many millions we have spent for improving the Mississippi River and its tributaries during that time I can only imagine. During the same period there was a decrease of 24 per cent in freight upon the canals and other inland waters. Just at present, when Government expenditures are abnormally large and everyone recognizes the necessity for economy, the House commendably decreased the appropriation for river and harbor purposes to the moderate sum of $12,000,000.

Of course I knew—everyone doubtless assumed—that the Senate committee would do just what has been done. I want to congratulate them upon their modesty, because I figured that they would add at least 100 per cent to the bill. They have contented themselves with about 66⅔ per cent. If I should regard it as a start, I should be very happy. I imagine, however, that it is merely a break in the continuity of that which is to come hereafter.

Of course we can not defeat this bill. As usual, we can only record our protests to it. I think the money might just as well be thrown into the Mississippi River as to be utilized for this purpose, as far as making it actually available—not potentially, but actually available—for the transportation of freight, cargoes, and passengers is concerned. I say that without any reflection upon the committee and without any reflection upon those who think otherwise. I merely state it as a fact, in my judgment, due to the dislocated character of our transportation system, and which, as far as can now be determined, will proceed indefinitely, Congress being content in all probability to do hereafter as it has done heretofore—to vote appropriations for the improvement of rivers, large and small, and then trust in God for the results.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, just a word.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], in speaking of the Mississippi River and the amounts of money which have been contributed by the Federal Government to its improvement, does not mention the fact that the people along the Mississippi River have shown by their own acts, and by the taxes they have from time to time imposed upon themselves, that they have not looked upon the improvement of that river as a simple graft, proposed merely to get money out of the Federal Treasury. They have taxed themselves, from the headwaters of the river to its mouth, in very large sums for its improvement and for the maintenance of the levees along its banks.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. The protection of the people from the inundations of the Mississippi is another proposition altogether. The Senator probably will remember that finally that subject has been divorced from the rivers and harbors bill. I have always advocated appropriations for that purpose, and I have voted for them, regardless of their amounts, when thought to be necessary; and I think it is the duty of the Government to protect the people on either side of the river wherever these inundations may affect them. I know they are cooperating. That is one proposition. The other proposition is, of course, entirely different, and has reference to other subjects, and they are in connection with these various schemes of so-called river and harbor improvements which extend all over the face of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is true, as the Senator says, that the matter of protection of overflowed lands has been separated from river and harbor improvement; but, as a physical fact, it is almost impossible to separate them. I take a different view from many of the Senators in reference to river and harbor improvements. My position is that if what the Senator from Colorado has said is true—and I have not the figures before me—that the commerce of the Mississippi River has fallen off materially during the past few years, yet the fact that the river has been maintained as a navigable waterway has been of itself instrumental in compelling the railroad companies to reduce the freight charges.

Let me take one illustration of that, not on the Mississippi, but in my own State.

Along some points on the Columbia River there has been somewhat of a falling off in the freight carried on the river; and yet the construction of two canals on the Columbia River has been instrumental in saving to the producers of the inland empire more money than would pay for the comparatively small expenditure of the Government a hundred times or more.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow another interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator know that but for the repressive action of the Interstate Commerce Commission freight rates would have been everywhere increased far beyond what they were when we entered the war, whereas since that time there has been practically no limit to freight rates anywhere?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, that is correct, measurably. Does the Senator mean repressive legislative action against the commission?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I mean repression by the commission, by its refusal to permit those raises which the railroads wanted to make in freight rates of all descriptions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I believe that the best regulator of freights is not the Interstate Commerce Commission, but it is the regulation provided by nature itself. For instance, you extend a railroad line along a nonnavigable waterway that may be made navigable, and the Interstate Commerce Commission undertakes to regulate and does regulate the rate to be charged by a railroad company along that nonnavigable stream. You make the river navigable, and it immediately regulates the rate itself, without any interference upon the part of the Interstate Commission or any other regulatory body.

But I was going to give an illustration. On the Columbia River, between Portland, Oreg., and the inland empire—and that covers a territory, if you please, of 250,000 square miles—before canals were built on the upper stretches of the river the railroad companies charged indiscriminately what they pleased. They charged all the traffic would bear. Just the moment that these two canals were put in, at the expense of the Government in cooperation with the State of Oregon, rates dropped. It did not require any regulation upon the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Nature regulated it, because competition by water was possible.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon further yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not true that coincident, or practically so, with the completion of the canal, the Great Northern Railroad built a competing or parallel line with the Oregon Short Line, and that that had much to do with the drop in railroad rates?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That had some effect, Mr. President; but the canal was completed before the rail competition went into effect. The Great Northern or Northern Pacific did subsequently build a line down on the north bank of the Columbia River which paralleled the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co.'s line on the south bank; but the canals were finished before that was completed and the canals themselves regulated the rates without any competition between the railroad lines.

Mr. President, I say, then, that in this day and generation, when there is a congestion of railroad transportation, and it is physically impossible to get from some quarters of the country to the markets the products of the country, we ought to stimulate and encourage the improvement of these rivers and harbors, no matter how small the traffic may be on them temporarily.

Take the situation in my own State. We have contributed fifty-fifty with the Government for nearly every improvement we have ever had. In other words, the people of Oregon have created port commissions at the city of Portland, at Nehalem, at Astoria, at Tillamook, at Newport, at Coos Bay, and other places, and they have levied taxes upon themselves equal to appropriations made by Congress. Small communities, if you please, meet the Government appropriation every time and have contributed dollar for dollar when they have asked the Government for appropriations. In other words, the people have shown, by levying upon themselves heavy rates of taxation, the confidence they have had in the development of their own country. It is hardly fair, from my viewpoint, that they should be asked to do it, because the traffic that goes down the Columbia River and from Oregon harbors is not only national in its importance but it is international. The wheat that goes down the Columbia River goes to Liverpool and our lumber goes to the markets of the world. The world is our market. So Oregon is contributing money for a benefit that comes to the Government of the United States by reason of the increased international commerce, if you please. So it is in other communities, and I think if we are going to apply that fifty-fifty rule to some States it ought to be general, and that is the policy of the Commerce Committee now.

> Every report submitted to Congress in pursuance of this section or of any provision of law for a survey hereafter enacted, in addition to other information which the Congress has heretofore directed shall be given, shall contain a statement of special or local benefit which will accrue to localities affected by such improvement and a statement of general or national benefits, with recommendations as to what local cooperation should be required, if any, on account of such special or local benefit.

In other words, if an improvement for which the Federal Government is asked to make an appropriation is international in its scope, if it does not affect the local community at all, if its benefits come to the United States, and it is international commerce, then the Government ought to contribute it all. On the other hand, if the improvement asked for is purely local, the community should make it; if it benefits the locality on a basis of 50 per cent while it benefits the National Government 50 per cent, there is no reason why they should not contribute equally.

That is the disposition of the Commerce Committee in the Senate toward the whole subject. It is to ascertain whether the improvement is local in its character, and if so to compel the locality to improve it. If it is not local in its character, it is to compel the National Government to pay its proportion; and that, I hope, will be done here in the times to come.

Why, take the great State of New York. It comes here every year asking for large appropriations, and yet the State of New York has taxed itself more than the Government ever contributed to any improvement of the harbors of New York. It is a narrow policy, this effort to belittle river and harbor work, as has been done here frequently. There is some political capital, possibly, to come from it; but when you take a broad, national view of it, it is a question in which the whole country is interested; it is a question in which the world is interested; and that is particularly true while these labor and transportation troubles exist which make it impossible to get the products of the farmer and the products of the factory to the markets of the world.

I hope no captious objection will be made to these surveys. These little ports have been growing all the time. Our trade and commerce has been changing. Why not ascertain, at a very small expenditure, whether or not any of these proposed surveys are in a neighborhood where there has been an increase in the commerce?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a moment of your time.

No man is more sensible of the need for the improvement of the harbors of the country than myself; but the trouble is, and has been, that we can not secure needed appropriations for harbor improvements without tacking onto every bill for that purpose numerous appropriations for so-called improvements which, when accomplished, are of no material benefit to anyone.

I am aware of the law in Oregon, and it is a most commendable one, under which the community interested in harbor improvements—my recollection is that it is a harbor proposition—the Senator will correct me if I am mistaken—may issue bonds, upon the security of their property, for the payment of principal and interest to improve their harbor facilities, which, of course, is a great benefit not only to the immediate community concerned but to the State and to the Nation.

I think it would be well if every coastal State in the Union would follow suit and imitate this example, as some of them have done, notably the neighboring State of Washington, and by that means intelligently direct national appropriations for aiding this local enterprising spirit, which, after all, is the great thing in American community life.

I do not understand why Senators should balk at our habit of opposing bills containing appropriations of the most commendable nature and needed for the development of the commercial facilities of the country when to obtain them it becomes necessary to vote money for other enterprises, some of which are hoary with age, and many of which can not possibly, whatever the improvement, result in any substantial benefit either locally or generally.

I want to assure the Senator from Oregon that no man is more favorably inclined nor more anxious to encourage such developments as he has spoken of than myself, though I must dissent, toto cælo, from the conclusion that the improvement of rivers and harbors tends to reduce railway rates in the country. I know it is an old argument; I know it is one which is plausible; but the fundamental fact regulating railroad rates is competition, or control, or both. When I say competition I do not mean potential competition, but actual competition. Ever since I have lived in Colorado, and that is nearly half a century, we have suffered from discrimination in railroad rates, based entirely upon the theory of potential competition of sea rates. San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles, all those places, have enjoyed railway rates very much more favorable than and immensely different from those which have been given to Salt Lake, Spokane, Denver, and other inland places, upon the contention that it is the only way by which they can meet and survive so-called potential competition. That proposition has prevailed, notwithstanding the fact that nearly all the lines of ocean traffic are either under or are controlled by the great continental lines of railway. I am not able to accept it. Of course, I can understand how the competition or the threat of competition of railways, united with the improvement of some great navigable river—and the Columbia River is essentially, really, actually a navigable river—might affect rates locally; but as to affecting them generally, such is not the case, as those who suffer in my section of the country have reason to know from the experiences of the last 45 years.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator will remember that in the rate cases, where a railroad was charging more than it ought to charge for carrying the traffic between certain points where there might be competition by river, private initiative then went to work and put on a line of steamers to compete with the railroad company in order to reduce the freight, and the railroad company immediately reduced its rate to a point where its competitor could not live; and then it immediately raised the rate. But that situation was cured, the Senator will remember, by an amendment to the interstate-commerce act, so that they could not change these rates without having authority to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I concede that locally, we will say from the head of navigation of the Columbia River to the ocean, on the Sacramento River, on the lower reaches of the Mississippi River, and as to other actually navigable streams, such conditions may obtain. It is also true that legislation was necessary to prevent the absorption by the roads of local lines of water traffic. It seems to me, if I am correctly informed, it does not sensibly encourage the operation of competitive lines of river traffic.

I want to emphasize, while I am on my feet, the fact that this idea of potential competition, which I do not believe was ever anything more than remotely potential, has been used not only against the section which I in part represent upon this floor but that two or three months ago, when the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] offered an amendment to the railroad bill to abolish what is known as the long-and-short-haul clause, which is necessary to our commercial salvation, it was the Senators from States enjoying both this actual and potential competition whose votes defeated the Poindexter amendment. We hoped for some relief there, but were disappointed. Those who are so fortunate as to live in those sections of the country where the cry of potential competition can be effectually utilized for the reduction of rates, and for consequent benefit to these localities, seem to feel that the relief which we want, and which we must eventually have, might interfere with their advantageous privilege and to the detriment of their constituents. But it is a crying shame and outrage, Mr. President, that the great Rocky Mountain region, one of the greatest on the continent, not having the benefit even of so-called potential competition, can not obtain relief from those conditions because of the votes of those who are unduly favored. It costs a great deal more to send freight from Denver to Galveston, down grade all the way, than it does to haul freight from Galveston to Denver, up grade all the way, a discrimination which is justified upon the theory of potential ocean competition. So that we get no benefit from it in any way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to take any time to discuss the matter. We can discuss it in connection with the $20,000,000 item. I would like to get through as many unobjected amendments as we can before 2 o'clock. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the amendment now before the Senate, as I understand it, is for a survey of the Mississippi River. The point objected to is that found in lines 21, 22, and 23, where, in connection with this investigation, it reads:

And in investigating this matter consideration shall be given to the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal, New Orleans.

This provision was inserted in the bill at the instance of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who, I am sure, did not know that the matter was coming up to-day. He is away from the Senate on official business. None of us knew the bill was coming up to-day. It seems to me this is a very important matter, and the Senator from Utah should not insist on his amendment. It does not direct the engineers' office to accept this canal; it only asks, in considering the survey for this new project, that the canal shall be taken into consideration.

Here is the situation: We have an Industrial Canal at New Orleans which it is supposed will operate when it is finished from the Mississippi River to Lake Pontchartrain. The object is to move vessels from the Mississippi River through the canal into Lake Pontchartrain, into Lake Borgne, and out into the Gulf. If a project such as that contemplated should be adopted, it would save fully half the distance for vessels going from New Orleans through the Mississippi River into the Gulf. Not only would it save much time by shortening the distance, but it would save vessels which now come into New Orleans through the mouth of the Mississippi and up the Mississippi in times of high water from those handicaps which necessarily must be encountered in coming in that way under those circumstances. I can not understand why in making this survey the Senate should withhold from the engineers' office the mere consideration of the utilization of the canal going through this way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that in my judgment we would not withhold it; but even with this language stricken out, the engineers would report upon the proposition just the same.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask if the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Utah would not be willing, in striking out the language he proposed to be stricken out, to insert in line 19, after the words "Gulf of Mexico," the words "through Lake Pontchartrain"?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator wants to have the amendment go over until the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] can be present, I have no objection whatever; but I wish to say to the Senator now that I fully agree with the statement just made by the Senator from Washington.

The Senator from Mississippi has been in Congress long enough, I believe, to learn the fact that wherever there is a survey made and where there is any direction on the part of Congress to investigate the taking over of a canal, or some particular direction as to how a project is to be ultimately constructed, if the report is favorable, the original survey authorization is considered in connection with the appropriation asked for and it is pointed to as proof that it was understood at the time the survey was made that the canal should be a part of the project and therefore the Government should buy the canal.

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly the adoption of this provision merely for a survey would not direct Congress in the future to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it does not direct it, and I do not want any action taken that could be so construed. Not only that, but it does not prevent the engineers from reporting upon this very canal as the best and most feasible project, if this project is to be undertaken. Why not leave the engineers entirely free to report upon the project and as to the best plan, in their judgment, it could be constructed?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator not accept my suggestion that after the words "Gulf of Mexico" there be inserted the words "through Lake Pontchartrain"?

Mr. SMOOT. That would be about the same thing.

Mr. HARRISON. Would not the Senator accept this suggestion, then, instead of using the word "shall," to use the word "may"?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary. I think the words are put in the amendment for the very purpose of some time in the future calling the attention of Congress to the fact that when this particular survey was ordered it was with the idea of utilizing the canal.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator should not say that. This is merely a specification of the kind of a survey that is to be made, and if you do not put in that it is to be through Lake Borgne or through the canal, or designate through Lake Pontchartrain, you have no specification, you have not particularized where you want the survey made.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment reads:

Mississippi River, Louisiana, with a view to securing an outlet to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico by the most practicable route for a permanent channel of a depth not exceeding 35 feet.

What more do you want than that? That is a direction for a survey.

Mr. HARRISON. Lake Pontchartrain is not a part of the Mississippi River; it is separate and distinct from the Mississippi River, and what the Senator from Louisiana tried to do by his amendment is to save some time for the vessels going from the port of New Orleans, because in the opinion of the navigator it is a practicable route. What the Senator has done here is to particularize where he wants the survey made. It does not bind Congress in the slightest to live up to that proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will read the language again, he will see that it says—

With a view to securing an outlet to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico by the most practicable route for a permanent channel of a depth not exceeding 35 feet.

That is, Mr. President, they are to secure an outlet to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico—that is, between the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico. It means a channel connecting the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico. That can be at any point, and does not have to be through the Industrial Canal at New Orleans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit me just a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to give notice that immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow I shall ask unanimous consent to proceed with the further consideration of the river and harbor bill.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senate having decided upon the question of voluntary training and adopted some amendments to establish a system of voluntary training, it is now incumbent upon me to offer a few amendments making other provisions of the bill conform to the amendments that have already been adopted in that respect. The amendments are largely those of verbiage and do not disturb the general structure of the bill. If it is agreeable, I will offer them now and that matter will then have been disposed of.

On page 4 of the bill, line 9, at the end of the line, I move to strike out the words "to further military training who have completed their prescribed period of initial training, and all other persons liable," and in line 12, after the word "war," to strike out the words "who are not liable to training under the provisions of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "except the recruits," so that the paragraph will read:

The reservists shall include all persons liable to military service in time of war except the recruits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move, in line 14, page 4, after the word "undergoing," that the word "voluntary" be inserted, so that the paragraph will read:

The recruits shall include all persons undergoing voluntary training in the training forces who have not completed their prescribed periods of initial training therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move, on page 5, line 24, to strike out at the end of the line the words "called out" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enlisting," and on page 6, line 1, to strike out the words "called out" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enlisting," so as to read:

The training forces shall consist of such commissioned officers, enlisted men, and civilians of the permanent personnel, and such reserve officers and reservists as may consent to serve for limited periods under regulations to be established by the President as shall be required to train and provide for the recruits enlisting annually for military training, and, together with the recruits so enlisting, shall be organized into such training units as the President may direct in accordance with the requirements of the service.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 7, in line 3, after the word "act," I move to strike out the words "who, having completed their prescribed initial training with the training forces, are liable to military service in time of war in" and insert in lieu thereof the words "who may voluntarily enlist in," so that the section will read:

SEC. 8. The organized reserves: The organized reserves shall consist of such commissioned officers, enlisted men, and civilians of the permanent personnel and such reserve officers as shall be assigned thereto under regulations to be prescribed by the President, and of all reservists, except as otherwise provided for in this act, who may voluntarily enlist in the organized reserves in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 7, line 15, I move to strike out the words "enrolled or assigned reservists," so as to read:

Companies, batteries, troops, battalions, squadrons, regiments, trains, and other units shall consist of such officers, enlisted men, or reservists, and civilians as the President may direct, subject to the provisions of this act, and in accordance with the requirements of the service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 7, line 22, before the word "corps," I move to strike out the words "not less than 12," so as to read:

For purposes of administration, training, and tactical control the territory of the United States, excluding the insular possessions and Alaska, shall be divided on a basis of military population into corps areas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 9, lines 14 and 15, I move to strike out the words "assigned to the organized reserves or," and in line 15, after the word "enlisted," I move to insert the words "in the organized reserves or," so that section 11 will read:

The unorganized reserves shall consist of all reservists, except as otherwise provided for in this act, who are not enlisted in the organized reserves or in the National Guard of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 58, line 10, I move to strike out the word "whether," and on the same page, in line 10, after the word "forces," I move to strike out the words "or in the National Guard of the United States," so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That persons duly qualified for and who were recommended before their discharge from the aforesaid service, may be appointed in a higher grade. Under regulations to be prescribed by the President, any person who honorably served in the United States Army, including the National Guard while in the service of the United States, or the National Army, between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, as an enlisted man, and any person who has completed the training provided for in the training forces, and any other person specially qualified for any combatant or technical branch of the service may be commissioned as a reserve officer—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 66, line 7, I move to strike out the words "liable to" and insert the words "enlisting for," so the sentence will read:

To such extent as may be consistent with effective training and economical administration and subject to regulations prescribed by the President, persons enlisting for training shall be permitted to elect such training in either of two training periods.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 69, line 4, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which was added the other day be reconsidered for this purpose. The amendment added the other day was due to a misprint, and line 4 was made to read "persons eligible for training under the provisions of this act," and so forth, the words "eligible for" having been substituted for the words "liable to." I would like to have that amendment reconsidered in order that I may move that the words "eligible for" be stricken out and substitute in lieu thereof the words "enlisting for."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). Without objection, it will be reconsidered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to strike out the words "eligible for" and to insert in lieu the words "enlisting for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 69, in line 10, after the word "regulation," I move to strike out the words "and they may be inducted into the service or not for this purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 70, in line 8, will be found the amendment agreed to by the Senate in the earlier discussion of the bill, before the training amendments were offered, and this phrase is used:

That in case any person called for the training shall have dependents—

And so forth.

I ask unanimous consent to have that amendment reconsidered in order that we may change the word "called" to "enlisting."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be reconsidered.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask in that particular case whether it would apply before they were inducted into the service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The dependency feature?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. For instance, they might be accepted for enlistment, and the time would then begin to run, perhaps; and I was wondering whether that should be "enlisted" instead of "inducted" into the service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My idea is that the enlistment is the induction. It is the same thing. When a man enlists he is thereby inducted.

Mr. LENROOT. I think so; but that question was raised yesterday, as the Senator may remember, and at the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] we put in the words "inducted" instead of "enlisted."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought that discussion had to do with the word "application."

Mr. LENROOT. Perhaps the Senator is right. Is the Senator satisfied with it as it is?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am, though the word "inducted" may be inserted if the Senator desires.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; it is not necessary, if the Senator is satisfied.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend the amendment so as to read:

That in case any person enlisting for the training shall have dependents—

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator leaves that I would like to ask him a question. The section provides:

That in case any person enlisting for the training shall have dependents within the meaning of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," there shall be paid to such dependents, during the period of training, the amount provided by said law, without requiring any allotment from the recruit.

If these men voluntarily enlist for the training does the Senator think we ought to pay their dependents?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the poor boy ought to have a chance, and if any member of his immediate family is in whole or in part dependent upon him, I think it only fair that that should not prevent him from having the training, which would be the case if we did not offer for that very short period of four months to conform to the dependency features of the selective draft law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator recall just what would be paid to dependents under this act? I think it is dependent upon the number of members of the family.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it is $15 that is allowed to the wife or mother.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was so much for the wife or mother, and something in addition for each child. I think the maximum was perhaps $30.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the maximum was $52, but I do not remember, and I am therefore afraid to say.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator, of course, will remember that boys between the ages of 18 and 21 ordinarily do not have dependents, and they would be very few in number.

Mr. McKELLAR. There were a great many dependents provided for under the previous act. This is reenacting the war legislation, and it seems to me it is going a long ways when we apply this war-time legislation to cases of voluntary enlistment for four months' training.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on page 85, line 15, I move to strike out the words "training or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 87, line 22, after the word "States," in the caption of section 72, I move to insert the words "and the organized reserves." That, Mr. President, is a corrective amendment that really has nothing to do with the volunteer training, but the caption of that section was incomplete owing to the omission of that phrase, which was an error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I propose a similar amendment on page 88, line 1, after the word "authority," to insert the words "and the organized reserves."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With the adoption of those amendments I think I am safe in saying that the entire bill has been transformed from one involving universal military training to one involving only volunteer military training.

Mr. LENROOT. I now move to strike out section 37 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 44, after line 11, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. 37. The construction service: There is hereby established a construction service which, under regulations to be established by the President and in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be charged with the construction, maintenance, and repair of all buildings, structures (other than fortifications), and utilities, and the preparation of plans therefor in accordance with the requirements of the several arms, corps, and services of the Army of the United States, and with the operation of such utilities as the President may direct, and with the acquirement of real estate and the issuance of licenses in connection with military reservations under the jurisdiction of the War Department.

The permanent personnel of the construction service shall consist of 1 chief of construction, with the rank of brigadier general, and 200 officers, in grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, and 6,000 enlisted men, in their appropriate grades, all of whom shall be detailed or assigned from the permanent personnel under the provisions of this act. The reserve personnel of the construction service shall consist of all reserve officers and reservists assigned thereto as provided for in this act.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Dillingham	Kendrick	Page
Borah	Edge	Kenyon	Phipps
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Sheppard
Calder	Gerry	Kirby	Smith, Ariz.
Capper	Glass	Lenroot	Smoot
Chamberlain	Hale	Lodge	Thomas
Colt	Harris	McKellar	Townsend
Culberson	Harrison	McNary	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	New	Wadsworth
Dial	Kellogg	Nugent	Wolcott

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are absent on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Forty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MOSES and Mr. STERLING answered to their names when called. Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. NELSON, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. WATSON, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. FRANCE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the pending amendment seeks to strike out section 37, which provides for a separate construction service.

It seems to me that the committee, in the recommendation that it has made in this section, has gone in exactly the opposite direction to the one in which the Congress should be going if it would seek to secure economy in the expenditures of the Government. Instead of creating new departments, instead of creating new overheads, there ought to be greater consolidation into departments which are now existing.

If this amendment is adopted, I shall later offer other amendments that will place this construction work in the hands of the engineers, where it ought to be; and from the standpoint of direct expense alone, if this amendment is adopted, it is estimated that it will save the Government $3,000,000 a year. But that is only a small part of the expense that will be saved to the Government if this amendment is adopted, because, in my judgment, the Engineer Department will do this work vastly cheaper than the proposed separate construction department would be able to do it; and I base that statement upon what has transpired during the war.

The construction department of the Quartermaster's Corps which it is now proposed to put into an independent department did all of the construction work in this country during the war. The Engineer Corps did the construction work in France. While there have been many, many criticisms—indeed, little short of scandal—in connection with the construction work done in this country, so far as expense is concerned, I have not heard nor do I think anyone has heard any criticism of the work done by the Engineer Department in France, and that was due very largely to the different policies that were pursued.

This construction division that it is now proposed to make a wholly separate division, now under the head of Gen. Marshall—and I shall not cast any reflections upon him, but I think it was a very great mistake of judgment upon the part of the chief of that department—this department—when the war began, and we had to expend hundreds of millions of dollars in the construction of new cantonments and structures of various descriptions, followed the cost-plus system, by which, in the beginning of the war and to a lesser extent throughout the entire war, contracts were given to contractors agreeing that the Government would pay them as profits a certain percentage, sometimes as high as 10, upon the total cost of the work, and of course the inevitable result was that if a contractor was not very patriotic it was to his interest and his benefit, instead of securing as low costs as possible to the Government, to make them mount as high as possible. In other words, the more money he could expend upon the job the greater his profits would be.

That became so notorious, as Senators will remember, that later on Congress began attaching riders to these various bills appropriating money to carry on the war prohibiting cost-plus contracts. A committee of the other House has been investigating this subject of cost-plus contracts under this very division, and we noticed in the newspapers this morning that a report was made yesterday wherein it is recommended that the facts be turned over to the Department of Justice, because that committee believes that out of an expenditure of a little over $200,000,000 for cantonments, and so forth, there was $78,000,000 that could not possibly be defended, and the most of which ought to be recovered from the contractors; and I am sorry to say that Gen. Marshall, the head of the construction division, who will be the head, I take it, of this construction division if it is made a separate department, as provided in the bill—Gen. Marshall, as I understand, still defends this cost-plus contract system. He testified before a subcommittee of the other House last July, and I want to quote very briefly from his testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. But, General, would there be anything in such a contract other than a man's own sense of honor that would induce him to be on guard to see that the material was not wasted, and that the workmen were not loafing on the job?

Gen. MARSHALL. Well, it would be that, and his reputation, and his hope of future work. Certainly if he——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). There would not be anything in the contract, however, from a personal pecuniary standpoint that would be an incentive for him to be on guard?

Gen. MARSHALL. Why, I would say from that point of view, probably not. But he had supervision, and if wastefulness existed other than might be expected on work of that character, he was sure to be called, and he could not get called more than so often without injuring his reputation to the extent of being denied further work, and at the time they were doing that work I believe that it was the honest endeavor of these men, even some of those who failed, it was the honest endeavor to do the best and to put into the work the best that they could put into it.

Mr. President, right there let me pause and say that appalling as the extravagance and the waste has been in this war, if that policy defended by Gen. Marshall had been pursued in every department of this Government the costs of this war would have been much greater than they are, because what is the implication from that testimony? That a contractor in any department of the Government can be trusted to fix his own profits and his own costs, because he would not dare to fix them too high, for fear that he would not get another contract if he did. Why, Mr. President, there were profits enough in some of these contracts to make the contractor independent for life. He never would need to receive another contract.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator holds the construction division responsible for the adoption of that plan?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. FRANCE. I think the Senator is misinformed.

Mr. LENROOT. Whether they originated it or not, I do not know; but they did adopt it, against the protest of Gen. Goethals, as the testimony shows.

Mr. FRANCE. They adopted it for the reason that the system was recommended by the Council of National Defense, was approved by the Secretary of War, and was adopted by the construction division as a result of that suggestion by the Council of National Defense and because of its approval by the Secretary of War.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, if it were true that it was adopted under protest by the construction division, if the head of the construction division did not believe that it was a policy that ought to be adopted, then I frankly concede that the head of the construction division should not be subject to any criticism, because it was beyond his control; but it so happens that the testimony that I am now reading is a defense by the head of the construction division of that very cost-plus system. Not only that, but I hold in my hand extracts from a speech made by Gen. Marshall, the chief of this division, at the annual meeting of the Society of Civil Engineers on January 15, 1919, wherein, as I shall show, he not only defends this cost-plus system which had been prohibited by Congress and which had resulted in so much waste and extravagance, but he suggests that it is not the system that should be criticized, but it is Congress that should be educated so that they would no longer prohibit it.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that I am heartily opposed to the cost-plus system.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sure the Senator is.

Mr. FRANCE. I think it is a vicious and demoralizing system.

Mr. LENROOT. I was very sure that would be the Senator's position.

Mr. FRANCE. I would hold to strict account the gentlemen who originated it, however, not the officers who carried it out under orders.

Mr. LENROOT. I quite agree with the Senator. Gen. Marshall said on this occasion:

> Let me advert to the form of contract which the construction division has used. Popularly it is almost universally known as a "cost-plus contract," but, strictly speaking, this term is not exact. The contract which has been used from the beginning, with slight modifications in nonessential details, has been one in which the contractor was reimbursed his actual expenditures with a fee to him graduated on a sliding scale. The percentage he receives gets lower as the cost increases, and a maximum figure is set which his fee can in no case exceed, no matter what the cost of the work may be. Many reasons dictated the adoption of this form of contract, which, to all who understand the facts, has proved its usefulness and its value beyond the peradventure of a doubt.
> Let me not be misunderstood. The sole justification for the cost-plus contract as used during the war is not the uncertain and unstable condition brought about by the war, for the cost-plus contract, properly administered, is the proper, conservative, and just method of doing contracting work—just alike to the owner, the engineer, and the contractor. In this connection I want to draw the attention of this audience to the trend of Congress in this matter as indicated in two provisions of law.

Then he goes on and gives the prohibitions made by Congress—one on June 30, 1919, and the other a little later—prohibiting these cost-plus contracts in the future, and then Gen. Marshall says:

> I can not believe that this tendency of Congress has been brought about through any effort by this society, or any similar to it. I am convinced that the best thoughts are quite to the contrary. I do believe that these laws and similar talk in Congress are brought about by the lack of effort on the part of this society and similar ones.
> Education, of course, is the only remedy worthy the name for ignorance or for mistaken apprehension of facts. Through ignorance and through mistaken apprehension of the facts of the case the emergency contract outlined above has been the subject of bitter attacks from persons in and out of the Government service and from quarters high and low.

And that is the defense by Gen. Marshall of this cost-plus contract, in the face of the testimony which I wish Senators might read of the result of this cost-plus system. I was reading only this morning some testimony before that committee in regard to a hospital where the plumbers were putting in a heating apparatus, and the soldiers were freezing, and the physicians and nurses were compelled to wear heavy overcoats in order to protect themselves from the cold. The contractor under the cost-plus system had plumbers there who were gambling and playing craps during working hours, while the patients were suffering and perhaps dying from cold.

There was other testimony with reference to the cantonment at Fort Sheridan, where the testimony showed that finished lumber, valuable lumber, was carted away and burned; where roofing paper, the rolls of which had never been cut open, was carted away and dumped into the river. Oh, Mr. President, it is a sordid history, the history of the cost-plus contract system, and Congress did a good job when it prohibited it; and that is one reason, aside from any natural saving in overhead, why there ought not to be a separate construction division for the performance of this work, when there is a division in the Army where this work actually belongs, the Engineer Corps. When Congress has appropriated money to be expended under the direction of the Board of Engineers there has been no scandal or criticism concerning the expenditure of that money by the Corps of Engineers. They have expended more than a billion dollars in this country. As I have stated, they had charge of the construction work in France. The Engineer Corps in France constructed a total of 17,120 barracks, which, if placed end to end, would cover a distance of 324 miles. They constructed space for 280,000 hospital beds. Docks aggregating in length 4,100 feet were built and equipped. One thousand and thirty-five miles of standard-gauge railroad was built by this division. Storage space covering more than 500 acres was constructed by the engineers in France. So I might go on at great length detailing the work done by the engineers in all of the construction work which the Army had to do over in France.

It is a creditable record, Mr. President, and the Engineer Corps has done such splendid work in France, and in the doing of all our river and harbor work has had the greatest care for Government expenditures, and to the knowledge of every Senator they have repeatedly rejected bids for river and harbor work where they deemed the price excessive, and they have come before Congress and repeatedly asked for authority to do the work themselves, not under contract, believing it could be done cheaper than by contract. They have gone along with those two systems side by side, one checking the other; but through it all, with all the money that has been expended, I have yet to hear any criticism of any waste or extravagance in the expenditure of the money appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors under the jurisdiction of the Corps of Engineers.

So, Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment will mean an outright saving to the Government of $3,000,000 per year. It will bring about a consolidation in the direction that we ought to move with reference to all of the divisions and departments of our Government. Instead of this alone being under the Board of Engineers, we ought to have one department of this Government, in my judgment, which would do all original and new construction work, and we could save immense amounts of money if we had.

But more than that, by far more than that, with the experience we have had with the engineers, we are assured that if they shall have the expenditure of appropriations made by Congress for new and original construction in the Army, the money will be economically expended. We have no such assurance whatever if a new and separate construction division is created, as is proposed by the bill.

I do not reflect upon Gen. Marshall's integrity; of course not. I have no doubt that Gen. Marshall thought he was doing the best possible for the Government. But, Mr. President, it is too expensive to the country to have such mistakes of judgment, especially when we can put this work into the hands of a department that has had experience, and which will not make such mistakes of judgment, costing the Government millions upon millions of dollars.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] offered his amendment, nor have I had the good fortune to hear all he has had to say in regard to it. But, Mr. President, I have formed altogether a different impression as to the work of the Construction Division from that formed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

From the information I have had I concluded that the Board of Army Engineers did not have the men, in the first place, fitted for this work, the work that was required to be done after we came into the war, nor did they have the equipment, and that it was necessary to organize this Construction Division separate and apart from the Army engineers for the purpose of carrying on this great work.

I further believe, Mr. President, that with the experience the country has had in the work of the Construction Division we can not now afford to dispense with that division; that it will be in the interest of both economy and efficiency if that division is still retained as a division separate from the Board of Army Engineers.

I think, Mr. President, there is disposition upon the part of the Board of Army Engineers to arrogate to itself as much of power as possible, and now that the war is over it would bring within its jurisdiction all work of the kind performed by the Construction Division. I do not believe this should be. I believe it will be in the interest of the Government to retain this separate Construction Division, made up largely of skilled civil engineers, who will carry on all the work of construction needed by the Army, aside, of course, from the construction of military roads, bridges, and fortifications, this being strictly military work, for which the Army Engineers' organization is fitted.

A statement has been furnished me, Mr. President, and I am going to refer to this statement and read from it freely. I believe it is well founded. It is furnished by a gentleman who has been in the Construction Division, a man whom I know very well and whom I regard as a most competent and able civil engineer. First, as to the history of the work of this Construction Division he says:

Early in May, 1917, the War Department was confronted with the task of providing suitable training camps for the draft army and the National Guard. The question of policy was referred to the Council of National Defense, which decided, after due consideration, that neither the Quartermaster Corps nor the Corps of Engineers nor any other bureau of the War Department was equipped to handle such a stupendous building task in the short space of time available. Hence the Cantonment Division was organized, starting with three Regular Army officers and gradually calling to their aid hundreds of prominent engineers, contractors, lawyers, business men, etc., some of whom were commissioned as volunteer officers. Ultimately this organization attained a personnel of about 1,500 officers (98 per cent volunteer) and about 10,000 civilians, who directed and supervised the operations of some 450,000 men employed simultaneously on about 450 projects scattered throughout the country.

The Cantonment Division built the 32 training camps (16 tent camps for the National Guard and 16 barrack camps, or cantonments, for the National Army), having a total capacity for about 650,000 troops, and accomplished this task in about 90 days. The Secretary of War has stated that next to the transportation of troops across the ocean this was the greatest feat accomplished during the war. The Assistant Secretary of War and others have declared this work to be the greatest building exploit in all history.

Soon after the completion of the camps it became evident that the War Department would require an extensive program of construction, involving port terminals, interior storage depots, hospitals, munition plants, proving grounds, plants for the manufacture of acids, gases, shells, etc. Work on several of these projects had already been started under the jurisdiction of the different services which were to operate them, but it soon became evident that in order to carry on this work efficiently and expeditiously it would be necessary to combine it under one head, and hence it was all turned over to the Cantonment Division, the name of which was changed to the Construction Division of the Army. This organization was placed under the Chief of Staff as a temporary independent service, and this is its present status.

The bill, as I understand it, continues the construction division with its present status as such.

During the duration of the war the construction division prepared the plans and carried on the construction of over 500 independent projects at various points throughout this country, Panama, the Hawaiian Islands, and the Philippines at an expenditure of approximately $1,200,000,000. The magnitude of this work can be understood when it is compared with the construction of the Panama Canal, which was located at one point and required a period of 10 years for its construction, at a cost of $375,000,000.

Since the signing of the armistice the construction division has done notable work in the salvaging of a large number of camps and other temporary projects and in the satisfactory settlement of over 20,000 incomplete contracts.

And here is an account of the attempts made by the Board of Army Engineers to take over the division.

There have been several distinct attempts in the last four years to put the work of the construction division under the Corps of Engineers. Each of these attempts seem to have been made with a view to the centralization of additional jurisdiction and authorty in the Corps of Engineers. After due consideration of the facts of each case, and with especial reference to the essential differences between the combative or military character of work performed by the Engineer Corps and the noncombative or civilian character of work handled by the construction division, the Secretary of War and Chief of Staff in each instance continued the construction division in the performance of its logical duties.

Mr. President, that is what it would amount to, additional jurisdiction and authority to anything the Corps of Army Engineers has ever yet had. Their business has been in the main the construction of roads and bridges for Army purposes, and the construction of fortifications; and, of course, that special work which they always do on rivers and harbors. I do not know for how long, but for many years, anyhow, all river and harbor projects and improvements have been referred to the Board of Army Engineers.

Reference was made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to what was done in France. Granted there was great work done there, and it may have been done under the general supervision of the Army engineers; but for the most part it was done by civilians or by men specially trained, men who were commissioned from civil life, more largely done under their supervision, I suppose, than under the supervision of those who had been long with the Board of Army Engineers.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator admit that the head of the department, whatever it may be, has the responsibility for the policy, in so far as he has discretion?

Mr. STERLING. I grant that that is perhaps true, but there was the reliance, of course, on the civilian engineers doing the work, the very kind of engineers that occupy places in the construction division.

I read further:

After due consideration of the facts of each case and with especial reference to the essential differences between the combative or military character of the work performed by the Engineer Corps and the noncombatant or civilian character of work handled by the Construction Division, the Secretary of War and Chief of Staff in each instance continued the construction division in the performance of its logical duties.

Reference has been made to the cost-plus contracts as though the construction division was responsible for contracts of this character, but the construction division did not have the initiative in that regard. That plan had been agreed upon by higher authorities, was sanctioned by the Secretary of War, if not initiated by him, and by the Chief of Staff, and the construction division was simply following out in that kind of a contract the plan that had already been determined upon by the higher authorities.

I read further:

The Engineer Corps has never in the history of this country, nor of the Army, had anything to do with construction work for the Army, nor with the construction or operation of utilities.

I will say perhaps that statement ought to be modified by examples——

Mr. NELSON. Whoever wrote that wrote what was not true.

Mr. STERLING. I grant that it is a pretty broad statement, but I think the Senator from Minnesota will agree with me that this in the main is true. They have accomplished this great work independently of the Corps of Army Engineers. They have demonstrated their fitness to continue as a separate organization, and that by reason of their experience it will mean yet greater economy and efficiency.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. By that great work does the Senator mean the cantonments of this country?

Mr. STERLING. Largely.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator justify it and say that was a creditable piece of work, in view of everything that has occurred?

Mr. STERLING. I think in view of everything it was a most creditable piece of work, when we take into consideration the 90 days' time within which they had to do that immense work, what it was, and the fact that 650,000 men within 90 days were accommodated in these camps and cantonments.

I read further:

The work of the Engineer Corps is distinctly military in its character and has to do with construction work essential for the mobilization and handling of military organizations under military conditions. This is a class of work for which civilians without military training and experience are totally unfitted. On the other hand, the engineer officer, trained for military operations, is equally unfitted to handle construction work on a large scale under commercial conditions.

There, I think, the gentleman who furnishes me this statement strikes a very important point.

The Engineer Corps is not fitted, by reason of training or experience of its men, up to date, to deal with these great projects and improvements under commercial conditions as are the civil engineers—the men coming from civil life. The civil engineer knows more about labor conditions, cost of material, trade conditions, and the making of contracts for construction work than does the Army Engineer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. REED. Did the construction corps of which the Senator is speaking advise the construction or building of these habitations that we have over in front of the Capitol Grounds—that class of work that was called the housing problem—did they build those?

Mr. STERLING. I am not sure, I will say to the Senator, whether it came directly under the Construction Division or not.

Mr. REED. I am not limiting my question to those few buildings, but there was a large project carried on for the housing of employees both of the Government and the concerns engaged in producing war supplies. That consisted in the building of a large number of dwellings and other buildings in a considerable number of places in the country. I am curious to know whether this board which the Senator wants to have continued is the board that had control of that construction.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that on reflection and on referring again to the statement which was furnished me, I do not think that it had supervision of that work, for in addition to the cantonments and camps the writer of this statement goes on to say:

Soon after the completion of the camps it became evident that the War Department would require an extensive program of construction, involving port terminals, interior storage depots, hospitals, munition plants, proving grounds, plants for the manufacture of acids, gases, shells—

And so forth.

Nowhere in the statement is work of that kind mentioned, and I would infer from that, without reference to what is now said by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], that they did not have supervision of that work.

Mr. REED. The Senator from New York in a side remark refers to the Housing Corporation. I am aware that they were the immediate agents, but what I want to get at is whether any part of the construction of these buildings or the general supervision of them or the responsibility for them in any way falls on this board. I want to ask another question while I am on my feet. Did the Construction Division have anything to do with the location of these camps?

Mr. STERLING. I think not. That was determined upon by the Secretary of War, I take it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The sites of the several camps were chosen by boards of officers who were appointed for the purpose very early in our participation in the war and who reported back to the Secretary of War. In fact, the sites, I think, were selected before the Construction Division was made a separate division. They had nothing to do with placing the sites; they merely constructed the buildings.

Mr. REED. I am obliged to the Senator. Does the Senator propose now, because we had a war in which we were able to organize a body of men to perform this miracle that he has been describing and do it within 90 days, to perpetuate that body? What is the reason, if we did it this time and performed this remarkable work without any such organization, that it should now be perpetuated? Why could it not be reproduced in case of another war? Why should we prolong it during the period of the millennium which is now upon us and which will probably make all war in the future impossible?

Mr. STERLING. Without regard to war, I can conceive that there would be work for this construction division in time of peace, not in the work of building roads or building fortifications, of course, but in other construction work which would be necessary for the Army. Part of their work is seen in the salvaging which they have done at the various camps and cantonments which are no longer needed or all of which are not needed on account of the different conditions.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator a further question. He speaks of the salvaging. How does the Senator know that that has been successfully done? Has there been anything really saved? Has it been economically done?

Mr. STERLING. I think it has been economically done, as economically done as it could have been done. Does the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. REED. I am not making any charge, but the thing I am interested in is to get at the facts; that is all. The Senator spoke of this body of men having spent over a billion dollars. That does not prove anything; they may have spent it wisely, and they may have spent it unwisely. The amount of money expended tells us nothing except that the money is gone.

Mr. STERLING. It does tell us the number of projects, I will say to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I could spend a billion dollars in a night with no other project than a roulette wheel.

Mr. STERLING. Over 500 independent projects at various points were involved.

Mr. REED. The Senator speaks of salvage. There may have been a great deal of salvage. The question is, Was there an efficient salvage? That is what I am interested in knowing. For instance, there was some salvaging done in France, we are told, which consisted in selling our materials over there for practically nothing.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Missouri will not blame that on this construction division?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I am using it as an illustration. The construction division has been salvaging a number of things. The Senator speaks of the magnitude of the work. That does not quite cover the question. I am not taking any sides in this.

Mr. STERLING. I understand.

Mr. REED. I want information. I would like to know what the Senator knows about this work having been efficiently done? I am not saying it was not efficiently done. I may be for the board. I am seeking light.

Mr. STERLING. I can not speak with particularity in regard to the number of camps or cantonments at which this salvage work has been done nor just how efficiently it has been done, but the gentleman who furnishes me this statement says:

Since the signing of the armistice the construction division has done notable work in the salvaging of a large number of camps and other temporary projects.

Mr. REED. That sounds well; but the Senator does not tell us who is the author of it, and the Senator himself is not the author. If the Senator had examined that work and made that statement, I would be willing to take his conclusion, but he reads the conclusion of another man and does not tell us who the man is.

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not feel at liberty to tell who the man is or to give his name, but he is a man I have known for a great many years and have always regarded as a most competent civil engineer and a very reliable man. He would not make that broad statement as so much camouflage. He means something substantial; that substantial work in the matter of salvaging has been done.

Mr. REED. To save my life, I can not see why his name should be kept from the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. It is not at his request that I do not mention the name, I will say to the Senator from Missouri. I have not been given liberty to use his name; he is in the service, and I do not like to use his name because of that fact. I will read just a little further from the statement, Mr. President, and then I will close.

It would be clearly unwise to separate the operation of utilities of the various military projects of this country from the organization carrying on the construction and repair of these projects. In order to secure economy and efficiency of design, construction, and operation, it is necessary that all these functions should be performed by the same organization. The organization which designed, built, and has operated these projects from the beginning is certainly the one which should continue to administer them. This organization, by virtue of its being largely composed of civilian experts, is flexible, direct, and businesslike in its operations; distinctly different from other Government bureaus, and especially the usual military organizations.

In order that the Government may receive from the construction division in the future the greatest value and efficiency, the Army reorganization bill should provide for the continuance of the construction division as a separate corps or service—

And so forth.

Mr. President, I have been impressed with that statement and it appeals to me throughout, without having special knowledge of the subject, as being a most reasonable statement, one which bears on its face evidence of its truth and the value of the construction division as an independent branch, separate and apart from the Corps of Army Engineers. I think there is here a distinct and a special field of work which can be better performed by the construction division than it can be by the Board of Army Engineers. It is a field over which that board has not heretofore had jurisdiction.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have listened attentively to the argument of the Senator from South Dakota, but, even accepting his argument at its full weight, he is entirely out of harmony with the bill. The theory is that while during the recent war we had a construction or cantonment division, which built all the cantonments, therefore we ought to retain it. While it was necessary during the war to build cantonments, and to build them in a hurry, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that work was not performed by Army engineers; nominally they were at the head of it; but the architects who prepared the plans for the buildings, the mechanics who did the work, and all of the laborers were nothing but civilians and their work was confined to this country.

I was sorry to hear the Senator from South Dakota belittle what our Engineer Corps did in France. The Army engineers had charge of all important construction work there; they built over a thousand miles of broad-gauge standard railroad; they sent men over from this country into the woods to chop the timber, build the sawmills, and manufacture the lumber. They built the roads, they erected the buildings, and every structure which was needed there for the Army was built under the engineering forces of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. The Army engineers, I grant, had general supervision, but was not much of the work of the supervision of this or that particular project or the construction of this or that barrack or of this or that road left to civil engineers who had been commissioned but who were not a part of the Army Engineer Corps at all?

Mr. NELSON. No; not as a rule. I wish to say that the great body of the men who did the work in France were enlisted men. The men who worked on the cantonments in this country were civilian employees; they were hired by the architects and the contractors, and were not enlisted in the Army. The men who did the work over in France were all enlisted men. I know that fact, because men from my own State were enlisted to go into the woods in France to cut the timber, to build sawmills, and to get out the lumber. They built the wharves and did everything in the shape of construction work that was there required.

However, granting all that the Senator says, that the construction service performed great civilian work during the war in building cantonments here, does the Senator expect that we shall carry on that work in time of peace? Are we to keep up the building of cantonments? Will our work be anything else but to keep those buildings from going to decay?

More than that. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the provisions of the bill and to show him what they are. I call his attention to pages 44 and 45, from which I read:

SEC. 37. The construction service: There is hereby established a construction service which, under regulations to be established by the President and in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be charged with—the construction, maintenance, and repair of all buildings, structures (other than fortifications), and utilities, and the preparation of plans therefor in accordance with the requirements of the several arms, corps, and services of the Army of the United States—

And so forth.

Who is to do this work? Is it to be done by the civilian carpenters and the civilian architects who built the cantonments? Why, bless you, no. Here is the provision, which reads:

The permanent personnel of the construction service shall consist of one chief of construction, with the rank of brigadier general—

We have always got to provide for a brigadier general, even if it is only to do a bit of carpenter's work—and 200 officers, in grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, and 6,000 enlisted men.

Just think of that! Are you going to take the carpenters of the country and issue commissions to them? Are you going to take the architects and issue commissions to them? Why do you want such a big force of Regular Army officers put over this construction division—to look after the lot of dilapidated cantonments which are going to rack and ruin? Where is a civilian force provided for in the bill?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will read the remaining portions of the bill he will see where they will obtain the men. All these men will be assigned from the permanent personnel under the provisions of the act. They will not be 6,000 new men in the service, but they will be men assigned from the permanent personnel of the Army.

Mr. NELSON. Why, bless you, they will be 6,000 enlisted soldiers. There are men enlisted in the service who can be detailed for this work or detailed for any other work, but they are not enlisted as carpenters. The Senator is utterly mistaken. They are enlisted like any other soldiers; and then there is to be the commissioned personnel, consisting of a brigadier general and 200 officers in grades from second lieutenant to colonel.

It is admitted that the erection of buildings is all civilian work. It does not require any engineering skill. It is work a civilian architect and civilian mechanics can do; it does not require a brigadier general or a number of officers from second lieutenant up. It simply requires plain carpenters and plain American architects, not with the trappings of a brigadier general or the trappings of a colonel or of a second lieutenant.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a statement here concerning which I should like to advise the Senator in order to see if he can verify it. As I understand, when the recommendations were submitted to Congress the Engineer Corps made an estimate as to the officers it would need if the construction and utilities work were continued under it. Then the Quartermaster Corps made an estimate of the officers they would need if the work of construction and utilities was continued under them.

Mr. NELSON. I will answer the Senator by referring to an old Norwegian maxim, that one crow does not dig out the eyes of another crow.

Mr. SWANSON. This is a case where there are three crows and each one wants so many crows to do the work. I understand that the construction division also made a recommendation to Congress of what it would need to do this work, and they only asked for 294 officers both for construction work and for the operation of utilities.

Mr. NELSON. Of course, if they get the officers, it makes very little difference whether they are in the Engineer Corps or some other corps; it is an officers' bill from first to last; it is to make places for a lot of officers.

Mr. SWANSON. The question is whether the construction work shall be carried on by a separate corps or whether it shall be consolidated under the Engineer Corps or under the Quartermaster Department. I understand that the Engineer Corps asked for 370 officers to carry on the construction and utilities work. I understand, further, that when estimates were made to Congress as to what would be required to do the work of construction and utilities if it were consolidated under the Quartermaster Department, they asked for more officers to do it than the construction corps asked for.

Mr. NELSON. I would not give them more officers.

Mr. SWANSON. The only question now is whether the construction service shall be a separate department or be consolidated with one of the other departments or corps. As I understand, as a separate department, the chief of construction and utilities asks for less officers than the Engineer Corps or the Quartermaster Department asks for if the work is assigned to them. I am for the one that will do the work with the least officers if it can be done efficiently.

Mr. NELSON. But why do we need officers and enlisted men to do this civilian work?

Mr. SWANSON. Probably a great deal of it could be done without them; but the point I make is, if the construction and utilities work is put under a separate corps and they can do the same work as efficiently with less officers than the Quartermaster Department asks for in their estimate and with less than the Engineer Corps asks for in their estimate, economy ought to make us provide a separate corps for this purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator from Virginia where he secured the information that the Engineer Department asked for a larger number of officers?

Mr. SWANSON. From a memorandum setting forth the estimates submitted to Congress showing what will be required to do the work. I do not know what the appropriation bill gives them, but I am referring to the estimates made to Congress when the various corps requested appropriations.

Mr. LENROOT. There could not have been any estimate by the Engineers for this work, because it never was under the jurisdiction of the Engineers.

Mr. SWANSON. The estimates were made with a view to the work being put under their control.

Mr. LENROOT. That could not have been included in the estimates.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, there are three propositions—to have the construction work carried on by a separate corps, to put it under the Engineer Corps, or to put it under the Quartermaster Department—and, as I understand, in the estimates that have been submitted for the officers to do this work a less number were asked for by the Construction Division as a separate department than were asked for if it were consolidated with either of the other two corps.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very sure the Senator is mistaken, because I have consulted the officers of the Engineer Corps, and instead of asking for more officers they say they can do the work with 70 officers less than if it were done by a separate division.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I may interrupt the Senator there, how many more does the Quartermaster Department want to run the utilities?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That would just about even it up.

Mr. SWANSON. I repeat that, according to my understanding, the construction and utilities work, if carried on by a separate corps, can be conducted with less officers than if the construction and utilities work is consolidated under the Quartermaster Department or under the Engineer Corps.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say, if the Senator from Minnesota will yield further, in response to the Senator from New York, that I have also made inquiries of the representatives of the Quartermaster General's Corps, and they have all indicated that if they run the utilities they will not ask for any more officers.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a speech. I merely want to have a memorandum printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NELSON. Who is the Senator's authority? Is it from some military officer hiding behind a shadow?

Mr. SWANSON. It is a military officer.

Mr. NELSON. Who is he?

Mr. SWANSON. In order that it may be understood, I want to have the memorandum put into the RECORD, so that if it is not correct that fact may be brought out.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator put his name in?

Mr. SWANSON. I will put his name in after I get permission to incorporate the memorandum.

Mr. NELSON. I object to its going into the RECORD unless the officer's name is given.

Mr. SWANSON. If it is accurate, it can speak for itself.

Mr. NELSON. I want to know who the military man is who gives this information.

Mr. SWANSON. I have had made a computation, from which it appears that the appropriation bill passed by the House carries $350,000,000. We have an estimate that $138,000,000 of that sum will be used for pay of officers and soldiers, leaving $212,000,000 for other purposes, and out of that $212,000,000 for construction there is appropriated $6,000,000 and for utilities $30,000,000, making $36,000,000 in all, which, it seems to me, is sufficient to justify a separate department. Now, I should like to have the memorandum to which I have referred put into the RECORD, so that if it is not correct that fact can be shown.

Mr. NELSON. I want the name of the man who wrote it.

Mr. SWANSON. If I see him and get his permission, I shall be glad to furnish it.

Mr. NELSON. Unless his name is given I object, Mr. President.

I am very sorry to see my friends here from South Dakota and from Virginia and from New York so wedded to this great Army scheme. I am a friend of the common soldier, especially of the corporals, and I am a friend of the efficient and good officers; but I am not a friend of this scheme to build up an unusual and extraordinary body of officers, in time of peace, out of all proportion with the little Army that we are to have. I should be very glad to see our Army at least 400,000 strong; but, inasmuch as that is not to be the case, inasmuch as we are to have an Army, outside of the officers, of less than 300,000 men, I think we ought to have a little economy in the way of establishing so many places for commissioned officers.

Take the argument of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. He described the great work that had been done in building these cantonments during the recent war. It was indeed a great work, although it was done under contracts that in principle, perhaps, were not justified. I shall refer to that a little by and by; but, after all, it was civilian work. It was not military work. The architects who planned the cantonments were civilians. The men who did the work and the mechanics and the laborers were civilians, and the Army officers had but little work to do in that connection. We are expecting to live from now on indefinitely—I might say some people think so at least—in piping times of peace. We are not expecting any more building of cantonments. About all that will be required in the way of cantonments will be nursing and taking care of these old cantonments and getting some use from the odds and ends before they go to utter decay. About all that this construction corps will have to do from now on, unless we get into another war, will not be to build new cantonments or new camps but to be a sort of a wet nurse for these old cantonments and these old buildings that we have scattered over the country, and to take care that the lumber and material in those cantonments does not go utterly to waste.

The building work that is contemplated in this bill is purely civilian work. It is not work for which you should detail a brigadier general and 200 officers and 6,000 enlisted men. An enlisted man is a soldier, and an enlisted man can be detailed for various kinds of work. He can be detailed for this work, but he is nevertheless a soldier. He is a part of the little Army that we are to have, of 300,000 men or so. For work of this kind—and I do not care whether you put it under the Quartermaster Department or under a separate construction division—for work of this kind, purely civilian work, purely work for architects and carpenters, purely work for these salvage men who are to pick up the wrecks of these buildings, why do we need a corps of officers and enlisted men? Why can we not do it with other forces and through other methods if we want to economize?

In order to justify this, it has been attempted indirectly to create the impression—I do not say that it was done intentionally, but that was the drift of the argument—that the engineers of the Army do as great work as was done by this cantonment construction division here in America. Why, all the construction work was done by the Engineering Corps over in France, and done by the enlisted men of that corps, men enlisted as private and noncommissioned officers.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that the engineers not only did this splendid construction work in France but the Sixth Engineers participated in as many battles as any other regiment during the late war.

Mr. NELSON. Now, Mr. President, look over the great work done by our Army engineers over in France from first to last. They had to build wharves, they had to build buildings in which to store all our Army supplies, they had to build railroads, not only standard-guage railroads, but—I do not know whether I use the military phrase correctly or not—they had to build those little pony railroads that run up from the main front line up to no man's land, as they called it. They had to build all those things.

They had to build roads, and get everything into condition. Practically all the construction work in France was performed by our engineers, and look what a body of men they are! We have not in the whole Army service a body of men equal to the United States Engineers. For years and years they have conducted all the river and harbor improvements in this country; they have expended millions of dollars year by year, and in all the life of the corps there has only been a single scandal, and that was in the case of Carter; and all he made away with the Government finally recovered, and he had to serve a sentence in jail. Outside of that, the Engineer Corps have performed the most valuable service. They constructed the Panama Canal; they constructed the great canals and locks up at the Sault Ste. Marie; and all our great river and harbor improvements have been conducted under their auspices and under their direction.

Why should you attempt now, in time of peace, to humiliate a body of men that have such a record as our Army engineers have had from first to last, and take away a part of their work, and not leave it in their hands? Are not these men, who have had charge of our river and harbor improvements, competent to oversee and look after these dilapidated cantonments? Are not they more competent than anyone else to effect any salvage that can be made out of them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not a fact that the engineers have never had this construction work in the Army?

Mr. NELSON. They had it over in France.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In time of peace?

Mr. NELSON. I do not care about what is done in time of peace.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But just a moment.

Mr. NELSON. No matter what happens, you are not building on time of peace. You never had such a department or bureau in time of peace before the war as this construction bureau.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. I never heard of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was a division in the Quartermaster General's Office.

Mr. NELSON. It may have been a division. It was no more a division than we had in the Quartermaster Department. They had their division of rivers and harbors, and in the Engineer Department they had a division of rivers and harbors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Senator said that we were——

Mr. NELSON. I am talking about what occurred in France during the war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask permission to interrupt the Senator just for this purpose——

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator said that we were now trying to cast aspersions upon the Engineer Corps by taking away from the Engineer Corps the work which it had had.

Mr. President, this bill does not do that. The Engineer Corps never has done the construction work for the Army——

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Except military construction alone.

Mr. NELSON. Well, that has been about the only construction. We have not had any cantonment work before this war broke out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes, Mr. President. We have built barracks; we take care of walks and roads in the Army posts——

Mr. NELSON. Yes, for automobiles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Pumping stations, sewerage plants, drainage, repairs, and maintenance.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; and I will tell you what this grand cantonment corps of yours did during the war. They built a lot of automobile roads all over the country. I think it was one of these so-called cantonment corps that built a lot of these automobile roads down South in the different localities. Of course, if it is in contemplation to build more of those roads under this provision of the bill—and you never can tell—if that is the purpose of the bill, I can see where there is a field for it. You want more concrete roads built, and you think you can do it under this construction division.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, Mr. President, this has nothing to do with building concrete roads.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, well; see how broad this language is:

> Shall be charged with the construction, maintenance, and repair of all buildings, structures, and utilities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the Army.

Mr. NELSON. That language is broad enough to cover a multitude of sins, as it was during the war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the language which has been used in the Army appropriation bills for years and years. It covers the maintenance and repair of barracks.

Mr. NELSON. We have a great many old-time, worn-out phrases in the Army bill that we ought to eliminate. There are a great many antediluvian things in the Army bill that we ought to eliminate. We ought to come back to business principles. Take this bill as an entirety, and I say—and I do not say it in any invidious spirit—that it is an officers' bill. It is top-heavy. It creates a larger force of officers than is necessary for the small Army that we are to retain in the future.

I want to add another thing—whoever is responsible for it finally, I can not say—and that is in reference to the matter that was discussed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] about these cost-plus contracts. I understand that most of the cantonment work was done under that system. I am not familiar with that part of it, but I know what took place under the cost-plus contracts in reference to shipbuilding. I know what took place in reference to the great shipyard started at Hog Island under a cost-plus contract.

There was a company in which Stone & Webster, the great engineers of Boston, noted all over the country, became interested. They became interested in the building of that shipyard, and in building ships there. It was a cost-plus contract. The Government was to pay all the expenses for labor and material, and they were to have a percentage on all the product. What transpired under that? Why, Stone & Webster, who were a part of this company, unloaded, saddled on it their chief engineer, whom they had had for years on their pay roll at $12,000 a year. He was put on the Government pay roll at Hog Island at $30,000 a year. I know another man from my State, who probably had never earned over $5,000 a year, who was put on the pay roll there at $15,000 a year. I know a couple of men from Minnesota who were junk dealers, who had been accustomed to do wrecking of buildings and picking up odds and ends for Stone & Webster, and they were put on the Hog Island pay roll under that cost-plus contract, one at $1,000 a month and the other at $625 a month.

That is how the cost-plus contracts operated in shipbuilding. We had other yards, but I am more familiar with what transpired at the Hog Island yard, and we were unmercifully plucked by these cost-plus contracts.

Whoever inspired that kind of contracts, whoever brought them forward and got them to be adopted and used, either in the construction of cantonments or in the building of ships, was no friend of the American people. He played into the hands of the grafters and the contractors and the money-makers. I know in the case of the Hog Island shipyard the Government has been most unmercifully plucked, and I have no doubt that if we could ever get at the bottom of it—but we never will, Mr. President—we would find how the American people were plucked in the construction of these cantonments.

But there is one consolation, Mr. President. We had such grafters, such promoters, such greedy men during the days of the Civil War, and they came out of that war with their millions. But the whirligig of time has made all things even. Where are those men to-day who made fortunes out of the Civil War? They are dead. The fortunes they made out of the Government have become dissipated, and many of their children and descendants have become wrecks.

It may be an unholy hope, Mr. President, but I hope that the men who have been filching from the pockets of Uncle Sam in these unholy contracts and by these unholy methods may encounter the same experience that was encountered by the grafters and promoters of the Civil War.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to the figures in reference to the officers.

The bill provides for 201 officers—1 brigadier general and 200 officers in grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive—and 6,000 enlisted men. A memorandum from the Quartermaster General's Department, with which this construction service was before the war and is now, under the general law, has furnished this statement:

> With construction a part of the Quartermaster Corps, but 47 of these officers would be engaged on such work, as follows:
> In the office of the Quartermaster General:

Brigadier general	1
Colonels	2
Majors	4
Captains	6
Total	13
For the field:
Majors	10
Total	34

Or a grand total of 47 officers, as against 201 officers, which would be a saving in officers.

I have not the figures about the men, but I understand that there will be quite as great a saving, proportionately, in the matter of men.

I agree that this amendment ought to be adopted. I think beyond doubt it would mean a saving. A very careful officer has estimated that the cost of the three services which are provided by the bill—to wit, the finance service, the transportation service, and the construction service—will be $33,247,584. I think the Senate should know what it means to create these additional services. It will cost a great deal of money, and it is believed that the efficiency will not be as great.

Mr. REED. The Senator stated that there would be a great reduction in officers, and gave us the figures, and said he understood there would be a corresponding reduction in the number of enlisted men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. REED. That is very interesting. How does the Senator understand that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a statement which I would like to put into the RECORD from the Quartermaster General's Department, in which it is stated exactly how that arises. In the use of men for all purposes there would be a duplication of work if separate services are provided.

Mr. REED. Duplication on the part of the enlisted men through the actual manual labor?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and so many posts. Men who are engaged in one work could also be used for another department.

Mr. REED. I can understand how by creating a separate organization it might be that the officers running that organization would have to be more numerous than if they act as officers of the Quartermaster Department, and I can understand how the difference might be the difference between 47 and 201, but I can not understand how there should be a reduction in the personnel of the laborers to a corresponding degree. It surely can not be that they would enlist 6,000 men to do, each of them, a day's work each day and take them out and employ them under this new plan, and that somebody else in another department can get along with one-eighth of the same number of laborers and accomplish the same results.

Mr. LENROOT. It is not one-eighth; there is a reduction of only 2,000 suggested here.

Mr. REED. But the statement of the Senator from Tennessee was that there was a corresponding reduction in the number of laborers.

Mr. LENROOT. Of 2,000 enlisted men.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not have the number in my head.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask the Senator how that comes about?

Mr. REED. Let us get the figures straight first. The statement of the Senator from Tennessee is that under the proposed reorganization there will be 201 officers, and that if we put the business under the Quartermaster Department there will be only 47, which is about one-fourth.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. REED. That is the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, not mine. Then the Senator states that there will be a corresponding reduction in the number of enlisted men; that is, laborers. So we would have 1,500 laborers instead of 6,000, and I am simply trying to get an accurate statement for my own information as to how that comes about.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will give it to the Senator if he would like to have it.

This statement I have says:

Under paragraph 2, General Order 131, War Department, December 8, 1919, the Construction Division (utilities officer) is charged with:

Installation, operation, and repair of all plants.
Construction, repair, and maintenance of all buildings.
Installation, repair, and operation of all fire apparatus.
Construction, repair of all railway tracks, fences, roads, drainage, culverts, bridges, signals, and procurement of all materials in connection therewith.

This creates a condition in the maintenance of Army posts and depots which is extravagant and inefficient. It will necessitate a duplicate storage system at each post and station and duplicate depots for replenishment, in view of the fact that the supply and transportation officers each use many similar articles to those used by utilities officers. For instance, the quartermaster could not mix his stock of nails, tools, etc., with those of the utilities officer, as the funds covering procurement come from different appropriations. The utilities officer would not trust his stock in the same storehouse as the quartermaster, and the quartermaster vice versa. This will also necessitate two sets of storekeepers and the necessary clerical help entering therein.

Should a quartermaster warehouse suddenly spring a leak or should the manufacturing plant at the Philadelphia or Jeffersonville depots break down, the process of manufacture will cease until the utilities officer makes the necessary repairs. Assuming that the utilities officer had not foreseen this possible condition and did not have the necessary parts in stock, production would cease until they had been received.

If the roof springs a leak the quartermaster is responsible for the damage to his stock pending repairs by the utilities officer, and yet the quartermaster has no authority to see that the utilities officer is prepared for or competent to meet such an emergency.

The quartermaster is in charge of manufacture and must be selected for his competence for this supervision, and yet his decision to install a new or improve an old mechanical operation in an endeavor to obtain economical and efficient production is completely subject to the determination of a separate service which might, through inefficiency or intent, wreck an efficient organization or prevent the proper development or improvement of an inefficient one.

Divorcing the several services, such as finance, construction, transportation, etc., from the Quartermaster Corps, where they properly belong, simply consumes excessive public funds, in that it creates duplication of officers and enlisted men and the necessary clerical personnel, labor, and supplies. With all this added expense it actually retards instead of speeds up the fundamental reason why all the services exist, viz, the supply, pay, housing, and transportation of troops.

Then there are illustrations given.

As an example, take a military post. With finance, construction, and transportation, a component part of the Quartermaster Corps, one officer (the quartermaster) did all the work with one office force, one set of records, and the minimum of supplies. He usually had a sergeant in charge of the several divisions under his direct supervision, where all could be coordinated and worked into an efficient, smooth running machine. With divided services, an officer of each service will necessarily be required in each post. Each of these will require a separate office (expense, fuel, light); a separate set of records (expense, forms, stationery); a separate set of personnel (expense), all of whom will be busy part of a day but idle the greater part (useless expense). With a quartermaster performing all of these duties we have a minimum force constantly employed, flexible and available as a whole to absorb the peak load at any time falling upon any activity, with no unnecessary administrative heads, and lacking all the routine delays and red tape of intercommunication between separate services.

I ask that the whole statement may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorandum on effect of creating separate services of construction, etc.

Under the organization of a separate construction corps, which it is contemplated to perpetuate in Senate bill 3792, all utilities are operated by this organization. This means that all repairs for maintenance at posts, depots, and other plants and all machinery and plants utilized thereat shall be operated by the construction corps.

The heating and lighting plants and mechanical labor-saving devices at supply depots will be operated by officers who are not under the jurisdiction of the responsible commander of the plant. This creates a condition similar to a superintendent of a mill who is deprived of jurisdiction over the engineer of his plant, who could dictate the kinds of machinery that were installed and methods and hours of operation, despite the fact that the superintendent is responsible for the output of the factory. Where will the responsibility for quality, quantity, and economical production be placed? What will be the result of post or camp maintenance being placed under a utilities officer operating under the construction corps or any other organization than the Quartermaster Corps? Not only will there have to be an additional officer at each camp or post to carry on this activity and in charge of repairs, of heating, lighting, water, and garbage disposal maintenance, but each utility officer will have to have a duplicate office personnel to the post supply officer, from whom he will draw the tools and materials to carry on his work. At present the supplies he uses are drawn from purchase and storage, despite the fact that purchase and storage is not responsible for maintenance of such supplies. When purchase and storage supplies become exhausted, then construction must set up a storage service parallel to that of purchase and storage in order to provide maintenance from stock and not require emergency repairs to await the legal and routine delays necessary in Government purchases as conducted with a separate finance service.

Maintenance has heretofore been an additional activity pertaining to the supply officer, who, as post quartermaster, formerly performed all the functions of supply, transportation, finance, and construction. Post maintenance placed under his jurisdiction requires no additional officer or clerical personnel and the supplies necessary are carried under a storage system which is already at his disposition. When the two are divorced we not only set up an additional and totally unnecessary personnel, but we create delays and inefficiency through divided responsibility and the complications of routine. The added financial burden is most apparent.

If Congress still deems it necessary to create a separate construction corps, the utilities functions should be divorced from "new construction" and maintenance at posts assigned to the Quartermaster Corps. Utilities functions other than those at posts and camps should be assigned to whatever bureau is charged with the activity, thus giving to the Ordnance Department and the Quartermaster Corps complete jurisdiction over their manufacturing plants and control of labor-saving devices in the handling of supplies pertaining to the activities of their responsibilities.

New and original projects of construction can be assigned to the Engineer Corps with equal efficiency and economy as would result in returning such duties to the Quartermaster Corps and with the benefit to the Engineers of this peace training. The continuation of a separate construction corps can not, however, be justified from any standpoint.

If a separate construction corps is to be created or new construction is assigned to the Engineer Corps, it is most important that the following amendment should be adopted in the definition of the duties thereof, viz: "except utilities pertaining to the maintenance of posts, camps, and stations, which shall be assigned to the Quartermaster Corps and maintenance and utilities at depots, arsenals, and manufacturing plants, which shall be charged to the service conducting the activity."

Section 9, H. R. 12775, provides 1,050 officers for the operation of the Quartermaster Corps with transportation and construction included. With construction a part of the Quartermaster Corps, but 47 of these officers would be engaged on such work, as follows:

In the office of the Quartermaster General:

Brigadier general	1
Colonels	2
Majors	4
Total	13

For the field:

Majors	10
Captains	24
Grand total	47

No special number of officers was contemplated for the so-called utilities duties at posts, camps, and depots, as one of the number of officers assigned by the Quartermaster Corps to each station would be required to perform the duties pertaining to utilities in addition to such other duties as would be assigned. At some of the larger places the full time of the officers assigned to utilities duties will be required, but such cases do not involve an increase of the total commissioned forces provided for the Quartermaster Corps.

For purely construction purposes it would be necessary to provide a group of officers for duty solely as constructing quartermasters during the periods construction is in progress. When there is no construction these officers would be available for other duties.

The apportionment of officers by the General Staff on October 31, 1919, gave 290 officers to the construction division. Unless Congress contemplates vast construction projects for the Army the 47 officers provided in the total of 1,050 for the Quartermaster Corps will be ample to carry on the normal activities pertaining to new construction during peace times.

Under paragraph 2, General Order 131, War Department, December 8, 1919, the Construction Division (utilities officer) is charged with installation, operation, and repair of all plants; construction, repair, and maintenance of all buildings; installation, repair, and operation of all fire apparatus; construction, repair of all railway tracks, fences, roads, drainage, culverts, bridges, signals, and procurement of all materials in connection therewith.

Approximate comparative expense at small posts and stations.

CONSOLIDATED.

1 captain, Quartermaster	$2,400
2 clerks	2,400
4 enlisted men	6,000
1 office, heat, light.
1 set records.
	10,800

DIVIDED.

1 captain, Quartermaster	2,400
1 lieutenant, Transportation	2,000
1 lieutenant, Finance	2,000
1 lieutenant, Construction	2,000
4 clerks	4,800
8 enlisted men	12,000
4 offices, records, etc.
	25,200

The above is what will necessarily happen in a small post, resulting in inefficiency and cumbersome methods of supply. In addition there will be the expense to post headquarters in issuing orders for four services instead of one, which will entail an increase of approximately 50 per cent.

The expense and inefficiency in supply which will be created by separating these activities as demonstrated in the operation of small posts, becomes an increasing factor as the size of the post increases and up through the avenues of supply, the depots, and department headquarters, and finally in a vastly magnified degree by the creation of these new bureaus in the War Department.

Each new service will demand the creation of another major general to provide for its chief, and then the expansion and competition will begin. Gradually these separate services will "justify" their existence by expansion, each requiring a little more each year for its budget. This "little more" each year added to four or five services soon becomes millions and millions. Vast offices filled with clerical forces, voluminous correspondence between services and an excuse for a greatly enlarged General Staff who will ineffectually claim to "coordinate" these separate services.

Personal ambition in these separately created services and the General Staff have created powerful machines to lobby for the continuation of their existence. Is Congress going to legislate into existence a system whereby 75 cents of every dollar appropriated for the Army will be spent in the administrative methods incurred for each 25 cents worth of supplies? What does the Army get? Only delays and insufficiency in supply.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Bureau of Efficiency for the War Department, the Inspector General's Office, and, except for the General Staff, the Army itself deems these separations of activities from the Quartermaster Corps are inadvisable and that they will entail inefficiency and greatly increased cost. How will Congress answer the taxpayer?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is from the Quartermaster General's Department.

Mr. SWANSON. From what officer?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not signed, but it is from that department.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a statement of a similar character which I ask to have printed.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Statement has been made that by consolidating certain services under the Quartermaster General a great saving in the overhead would be made. Statements have also been made that by putting construction under the engineers a great saving in overhead would be effected. Such is not the case, so far as construction is concerned.

The denials above made are based upon records submitted by the chiefs of the Quartermaster Corps, Engineer Corps, and Construction Division when said statements were delivered by the several chiefs as to what they would require for the Construction Service. The Chief of Construction asked for 294 officers for construction work and for the operation of utilities, the larger part of these being for the operation of utilities.

In the bill submitted to the Congress by the War Department there was included for these several services of the Quartermaster Corps some 2,700 officers. Applying an ordinary percentage to this, at least 270 of these would be needed for the operation of utilities, and this bill contemplated that the Quartermaster Corps would not do construction but would operate utilities. This bill also contemplated that the Engineer Corps would do construction and at least 370 of these officers were for construction purposes alone, making a total of 640 officers for construction and operation of utilities, where the Chief of Construction asked for only 294. Figures can be adduced showing all other items to be in like proportion. With a division of the Army requiring so large an expenditure as that required for operation of utilities and for construction the question of economy is not so dependent upon this item of overhead as upon the method of operation. The method of operation is, of course, dependent upon its having a chief who can give it his undivided attention. The cost of overhead is no more than 5 per cent of its total expenditure, and if there were any basis for the statement that the cost of overhead would be greatly reduced by this consolidation it is not entitled to much weight, as it could be no more than 5 per cent of the whole, but the above figures show the overhead to be greatly reduced by consolidating operation of utilities and construction under a separate and distinct bureau, and the saving in operation would unquestionably be greatly influenced by it receiving the undivided attention of experts in these several lines, rather than being subject to a chief who can treat this important matter in only an incidental way.

The 294 officers asked for by the Chief of Construction Division was divided, 170 for utilities and 124 for construction. The Quartermaster Corps asked for 270 officers for utilities, this being a cost to the Government of $400,000 additional per annum in officers alone. The Engineer Corps asked for 370 officers for construction at a cost of $976,000 per annum additional for officers, or a total of $1,376,000 in officers alone, as a saving that will be brought about by the construction work and operation of utilities being placed in one service and as obtained during the war. This is based on figures submitted by the several chiefs at a time when their estimates were made without any influence other than what they conceived to be the needs of the service.

This is further illustrated by the fact that the Chief of Engineers in his statements requests one lieutenant colonel, four majors, four captains, and such additional assistants as may be available for each divisional cantonment, whereas the Chief of Construction asks that one major and two assistants be authorized for each divisional cantonment. The economy of placing construction and operation of utilities in a construction service is so obvious and so exactly demonstrable in facts and figures as to need no considerable explanation.

At no place in the hearings or in the public documents are given any facts and figures on which the statements of savings can be demonstrated other than the fact that the method of handling construction and operation of utilities in one service produced the greatest economy to the Government.

Mr. REED. The question I have been urging is not answered by the long statement read by the Senator from Tennessee. There is, it strikes me, much of sound argument in the statement the Senator has made with reference to certain matters, unless there is another side to be presented; but it does not answer the question why we can get along with 1,500 laborers under one arrangement and it takes 6,000 under the other. I think there are many defects in the statement just rendered. To illustrate, one of the statements read by the Senator from Tennessee was to the effect that it might be necessary to have some improvement made suddenly, and the new division might not have the parts. That is very true. The Quartermaster's Department might not have the parts. One of them would be just as likely to be out of the parts as the other. It does not follow because you put the work into somebody else's hands that he will be prepared to perform the work. So there are many similar holes in the argument that we heard read. I have not made up my own mind about this matter, and I therefore am not saying which is the better plan; but a loosely constructed argument of that kind does not appeal to me very much.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to say to the Senator that the estimates I have shown, that if the separate construction division is eliminated and new construction put in the hands of the engineers, it will result in a reduction of 70 officers and 2,000 men, and the Senator will readily see that, so far as the Quartermaster's Department is concerned, there would not necessarily be any increase under this section of a separate division. Not only does this construction department have charge of all new construction, but it would operate and maintain the utilities.

At every post the quartermaster has a department and a force of men, and that same force of men might well be able to operate utility, while if you have a separate division you must have separate men in each post and cantonment to do those particular things, although it might require very little time.

Mr. REED. I think there is much force in the Senator's statement. I did not really rise to take part in the debate, but to get some light.

While I am on my feet I desire to call attention to an argument that has been made here, the soundness of which I am unable to perceive. We are told that at the beginning of the war we had no construction department; that we went out into civil life and in a few days' time gathered out of civil life a body of men to perform what is described here as a sort of a construction miracle. If that is true, it is the best argument I know of against a separate construction department as a permanent branch of the Army. Why? Because, if we were able to do this wonderful work without any construction department, to call these men from civil life, and if they did the marvelous work ascribed to them, if they did work that was better than the Regular Army officers and the regular organization, why create a regular organization? Why not trust to the future and confidently expect that if we ever get into another war we could go out and get civilian employees who would perform this marvelous work? The argument is that having been obliged to appeal to the civilian life of the country to accomplish a marvelous work, and that work having been accomplished in a marvelous way, we are now to turn that work over permanently to a branch of the Regular Army which, the argument tends to show, fell down on the job before. There is not much logic in that kind of an argument, to my mind.

It seems to me that now, in a time of peace, and when we all believe, no matter how we believe on the League of Nations, that a long period of peace lies ahead of this country, we ought to treat this question with reference to the economy and, of course, efficiency necessary in time of peace. We are not going to be building cantonments, we are not going to do a very great amount of new construction, and naturally it ought to be under some branch of the Army, in my opinion, so that the whole proposition resolves itself into this: Can it be done better under two divisions or under one division? That is the real question at issue.

Generally speaking, splitting up of authority is not wise, and yet there always comes a point where there must be a splitting up of authority. I am interested in knowing why one branch of the Army should have all these different powers centered in it or why it is advisable to divide them up. If there is going to be a duplication of work and a splitting up of authority and a weakening of the service, then we ought not to do this thing.

This much I do say: The time has come to cut down the expenses which grew out of the war. They are never going to be cut down if we leave it to the departments themselves—that is, they will never be cut down as rapidly as they should. There is something in human nature that makes a man who is at the head of a great big organization want to keep it. Pressure comes constantly from employees who want to hold their positions. Unless Congress deals with these questions as they come up, and does it with judgment, but nevertheless with an iron hand, the burdens will continue to exist for many years—burdens from which we ought to be relieved.

I hope that the bill, before it is finally passed, will cut to the very bone along the line I have spoken of. I recognize the fact that there must be probably an increase of pay to necessary officers, and, in so far as that is necessary, I believe it to be justifiable and right; but the multiplication of bureaus and of boards and of devices for keeping employees is a subject that ought to be very seriously dealt with. I have not the slightest doubt that there are 25,000 to 30,000 people employed here in performing work in Washington who ought to have been home in some other employment a year ago. The business of the war ought to be wound up, and it ought to be wound up speedily and efficiently.

We are running an insurance department down here, trying to settle up the claims of men, and an army of men and women are working over reports that are in an interminable jumble. The Government ought to get out of the insurance business. It ought to reinsure the live risks with companies that know how to conduct the business of insurance. It ought to speedily adjust all the losses and all the liabilities, and we ought to send home the people who are down here trying to do something and who do not know how to do it.

I do not suppose there has ever been anything in the history of the world in the shape of insurance that has been managed as inefficiently as the insurance department established by the Government. I do not think anything has ever paralleled it. My opinion is that the sooner the Government gets out of it the better. We should get rid of every one of those war excrescences, and the sooner the better it is going to be for the country. I wanted to make that observation because I think it is time that it was made and acted upon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, what I shall have to say concerning the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] I shall say without reflection upon the record of any service in the Army during the recent war. I am fairly well familiar with the Engineer Corps' record in France, as I had an opportunity of seeing a good deal of the construction which they accomplished over there; likewise, like many other Senators, I have been to many cantonments and other points where the construction division operated in the United States. My own impression is that both of them did good work, and I see no occasion for the friends or the enemies of this amendment indulging in any charges or veiled charges against either service.

Now, just a moment upon the history of the thing. Before we went into the war the construction work of the Army was somewhat scattered. For instance, the Ordnance Department did its own construction and operated the utilities at its arsenals. The Signal Corps also did some construction for itself. The Quartermaster Corps did construction work for itself and for the line of the Army and for the medical service, and also some of the work for the Engineer Corps. The construction work to which I refer is that construction work which is essentially civilian in its character. In other words, it is not military construction, such as the seacoast fortifications and emplacement of guns. That work has always been done by the Engineer Corps and will continue to be done by the Engineer Corps under the terms of the bill.

There was in the Quartermaster Department a so-called construction division—I think that was its name—which had charge of the construction for the Quartermaster Corps, construction for the medical service, and the operation of certain utilities of the posts, the quartermaster officer of the post running the power station, pumping plant, electric light plant, sewer system, drainage, taking care of walks and drives around the posts, keeping them drained and keeping them in trim, looking after the gutters and curbs, and seeing to it that the grounds were generally kept in condition. I say I think that kind of work can not be called, strictly speaking, a soldier's job.

After we got into the war the construction division of the Quartermaster Department was expected in the first instance, I assume, to accomplish all the emergency construction in the war. That job, of course, instantly became an enormous one, larger than anything of its kind, probably, in the history of the world. Indeed, taken as a whole, it was a greater task than the building of the Panama Canal, and it had to be done with a degree of speed which made it utterly impossible for it to be done economically. No one deplores the tremendous expenditure of money more than I do, but where the race is against time and not against the resources of the Treasury, when if we do not get a particular job done by a certain day, the enemy will beat us to it, we have to get that job done, no matter what it may cost. That was largely the case in all our construction efforts during the recent war, whether those efforts were under the construction division or under any other branch of the service or branch of the departments of the Government. So the construction division, I think it was in May of 1917, about a month or more after we entered the war, was separated from the Quartermaster Department and given the work, among other things, of building cantonments. Senators have discussed this question merely in the terms of cantonments, but the cantonments were not to exceed one-half of the job. The construction division had to build all the port terminals; and if one has ever seen the Brooklyn terminal, for example, that enormous series of docks and storage warehouses connected up with railways and railway yards, one can understand something of the immensity of the task not only at Brooklyn, but at Boston, Philadelphia, Charleston, New Orleans, and Norfolk, where similar structures, probably the largest of their kind in the world, were erected by the construction division.

Then, again, in addition to the cantonments, the construction division built all of the structures at the flying fields and operated all the utilities; they built munition factories; they built clothing factories; they built factories and facilities for the manufacture or the production of everything that the Army needed. Wherever it became necessary for the Government to go in and build, the work was all given to the construction division to do. They built great interior storage depots, distributing depots situated at strategical points. If I could remember them all, it would probably take me the rest of the afternoon to describe the number and kind of tasks that the construction division was asked and called upon to perform. So much for describing what that division's function was during the war.

In France the engineers did the constructing. The territory of France was regarded as the theater of operations during the war. The engineers are not only builders, but they are soldiers. If you suggest anything else to an engineer you will get into trouble, and I do not blame them. An engineer is a fighting man as well as a builder. So it has always been the custom, as I recollect, for our Army and for all armies to confide to the Engineer Corps whatever building is necessary in the theater of operations in time of war. So the engineers built the docks at Bordeaux, St. Nazaire, and at Brest, France. They built the storage warehouses in France; they supplemented the railway system that had to be increased and enlarged in France; they built the intermediate stations; they built the narrow-gauge railroads; and they generally supervised the construction work in France, for, theoretically at least, that was the work that was done in the presence of the enemy. It was essentially, or primarily at least, military work, for the support of an army in the field. It was entirely proper that the engineers should do that. No other branch of the service is supposed to do it. It would have been utterly improper for the construction division to do it.

The construction division, however, Mr. President, is to engage in building which is essentially civilian building, if I may use that term in connection with the Army. It builds the barracks which the Army occupies in time of peace; it builds the roads through the reservations which the Army occupies in time of peace; it builds the power stations, the electric-light plants, the gas plants, the sewage systems, the drainage systems which supply the barracks and the reservations which the Army occupies in time of peace. Such construction work is not necessarily a soldier's job; it is really the job of a civilian, who, for the purpose of assuring adequate discipline and coordination of effort within the Army posts and Army reservations, is dressed up in a uniform and in limited numbers only is given a commission in order that he may have authority within the Army post. That is why it is necessary to have some commissioned officers of the Army in general in charge of the construction work at Army posts. If that work is lodged with a civilian, that civilian could not exercise authority inside the post over anybody in the post who was in the category of a soldier or an officer. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that some officers must be at the head of activities which the Army itself needs and in which the Army itself engages.

There is a peculiar piece of history about the present contest which, I think, I might as well tell the Senate, although there are only a few Senators here, which is usually the case, Mr. President, when an important matter is under consideration.

The Quartermaster Department up to about a month ago had been doing everything it could to persuade the committee to put construction under the Quartermaster, contending that that is the place it used to be and that it should go back there. The Engineer Corps has been doing everything it could to get construction work put under the Engineers. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff have urged that construction be placed under the Engineers. The Assistant Secretary of War and a large number of business men who dealt with the Government during the war have urged that it be kept separate. With these conflicting views making the air vibrate with their intensity, the Committee on Military Affairs did its best to listen to the testimony of everybody, which we did, Mr. President, day after day in our subcommittee. To be perfectly frank, when we got through and had heard everybody, from the Secretary of War down, the subcommittee that had charge of the work unanimously agreed that the best thing for the whole Army was to have a separate construction division. We have not great pride of opinion, and we know our judgment is not infallible, but that is the conclusion we reached after listening to all the testimony and incidentally talking with, I do not know how many, officers and others interested.

I have said that the Quartermaster General wanted this work put back under him. He also wanted transportation put back under him, although the Quartermaster Corps had broken down with the transportation problem during the war. He also wanted the finance department put back under him. Mind you, Mr. President, during all this time the Engineer Department was fighting to get hold of construction.

There is a little bit more, Mr. President, in this contest than the mere saving of money. There is the thirst for power. I have encountered that tendency in the Army in several of its branches, that each one of them wants to grow, and if there is any discussion taking place as to whether a certain department or branch of the service is to be eliminated or is to be shifted in one direction or another, it is astounding how many department chiefs will come around and say, "Give it to me." That is just what has been going on.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I am interested in the suggestion about the thirst for power. Did that in any wise suggest the idea of compulsory military training?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; power for the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. No; but in the case of the officers who were suggesting it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think, under the terms of the bill, that their power would be proportionally increased. If the Senator will study the bill, he will see that the citizen officer is the man who does the business under the training.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has made the suggestion that a good deal of the spirit of the thirst for power was responsible for some of the positions taken by the different officers. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I mean in this kind of a controversy.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator think that the thirst for power also had something to do with the activities of those officers who wanted a separate construction division?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no doubt that they are all human and are inspired in a greater or less degree by the same considerations. The Senate subcommittee, however, did not care so much who exercised the power as that the work was done right.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question on a more serious phase of the matter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, I can understand, not only from such information as I had before but from the statement made by the Senator from New York, that there was a real necessity for something like the construction service, as planned by this bill, during the period of the war; but is there such necessity for it now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I come to that a little later on? I intend to cover it.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Tennessee has read to the Senate an estimate prepared in the Quartermaster Department showing how advantageous it would be to have the construction division put back into the Quartermaster Department, and what a saving of money it would bring about. I do not know the date of the communication which the Senator from Tennessee has, but it is amazing that it has been put in the RECORD, in view of what the Quartermaster General now says. I have said something about the thirst for power, and I think it might be well to call the attention of the Senate to how, when two departments reach a point in a controversy where there does not seem to be much chance of either one of them getting all it wants, they agreed to divide what there is between them.

Under date of March 17, 1920, the Chief of Engineers, who, mind you, of course, has been contending that construction should go to his department, wrote a letter to the Quartermaster General, in the second paragraph of which he said:

> It is regarded as advisable to have this work of construction and the major maintenance work involving important alterations of structures placed under the Corps of Engineers in order to prevent overlapping and duplication of construction activities in peace and war, and to furnish this most valuable means of training for our Engineer officers in peace for their construction duties in war. It is believed that this work should be turned over to the Corps of Engineers and the operation of utilities left with the various services principally concerned therein.

It will be observed that he does not ask for the utilities. Then he goes on to say:

> I am firmly convinced that the consolidation of the various activities of transportation, motor transport, finance, and operation of utilities at posts under the quartermaster will be far more advantageous and economical than the present multiplicity of agencies with their unnecessary overhead and expense.

In the letter of the Chief of Engineers, he says: "Give me construction, and I think it would be a pretty good thing for you to have transportation and finance." The Quartermaster General replies to that upon the same day in a letter to the Chief of Engineers, in which he says in part:

> I have carefully considered the suggestion contained in the second paragraph of your letter, and, in view of the recent recommendation of the Secretary of War, I am of the opinion that the interests of the service will be as well served if all original and new projects of construction work formerly carried on by the Quartermaster Corps and lately by the construction division were turned over to the Engineer Corps.

Then he goes on to say:

> For the sake of economy and the utilization of supplies and personnel already available in the Quartermaster Corps at Army posts, depots, and other activities of the Quartermaster Corps, it is deemed essential that maintenance and repairs and utilities at such places should be, as heretofore, included in the duties of the Quartermaster Corps.
> The necessity for the operation of utilities being left with the bureau or service responsible for the activity is beyond argument. The functions which have been recently ascribed to utilities officers of the construction division are absolutely essential at both arsenals of the Ordnance Department and depots of the Quartermaster Corps.

And so forth.

So, Mr. President, we see that, when they reach what might be termed an impasse, they sit down and calmly divide the thing between them, and have their letters apparently published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the time the debate is going on in the House of Representatives on the Army reorganization bill; in other words, the Quartermaster Department is entirely willing, as its chief says in this letter, to let the engineers have construction, although for months the Quartermaster Department insisted to us and to everybody with whom they discussed the question that, in the interest of economy, it should go back to them, exactly in line with the statement read by the Senator from Tennessee, which he says was prepared in the Quartermaster Department itself. So, Mr. President, it is not so much a matter of economy; it is a matter of who is to be boss.

Had the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate realized that the chiefs of services could get together and so easily divide the functions of the Army, so easily reach an agreement, and everything would be so lovely, we would not have worked as hard as we did, because we would have said, "Go ahead," and we would have invited, perhaps, all the other chiefs of services in the Army to get together and sit around the table and divide up the whole pot between them. It would have been much easier for us and much simpler.

Now, Mr. President, why a separate construction division? Many people seem to think the construction work of the Army is finished, but it is not. I imagine we are sorry that it is not finished, because if we must go on with it—as we must, to a certain extent—it means that we must appropriate money and impose taxes; but it is not finished. I imagine that no Senator will concontend that the Regular Army, as finally evolved from the pending legislation, will be less than 250,000 men. That Army must be housed. As has been indicated before, it is going to be difficult to house it permanently in these famous cantonments. If the cantonments are to be put in shape to last a few more years for the housing of the Regulars carried in this bill or in the House bill, something like $60,000,000 of appropriations will be necessary. We will also have to build quarters for the officers and for their families—they do not exist to-day in cantonments—and that amount of money would not house the Army permanently in the way in which it must be housed eventually.

We have a number of Army posts in the United States with which Senators are familiar. A few of them are one-company and two-company posts. Quite a number of them are. They have been abandoned, very largely, in the matter of housing troops. It is most uneconomical to keep them up. The one company or the two companies of soldiers are separated from the service to an extent that is very bad for morale, discipline, and efficiency; and it is the proper and natural policy for the Army to gather into larger units in the larger posts. Now, we have a number of those larger posts. Their total capacity to-day is only 93,000 officers and men. If we have an Army of 250,000 men—which is 30,000 less than that carried in this bill and 50,000 less than that carried in the House bill—we will have to build quarters within the next six or eight years, we will say, for 157,000 men at the minimum; 157,000 men at the minimum will need quarters, barracks built of brick, concrete, substantial construction, served with water supply, served with sewer systems, electric lights, and all the utilities and facilities that must go in a permanent Army post. I assume that that cost will be distributed over a term of years. It is not contemplated in this bill, and it is not contemplated in the annual appropriation bill so far as I know. There is a great, big construction problem right there, a kind of work that the Engineers have never done. I do not say that they are not competent to do it. I think they could do it if put to it; but should we ask the Engineers to do that kind of work in view of the real purpose of Engineer troops?

I can not help thinking of the Engineers primarily as troops, and not as architects and carpenters and plumbers, as the Senator from Minnesota so often describes the men who have to do this building. My conception of the Engineer Corps is this, and this was the conception of the committee, too—that when war breaks out the Engineer Corps go to the front. They do not stay back in the permanent Army posts; they do not stay back in the barracks, in the power plants, running the sewers, keeping them in repair, and keeping the walks and drives in repair. They go forward with the troops; they accompany the Army into the field, and they do whatever building and construction is necessary for an army in the field, and they do it mighty well, and that is their job. They are military engineers. This job of building a barrack in the piping times of peace, thousands of miles from any possible theater of war, is a civilian's job. It is a business man's job. We have to take a few business men or civilians and dress them up in officers' uniforms to give them the necessary authority within the posts; that is all. That has to be done. It is done in the Navy, as I recollect.

The Navy has its Bureau of Yards and Docks which does the civilian construction for the Navy separately from the Bureau of Steam Engineering. There is a Bureau of Construction and Repair in the Navy which does naval construction, builds the battleships, and so on. The Bureau of Steam Engineering, as I recollect, designs and builds the machinery, the technical work connected with naval construction; but the Bureau of Yards and Docks builds the structures in the navy yards, the barracks, the buildings in which the factories are located. It takes care of the utilities, the power plants, the drainage, and all that civilian work. This construction division of the Army is to correspond exactly, as I understand the Navy—and I do not understand it at all thoroughly—it is to correspond, roughly speaking, with the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy; and the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy is essentially manned by business men who are given rank. It is commanded by business men, as I recollect. If I am inaccurate about that, I should be glad to be corrected; but that is my general conception of the situation.

Now, as to the saving:

The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has been offered before we have had an opportunity to make a redistribution of the commissioned and enlisted personnel in this bill as the result of the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I think it was the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], or perhaps it was the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who asked me the other day whether the striking out of compulsory universal military training would not make it possible to reduce the number of officers in this bill. I said that it would; that the number could be reduced by 1,007. I do not think, however, and the committee does not think, that the enlisted strength of the bill can be reduced. In fact, the enlisted strength will have to bear a greater burden of national defense without universal military training than with it; but we can reduce the officers, because a certain number of those officers would have been engaged in helping in the training.

In the series of amendments which I intended to introduce on behalf of the committee, but which the Senator from Wisconsin asked me to postpone introducing until the Senate could pass upon this question of a separate construction division, we have arranged for a redistribution or a reallotment of the commissioned officers, and also, to some extent, of the enlisted men of the Army, among the several branches and services. A considerable number of enlisted men would have been required for the universal military training, as is, of course, well understood; in fact, a great many more enlisted men than officers. By the reallotment we ask the Senate, always keeping within the maximum number of 280,000 enlisted men, to build up the Infantry and other combat branches, and to reduce by the same aggregate number some of these services. One of them is construction.

The bill has been criticized on the ground that it allots 200 officers and 6,000 men to the construction service. With universal military training we would have to have that number, because if you bring 500,000 men into the cantonments and Army posts over the country you can see that the number of officers needed to run the utilities and keep the places in repair, and the number of enlisted men who are really acting in large measure as bosses of gangs of civilian laborers, would be much greater than if you did not have universal military training. But now we are not going to have universal military training, and we propose to cut the 6,000 enlisted men down to 4,000, and to cut the 200 officers down to 150, and to transfer those 2,000 enlisted men to some combat branch of the service. Of course, it is the combat branches that will have to bear the burden, with no universal miltiary training.

We propose to do that in several cases connected with these services. We do it in the Transportation Service. We propose to ask the Senate to reduce the allotment in transportation from 12,500 men down to 8,000 men. Now, why do we do that? If you had 500,000 young men coming into the training camps every year, under universal military training, you can see that the transportation problem which would be assigned to the Transportation Service in and about those cantonments and camps would be very large; but with that very largely taken out, we propose to take 4,500 men from the transportation allotment, transfer them, and allot them to some combat branch.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. The announcement that the Senator makes about reducing the force of officers and men in the Transportation Service is very encouraging; but the Senator also referred to similar reductions in other branches. The enlisted men, of course, will go back to the combat divisions; but what about these officers that you take out? Will they still be kept in the service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We reduce the total number of officers by 1,007.

Mr. NELSON. You would reduce the total number by 1,007 because of adopting the voluntary system?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. But in the case of these officers, now, you reduce the 200 officers in the Transportation Service by one-half, if I have understood the Senator correctly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; by 50.

Mr. NELSON. What would you do with the other 50 officers? Would they be retained somewhere in the service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. It would not reduce the aggregate of officers in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not by that one change alone.

Mr. NELSON. No; but by that and similar changes in other branches to which the Senator refers, would it reduce the aggregate of officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By 1,007.

Mr. NELSON. That is all?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and with this proposed new allotment—this, I think, is important—this bill will carry under the Quartermaster Service and the Construction Service and the Transportation Service the same number of men that the House bill carries in the Quartermaster Service, which is to take charge, under the terms of the House bill, of construction and transportation.

So the bill as it will be presented to the Senate, when I have a chance to present the amendments, making the redistribution and reallotment of officers and men, will carry the same number of officers and enlisted men for these three separate services, Quartermaster, Transportation, and Construction, as the House bill carries for Quartermaster alone, and under which construction and transportation are to be placed. So I think we will not save very much, Mr. President, by abolishing the construction division, even in this matter of overhead.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator take the position that creating a separate division adds no expense to overhead?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President, I do not.

Mr. LENROOT. I should think not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not, of course. There must be an office force, not very large in this case, especially in time of peace. It will take separate offices, and I suppose the rental cost should be charged up against the cost of maintaining the Army; but the committee nevertheless felt that this kind of work should be done by a separate service in the Army; that it ordinarily would be better done, more promptly done, that the business men of the country, the civil engineers of the country, who must be called upon to submit bids and plans, could deal better with this kind of an organization than with an organization which is composed primarily of soldiers. I think I am accurate in saying that in the construction division there are not over three or four Regular officers, and there never have been, I think. There may have been more than that during the peak of the work during the war. The officers in the construction division have been civilians, as I said, dressed up in uniforms.

Gen. Marshall, when he came before us, said, very frankly, "We are the one purely noncombatant branch of the Army. We are not even subject to combat conditions to the extent that the Medical Corps is, because the Medical Corps in some instances is subject to very severe combat conditions." The construction division personnel is never supposed to go forward with the Army. It is not a part of the fighting army at all. It does not pretend to be. It is the business man's side alone in this matter of building, making contracts, making adjustments, taking care of real estate problems in connection with the land which the Government owns and which is used for Army reservations.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] reminds me that the construction division has not entered into any cost-plus contracts since January 1, 1919. It is not the policy of the construction division at present nor has it been for over a year.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator states it is not the policy of the construction division. Gen. Marshall defends it and expresses the hope that Congress will no longer prohibit it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When we come to a discussion of that, Mr. President, I have no sympathy with the cost-plus system myself. If it was a bad system, why did the Secretary of War let it be put into operation? Where is the fault? Assuming that it was an unwise thing to do, somebody issued an order to Gen. Marshall and he carried it out. Later on, is it unnatural that he should defend it? That is not very unnatural. He probably has some pride in his work. I think he is entitled to it. He probably wants to vindicate everything they did, if he possibly can. He is a human being, and he is conscious of his earnest endeavors to make the thing a success. The Secretary of War and the Council of National Defense approved of this system, and it is not surprising that the chief of the construction division attempts to defend it later on as a policy. I do not think he defends some of the costs that were involved. Some of my impressions as to how these bills were run up are a little different from those of the Senator from Wisconsin. The reason why plumbers and steam fitters were sitting around playing cards was not as a result of the cost-plus system. It was because some other group of workmen were on strike; and those plumbers and steam fitters, or whatever they were, did not have anything to do, and the contractor who was employing them could not afford to let them go; he had to hold them there, for any moment they might be required to go to work again.

I was at Newport News myself, Mr. President, when, on a moment's notice, a great group of workmen employed by a contractor, not by the construction division, went on strike just at the time when we were using every energy we possessed to finish that port of embarkation to make it possible to ship troops and supplies to Europe. Just at one of those crucial moments a gang of men rushed out, which threw the whole plant out of kelter, and it is perfectly true that a lot of other men who had not struck, who were perfectly willing to work, had to sit around in idleness. That thing happened again and again. It happened in the shipyards.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to assure the Senator that he has not read this testimony. It is a very exceptional case, where they did not work on account of a strike. The testimony is overwhelming that they loafed upon the job because the contractor wanted them to do it, because he was making more money when they loafed instead of working.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am not ready to attach all the blame to any one group of people. I know money was wasted in the matter of work not being done promptly. There were several causes contributing. It was not all of it the cost plus by any means.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to ask the Senator from New York if a reason for the cost-plus contract to begin with is not to be found in the fact that it was thought it was the best way, perhaps the only way, to get this great work done within the time it was necessary to be done. Of course, it may have been a mistaken notion, but I think that was the reason for the cost-plus contract. It was thought that we would not be able to complete the contracts and get the work done within the 90 days within which it should be done unless they entered into that kind of a contract. If it was an evil, it was a necessary evil, so to speak.

Mr. POMERENE. There was another reason, as I have been informed, namely, that the contractors themselves often could not intelligently bid upon the work, because they did not know when they could get their material or at what price they could get it, or what price they would have to pay for labor. I have not any doubt that there have been serious abuses growing out of the cost-plus plan.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly; I think the Senator from Ohio suggests a very natural element or condition involved in these contracts at the time they were made and making a reason for that particular kind of contract.

Since the 1st of January, 1919, as stated by the Senator from New York, all contracts have been lump-sum contracts, and, as I understand it, and by direction of the Secretary of War, there must be at least three bids on each contract before the contract can be let.

Mr. CALDER. I wish to add to what was said by the Senator from Ohio, that undoubtedly a great many contractors refused to bid on this work during the war, and that was a reasonable thing, because they were afraid of not being able to get material and labor. In time of peace under no circumstances should the cost-plus contract be permitted. It is against every business principle.

Then, too, a cost-plus contract during a war, and in time of peace, too, encourages men to make the charges pile up; it encourages men to loaf; it encourages timekeepers often to put men on who did not work, as I have heard of some cases. The whole principle might be wrong in time of peace, but in time of war very often you are unable to get people to do work unless you have some such system.

Mr. LENROOT. I grant what the Senator says is true; it would be impossible to get bids. But, as a practical man and a contractor, as is the Senator from New York, does he not think it would have been very much cheaper for the Government to have hired outright supervision, and paid a good round sum for it, not depending on the cost of the work?

Mr. CALDER. I think so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a letter I have received from a representative of the Chamber of Commerce and the Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash. The members of this organization have taken a great deal of interest in military matters. They have been brought in touch especially with the Quartermaster Department there, and they have called my attention to certain matters, and asked me to look into it very carefully. I just got the letter; there are a great many other matters I have to give attention to, and it is impossible for me to look into this question fully.

I know the Senator from New York has given a great deal of attention to it, and I have not any doubt but that the committee has carefully considered the situation, as they have referred to it here. I am inclined to think the Senator from New York probably has covered the matter pretty fully in the remarks which he has made, and to which I have listened; but I want to call his attention to the statements in this letter, and probably he can make a brief statement with reference to it.

They refer to the fact that in the Army bill, as it passed the House, the work of the Quartermaster Department was consolidated in that department, and that the Senate has separated that somewhat, and, referring to the Quartermaster Corps, they say that—

> This particular section of the Army is the one with which the business community comes in closest touch. It has charge of all the buying, handling of supplies, and disbursing of money for those supplies. Under these circumstances we feel that we have a very full knowledge of how this department should operate. From that knowledge it is my best judgment that it is a grievous mistake to divide this service into several distinct and separate departments. To do so results in divisions of responsibility and makes it almost impossible to secure efficient operation in a territory as remote from Washington as is the Puget Sound country.
> Our organization is emphatically on record in favor of the continuance of this service as the old Quartermaster Department with the centralization of all of these powers in one responsible service.

I would like the views of the chairman of the committee stated a little more directly, probably, than he has done, especially directed to those particular suggestions in the letter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the writer of the letter evidently wants the transportation service, the construction service, and the finance service all put back under the quartermaster. That is what the quartermaster had, generally speaking, in addition to his other normal functions, when we went into the war; but it broke down. It was too much to put under one department. The committee was convinced, after listening to testimony from a very large number of people on every conceivable side of the question, that it was too much to ask of any one department to take care of all the financing of the Army, the pay of the troops, the pay of officers, the establishment of credits, the forwarding of funds, making arrangements with banks all over the world, payment for supplies, payment of troops, transporting all the troops and matériel by rail and by water and by animal-drawn transport and by motor trucks. Add to that all the building, such as is done by the construction service, and I do not believe that one man can carry such a burden as the head of the department. It would really mean another general staff; he would have to have so many assistants.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Was the committee satisfied from its investigations that the Quartermaster Department had not done these things efficiently during the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Quartermaster Department had to give them up in the first three or four months of the war; it could not do them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Were all these various lines of activity turned over to different branches of the military service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were. There is a separate construction division. There are two transport services now in the Army. Our bill proposes to have but one. To-day, as the Senator knows, there is a Transportation Service and a Motor Transport Corps. We propose to put both of these together and to add to them animal-drawn and water transport.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Making it a separate service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We propose to include all kinds of transportation for the Army in one service. Gen. Pershing was very clear about that. He said above everything else transportation ought to be a separate service; it has become such an enormous problem in these modern days, when the supplies of an army are so tremendous.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The action of the committee follows the recommendation of Gen. Pershing?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not in connection with the construction division.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not referring to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does as to transportation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am referring to the general distribution of the former powers of the Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does with the one exception that the separate construction division is not in line with his suggestion. Separate transportation is, separate chemical warfare is, and separate finance is.

Mr. President, the Senator has called my attention to a letter. The Quartermaster Department has been carrying on a nation-wide propaganda on these questions to such an extent that the Secretary of War addressed a letter to me as chairman of the committee, calling my attention to it, although the Secretary of War, it is fair to say, in the matter of the construction department being separate, is not in agreement with the committee.

It turns out that the Quartermaster Department, through some of its officers, has been writing to a large number of people all over the United States, people who have had business connections with the Quartermaster Department, who have supplied the department with goods by contract, asking them if they did not think the transportation and finance and construction had better be under the Quartermaster Department, and the letters came back saying, "Yes; we do," very naturally. I think it is an unfortunate thing to have done and I regret that it was done. That is not quite the way to get a free expression of opinion, but it has not influenced the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope the Senator will not do that. I understand there is a desire for an executive session.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we ought to have a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition, but I am willing to have it go over. I withdraw my suggestion for the present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 14, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 13, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, let the light of heaven shine in our hearts that we may hold our course to Thee, deal wisely, justly, with our fellow men.

We are confronted with grave problems which touch the welfare of every home throughout the land. Impart wisdom, strength, courage, to those in authority, that order may come out of chaos, peace out of contentions, that strife may be swallowed up in victory and brotherly love prevail. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. KAHN reported the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, together with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana reserves all points of order.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN WAR DEPARTMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House resolution 515 and House Report 816.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House resolution 515 and House Report 816, with Mr. WOOD of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] has 39 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] has 34 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, speaking for the gentleman from Michigan, we will not consume any more of our time. I ask unanimous consent, however, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] had not expected to go on immediately after convening this morning, but intended to wait until after the gentleman from Michigan had used the remainder of his time. I shall myself use a portion of the time while we are waiting for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] to come into the Chamber.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this resolution which is presented to the House at this time is a resolution which, in the opinion of the majority members of the committee, was the proper thing for this committee to present to the House. There seems to have been among some of the Members of the House, from the beginning of the investigation which this committee has made, a misunderstanding as to the extent of its jurisdiction. The select committee which was appointed by the Speaker at the beginning of this Congress to investigate expenditures in the War Department was not a committee with legislative functions or with the right to suggest legislation, but was more in the nature of a committee to investigate and to report so that the House and the other committees of the House might have the benefit of its investigations in future legislation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Bankhead	Black	Blanton
Anthony	Begg	Blackmon	Boles
Bacharach	Bell	Bland, Mo.	Boober
Brinson	Fuller, Mass.	Lufkin	Sells
Browne	Gallagher	McAndrews	Shreve
Burke	Ganly	McArthur	Small
Caldwell	Garland	McGlennon	Smith, Ill.
Campbell, Kans.	Garrett	McKiniry, N. Y.	Smith, Mich.
Campbell, Pa.	Goldfogle	McLane	Smith, N. Y.
Cantrill	Goodall	Maher	Smithwick
Caraway	Gould	Mann, Ill.	Snell
Carew	Graham, Pa.	Martin	Steagall
Casey	Greene, Mass.	Mason	Stedman
Chindblom	Hamill	Moore, Va.	Steele
Clark, Fla.	Hamilton	Morin	Stevenson
Classon	Harrison	Nelson, Wis.	Sullivan
Costello	Heflin	Nicholls, S. C.	Summers, Wash.
Crago	Hill	Nolan	Sumners, Tex.
Cramton	Hudspeth	O'Connell	Tague
Cullen	Hulings	Overstreet	Taylor, Tenn.
Curry, Calif.	Husted	Parker	Tinkham
Darrow	Johnson, S. Dak.	Peters	Upshaw
Denison	Johnston, N. Y.	Phelan	Walters
Dewalt	Jones, Pa.	Porter	Ward
Dominick	Juul	Rainey, J. W.	Wason
Drane	Kelly, Pa.	Rodenberg	Whaley
Eagan	Kennedy, Iowa	Rowan	Williams
Edmonds	Kennedy, R. I.	Rowe	Winslow
Ellsworth	Kitchin	Sabath	Wright
Freeman	Langley	Scully	Zihlman
Fuller, Ill.	Larsen	Sears

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration House resolution 515, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 317 Members answered to their names, and he reported the list of the absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I was stating, when the call of no quorum interrupted what I had to say, that the Committee on Expenditures did all it could do when it brought these facts to the House and now offers this resolution to refer them to the proper department of the Government to have them investigated and any infraction of law prosecuted. It will be noted by the rule that has been offered here that the minority of the committee have their choice of doing one of two things. The rule provides, Mr. Chairman, that the minority may offer an amendment in the way of a substitute at the conclusion of the debate or that a motion to recommit may be made on the resolution. I am informed by the minority of the committee that the second method will be adopted and that there will be a motion to recommit this resolution to the Committee on Expenditures, with the suggestion and recommendation that they bring back another report setting out particularly the names of the persons whom they want the Attorney General to have investigated. I trust that that motion to recommit will not prevail. The resolution in its present form is the thing the House ought to do if it does anything in this particular. It would not be proper, in my judgment or in the judgment of a majority of the committee, for the House to say to the Attorney General which particular person he should have investigated by a grand jury or what particular civil suit should be recommended. If the facts are laid before the Department of Justice as they are in this report, then it is a duty that devolves upon that department to ascertain for itself what particular person should be prosecuted or what particular civil action ought to be begun. This is the only suggestion I have to make about the matter, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the resolution, as it is presented by this committee, will be passed. I now yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE]. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-three minutes. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 33 minutes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, this duty that was placed upon subcommittee No. 2, of which I had the honor to be chairman, has not been a pleasant duty. The only pleasant recollection that I will have of that work is the recollection of the friendship and support that I was given by my colleague [Mr. MCCULLOCH] and my distinguished friend of the minority [Mr. DOREMUS]. [Applause.] These things, of course, are pleasant, but an investigation of a matter of this character is never pleasant to anyone. The man or the set of men to be investigated do not enjoy it, neither does the right-thinking man enjoy lifting the veil and discovering that perhaps some of his fellow citizens have been guilty of misconduct during a war. So it has not been a pleasant task. In the first place, I wish to mention the chart to which your attention was called yesterday by Mr. DOREMUS. The chart in question should not have been designated Camp Sherman. It was simply a chart representing the average of all the 16 cantonments; the average time of beginning work, the 21st of June; average number of carpenters employed at various camps, 2,400; and those facts taken together are the basis on which the chart was made. I am not going into a discussion of it. On the pending resolution I hope that no man will excuse himself from voting for that resolution on the ground that we did not specify and point out the particular individuals we desired to see prosecuted. Personally we have no interest in prosecuting anyone. More than that, it would be impossible for us to point out all men who might be connected up with some of the conduct of the men mentioned in our report. I mention only one case. Take the Tragelis case at Camp Sherman. Tragelis was a British adventurer who came to this country and became involved in what appears to be graft in connection with the automobiles at that camp. He undoubtedly had coconspirators. He was not alone, and it was impossible for us to point out those men. Therefore all that we can do is to transmit the testimony as it is to the Attorney General and let him proceed, if he deems there is sufficient evidence to warrant it. I was amused at my good friend from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] yesterday when he undertook in his masterly way to bolster up his case by referring to me and quoting from the testimony in which I said, with reference to the construction corps, that I was proud of its record, and as an American proud of the record of our country. I am truly proud of the record our country made in that Great War. It only demonstrated to me what I have always contended, that we are the greatest and most powerful Nation on the face of the earth, with more potential power to get into action quickly and do things than any other people.

But that does not signify that in saying those things I condone the offense of persons who take advantage of the opportunity of war to enrich themselves. I am proud of the achievements of the old Continentals in winning our liberty, but I do not approve of the conduct of the scoundrel who held up the money and compelled the boys to march with bare feet at Valley Forge on the frozen ground during that struggle. I am proud of the achievements of our country in the Civil War, but I do not have any pride in the men who laid the foundation of some of the greatest fortunes in this country to-day out of the blood and tears of that war. I am proud of our record in the Spanish-American War, but I do not condone nor do I give my approval but I add my condemnation and execration of the men who in the Spanish War took advantage of the war time to enrich themselves. And so in this war I am proud of the final result as any American should be, but I do not think that in the pride of the success of our entire Nation we should condone and excuse men who have enriched themselves out of the sacrifices of their fellow men in carrying on that war. [Applause.]

Just a word about Mr. O'Connor. He is a man whom I never met until I employed him to make the survey at Camp Grant. He was recommended to me as a capable construction man. He was also recommended by the emergency construction committee down here as a man worthy to have a contract, but he never got one. I went to him and said, "Now, Mr. O'Connor, I do not know you; I have no purpose to serve but to get at the truth. I want you to go to Camp Grant, inasmuch as you are a practical contractor and builder, and make a survey of that camp and bring the truth back to me." He went there. He made a survey upon which to estimate the cost. He came back and told us what he would have been willing to have taken the contract to build that camp for at that time, taking into consideration the prices of material and labor that then prevailed. My good friend from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] on yesterday pointed out that he left out certain things; that he did not include refrigerators; that he did not have certain other little things included in his estimate. That is true. He did not. But Mr. O'Connor had an item of $251,000 in his estimate for overhead expense. He had another item of $460,000 for profit, out of which he could pay incidental expenses, making a total of $711,000 to cover all incidental matters that were brought out by Mr. DOREMUS, and other matters that you will find if you will read the record of the hearings.

But suppose that Mr. O'Connor was mistaken by a million dollars. Suppose he made an error of $2,000,000, which I do not think he did, yet the waste at Camp Grant is something that would bring the blush of shame to any American who desires to see his country's rights protected.

Mr. DOREMUS says:

Let us go back two or three years; go back to the time of the declaration of war and see what the condition of the country was at that time.

Yes; I am willing to go back. When the declaration of war came business in this country was suspended. Every contractor that came before our committee testified that he did not have anything to do. Hundreds of them with great organizations stood ready and willing to give their services and their organizations to the Government to do this construction work in order that they might keep their organizations together. Did they get the job? Oh, no. They tell us that labor was hard to get. Remember, friends, about that time we did another thing. We passed a draft law. We put a provision in it that men who were engaged in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, might be excused, and the rush of the slackers to buy lead pencils and try-squares and get into the work of being carpenters was something that had never been seen in this country before. Remember that when these 16 cantonments were constructed the draft was not then on, and there was no lack of help; and I contended then, and I contend now, that there was no necessity for the cost-plus system of contract. The engineers could have gone on and by the purchase-and-hire method have constructed these camps. The contractors could have gone on and by the unit system of putting up these buildings at so much per thousand feet, as Mr. O'Connor figured it, could have done it that way. All that could have been done. The unit system could have been used in putting in the utilities and would have reduced that sort of expenditure, and there was absolutely no real necessity for it, in my judgment. But they say to us it was necessary, and many of these contractors and men who supported it said, after the exigency had passed, that it should not be used. But did they stop it? After they built the 16 cantonments did they stop that infamous system? No. It went on, and it was in vogue in this country when the armistice was signed, and it was not only in vogue in the construction of buildings but all down the line. And in most cases men who made contracts with the Government were getting their full cost price, buildings constructed for them in many instances, and a percentage. And that is not all. We thought, of course, when the upset fee of $250,000 as a maximum was fixed, a man would go on to the camp and build it. Even our good friend, ex-Congressman Bulkley, from Ohio, testified to that. He was connected with the emergency construction committee, in a legal capacity, and he testified he thought that was to be done; but it was not.

There was a provision in that contract that permitted the paying out of hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars to subcontractors, and I will put a list of those in my speech at this point for your information:

Total fees paid to contractors for construction of National Army cantonments.

	Amount.	Total fees.	Estimated cost of cantonment.
Camp Custer:
General contractors	$420,077.71
Subcontractors	148,260.70

North Camp Jackson, Artillery Camp		112,438.36	12,710,720.00
Camp Lewis: [1]
General contractors		348,735.16	9,231,420.00
Camp Lee:
General contractors	517,484.24
Subcontractors	123,706.08
		641,190.43	19,060,920.00
Camp Meade:
General contractors	456,061.91
Subcontractors	223,561.84
		679,623.75	18,614,020.00

[1] Camp Lewis is known as the largest and best equipped cantonment in the country. To the cost of this cantonment as shown in this statement has been added an amount to make it equal with other northern construction, that is 6 per cent of the cost; however it should be noted that this cantonment was most economically constructed, due to the fact that there were no subcontractors.

Average fees per cantonment as estimated from available records, $492,233.04.

I want to cite one instance. At Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., Rinehart & Dennis were the principal contractors. R. L. Thomas, of Charlottesville, got the contract for putting in the plumbing and heating for $1,308,159.46, at a 7 per cent fee. He took a young man at Petersburg, by the name of Harrison, and gave him the subcontract for 1 per cent. He did all the work, got his 1 per cent, and Mr. Thomas, if you will read the testimony—which I will insert herewith, so that you can read it—testified that the Government paid all his help that he had out there; that he was not out one cent. He drew down $78,000 and did not do a thing for it, in consideration of that contract, except he said that he paid his board down there and his living expenses. That is a sample of what was going on in this country under that cost-plus system. The following is the testimony that I have referred to:

TESTIMONY OF MR. WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, JR., PETERSBURG, VA.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Harrison, please state your full name to the reporter.

Mr. HARRISON. William Henry Harrison, jr.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Where is your home?

Mr. HARRISON. Petersburg, Va.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I will ask you, Mr. Harrison, whether or not you had any subcontract for construction work at Camp Lee under Rinehart & Dennis?

Mr. HARRISON. I was associated with Mr. R. L. Thomas in the plumbing and heating contract at Camp Lee, Va.

The amount of the job was $1,308,159.46, and I received 1 per cent of that and did the job.

Mr. MCKENZIE. What was your fee?

Mr. HARRISON. One per cent.

Mr. MCKENZIE. What did that amount to?

Mr. HARRISON. $13,081.59.

Mr. MCKENZIE. What was the total fee?

Mr. HARRISON. $91,000—7 per cent of the $1,308,159.46. To be exact, the total fee was $91,571.15. That was 7 per cent of the gross amount. We had a contract with Rinehart & Dennis, which was confirmed by Washington. Washington said it was a percentage contract—a scale contract. If your work amounted to so much—that is, if it amounted to a certain percentage—you would receive a certain per cent; if it amounted to a larger sum, you received less, and if it amounted to a smaller amount, you received a greater per cent. Now, our contract came within the 7 per cent amount, amounting to $1,308,000, roughly speaking, and our fee was approximately $91,000; and I personally received 1 per cent of the total amount, or one-seventh of the fee.

Mr. MCKENZIE. And the remainder of it went to Mr. Thomas?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. The man who originally had the subcontract?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

(Pages 2658–2659.)

Mr. MCKENZIE. Did you have men in Petersburg who were qualified and responsible to do this work, that could have done this work, and who were desirous of doing this work?

Mr. HARRISON. I can only answer for myself when I tell you that I took the plumbing and heating contract and relieved Mr. Thomas entirely of the engineering or the laying out of the job and of the actual performance of the job, and the batting average at Washington kept among all 16 cantonment contractors, I led the entire 16 by 200 per cent batting average, and I was a Petersburg man.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I want to ask you another question. You got 1 per cent?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. And who did the engineering? Who looked after this work? What did Mr. Thomas do?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Thomas?

Mr. MCKENZIE. Yes; he got 6 per cent. What did Mr. Thomas do for which he was paid 6 per cent?

Mr. HARRISON. After the work was started and well under way, Mr. Thomas was a stranger to me. He simply knew me by reputation. Mr. Thomas was a very cold business man. After Mr. Thomas and I had been associated together for 30 days he realized that I could handle the work perhaps, according to his notion, better than he could, and he let me continue with the work, and he got another contract down there.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Where at? At that same camp?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; he got the sheet-metal contract. He left me entirely to perform the plumbing and heating contract.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Personally I feel that I would like to congratulate you as one man who rendered service to the Government at a fee that was very reasonable. It strikes me that while perhaps others were getting liberal fees for their services, you were rendering services at what I would call a very reasonable fee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. McKenzie, that was bad business dealing on my part, when everyone else on the job was getting rich.

(The witness withdrew.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. R. L. THOMAS, CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

(Page 2662.)

* * * * * * *

Mr. MCKENZIE. Did you have anything to do with the contract for the plumbing and heating?

Mr. THOMAS. I had the contract for the plumbing and heating also.

Mr. MCKENZIE. You got the original subcontract, did you not, and then took in Mr. Harrison?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir; it was a percentage cost-plus job.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Can you give us from memory about how many men you had there, superintendents and foremen, that were paid by the Government, and also men that were paid out of your own funds?

Mr. THOMAS. We did not have anybody there. The Government paid all that were on that contract.

Mr. MCKENZIE. And you got a straight 6 per cent?

Mr. THOMAS. Seven per cent.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Harrison got the 1 per cent and you got the remaining 6 per cent?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Mr. MCKENZIE. What was the total amount of your fee?

Mr. THOMAS. I think it was somewhere around ninety-one thousand and odd dollars.

Mr. MCKENZIE. And no one participated in that fund with you?

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. You were not required to make any contribution to the Rinehart & Dennis Co. in consideration of your receiving the contract, or anything of that kind?

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. It was a straight-out 7 per cent contract, so far as you were concerned, with the Rinehart & Dennis Co. when you went into it later on?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. You took Mr. Harrison in and he received 1 per cent and he superintended the work?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. The Goverment paid you for all your overhead?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. And you got a straight, clean fee?

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir; we did not. They did not pay for our board at the hotel. They did not pay all our expenses. You would call that overhead, wouldn't you? I do not know about it, but I want to say that they did not do that.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I presume that would be living expenses that every man has to bear in every line of business which he is engaged in.

Remember, my friends, we are not out looking for some particular contractor; we are not seeking particularly to put some one man in the penitentiary. We are striving, or, at least, I am striving, to carry this investigation through on a higher plane than pursuing some little grafter to cover. It has been carried on with a view of forever condemning that system of work in order that our Government, if another emergency arises, will never permit a few men to come to Washington, as was done, and set themselves up as an emergency committee and draw up contracts without a single protection to the Government.

It is said the Government was protected. Now, let us see. Every nail that was thrown away, every board that was spoiled, every sack of cement that was left out in the weather and went to the bad, every hour that was loafed by the workingmen, added to the profit of the contractor up to the point of his maximum fee, and after that had been reached what incentive did he have other than patriotism to protect the interests of his country? I want to say right here, in my judgment, those men were not guilty of any crime. They took those contracts under a system provided down here in Washington, and, more than that, those contracts were handed out to the men they wanted to have them. Oh, they say, "They are honest men. They are good men. They would not do anything to take advantage of the people." I hope that is true. But oh, my friends, think of it! With that sort of a system in vogue, where would we have been if bad men had been in charge? That is the point.

Where would we have been if men with designing minds had been in charge of this work? Why, we would have had no protection whatever. I say without fear of contradiction that this cost-plus system is the most damnable curse that was ever visited upon a country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Not only did it rob us of many millions of the people's money, but when the good old mothers were sitting up knitting socks for the boys, when you were walking the streets of your little town begging men to buy a $50 Liberty bond or a $100 Liberty bond to help out the Government, and perhaps going to the bank to borrow the money, is not it most exasperating when you realize that at that instant the Government was turning over $78,000 profit to the man who admits in his testimony that he did not do a thing to earn it at all, a sum greater than it was possible to raise in many small towns of the country?

Not only that, but this accursed cost-plus system demoralized labor so that it will take years and years for labor to overcome that demoralization. At the same time your boy who put on the uniform of the United States and sailed across the sea while the submarine was lying in wait for him spent his time in the camps and fields of battle at $30 or $36 a month, do you think he has not a curse in his heart for the men who took advantage of a situation of that kind and allowed his neighbor boys, with a lead pencil and a carpenter's square, claiming to be "carpenters," to go to one of these places and get $6 or $7 a day and double pay for work on Sunday and time and a half for overtime? Do you wonder now that that great army came back from France dissatisfied? Are you surprised that these boys who risked everything are now asking that they be given some compensation by the Government which permitted such a cursed system as that to prevail while they were over on the front? That system, gentlemen, is responsible for the claim now that we owe these boys a bonus. How are you going to get away from it?

And that is not all that it destroyed. It destroyed the organizations of the contractors of this country and put them in a position where they can not get back those organizations. And, oh, the saddest thing of all, the thing that hurts me most, is that good friends of mine, men whom I respect and love, will even now apologize for such a thing. Yes; they will even stand on the floor of Congress and apologize for a system that cost us these millions of the people's money, that destroyed the morale of our boys at home, that put a curse into the heart of every soldier that wore the uniform. Yet they will tell us to forget! The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW], in a speech the other day, said that, and I will include what I want of his remarks in mine. He said, in effect: "Why, to talk about these things now and to make these criticisms is political stuff, and it ought to be forgotten; and when I hear men talking about this thing now it is water under the bridge. Say hooray for the Stars and Stripes."

Oh, how pleasing that must be to the man who profiteered on his country in time of war. Forget it? Yes; if you can. I can not forget it as I stand on the street down here and see a soldier boy, with a leg off, hobbling along on his crutches, and there comes along one of these profiteers in his splendid limousine; I can not forget it. I look at the little cottage out yonder on the hillside, where a little later on will live one of these boys who wore the uniform; and down the road a little farther you see a magnificent mansion, and you ask, "Who lives there?" "Oh, that is the home of Mr. Smith, who had a cost-plus contract during the war, and made his money."

Go over yonder to France, if you will, and stand at the grave where Quentin Roosevelt sleeps, and follow that line where all the heroic boys sleep up to where the heroic son of Harry Lauder fell and sleeps to-day, where they sleep the last long sleep, and then say, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] says, "Forget it!" He says:

> Of course, I would not stand for any kind of postwar extravagance, but the war-time extravagance that grew naturally out of the vast volume of money that had to be voted for speedy action, I think no man should now stop or stoop to criticize; for that water has already passed under the bridge. We were called on, not to see how much money we could save, but to see how quickly we could be sure of saving that flag yonder that inspires us every day—our beautiful flag that Democrats and Republicans together voted money to protect and arms to save.
> It was patriotic to vote and spend and fight together then. In other words, were the glories all American, but only the mistakes Democratic? That is the narrow partisan view. Over against this political charge of extravagance let us drown out the din and the jargon of folly by shouting, "Hooray for the American flag!"
> I think it is a fine thing to just think about our common glory under the new meaning of the "Stars and Stripes." When narrow partisanship dips its tongue into gall and its pen into the frenzy of petty political pillage, let us answer again, "Hurrah for the Stars and Stripes!"

According to the gentleman from Georgia, while Uncle Sam is standing gazing with pained face and tearful eyes to the battle fields where the boys are dying for your country and mine, if certain of our countrymen in the rear pick his pockets, because the robbing is done in time of war it is "water under the bridge" and should be forgotten.

Great God, gentlemen, are you willing to stand for such a proposition? Oh, my friends, Republican or Democrat, cease that sort of talk. Do not let it ever be heard that you are apologizing for a man who would rob his country in time of war! [Applause on the Republican side.] "Hooray for the Stars and Stripes," as the gentleman from Georgia says, when talking of these men. I will tell you, gentlemen, my sentiments.

When I think of these men who enriched themselves at the expense of the American people in time of war, I feel like saying, "Hooray for the stone wall and the firing squad!" [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, my friends, I have not time to talk longer of them, although I would like to. This report means nothing unless it be backed up by legislation. We make certain recommendations, including an amendment to the Constitution, that will make profiteering in time of war treason. [Applause on the Republican side.] We also recommend other things that will protect the American people. I will include these recommendations in my speech, and I want you to read them and I want you to vote for the bills, if they get on this floor, to protect the American people against it, if it ever comes again. And remember, if we pass the proper legislation, the next time that American boys are called upon to fall upon the field of battle, as they lie there with the smoke of battle rolling over them and gazing on that old flag for the last time, they will know and feel that back home not only the old mothers are patriots, not only those who live in minor stations in life are patriots, but that everybody is a patriot, because he has to be under the law. The great mass are patriotic and true and need no law.

I know full well, my good friends, that you can not change the selfishness and avarice of the human heart by legislation. I realize that. But I do know that you can make laws that will take a man who will rob the Government in time of war and make him a traitor, as much as a man who meets you on the field of battle with a gun, and I am for that kind of thing. You gentlemen will agree with me that that is right. No doubt that is where you stand. In your hearts you dare not say, "Oh, well, this money is gone; it went out to labor; it is gone under the bridge; let us forget it."

Friends, I know we can recover only a little of it, but that does not trouble me. The only thing that has troubled and worried me is to think that men claiming to be Americans, claiming to love our country, would so far forget themselves that they would do these things while other men and women were dying for the country which gave them a chance to live. That is what hurts me most. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I submit with my remarks the committee recommendations, as follows:

RECOMMENDATIONS.

I.

Your committee respectfully recommends that legislation be enacted prohibiting any Government construction work being done on a cost-plus basis, either in an emergency or normal times. If it be found necessary in any emergency to begin any work before sufficiently definite plans can be prepared to enable the procurement of lump-sum or unit bids, then such legislation should provide that the construction be proceeded with by the Engineer Corps, either wholly or to such time as bids can be had and the contractor take over the work, proper provision being made for allowance on or reduction of contract by the amount of work at such time accomplished.

II.

Your committee respectfully recommends that the power of the Secretary of War to suspend the requirements relating to advertising, under section 3709 and the amendatory sections, be either entirely withdrawn or be definitely limited so as not to permit him to abrogate the wise public policy of taking competitive bids quickly by other means. Your committee respectfully recommends that such legislation be made broad enough to cover other officers now having similar powers of suspension.

III.

Your committee respectfully recommends that carefully considered legislation be enacted providing that war activities, not military, be carried on under a system to be provided, which shall provide for a fixed definite responsibility as fully and directly as it is fixed in the strictly military operations. Such activities are as surely a part of carrying on the war as strictly military operations. In the language of the letter of instruction from the officer in charge of cantonment construction, all persons so engaged "are just as truly serving their country as if actually placed on the firing line." (A. 11.)

The vagueness and looseness with which it was all carried on in the past war through the indiscriminate, irresponsible calling into a sort of semi-service, of the interested parties themselves, to control their own industries and activities, must never be repeated. Very little, if anything, can be said in proper defense of the system as employed. The most that has been said has been in the nature of an excuse that it occurred or was necessary by our unpreparedness. Certainly the lesson was expensive. By the same token, then, it ought to be heeded, and its repetition prevented. The time to do it is now, for no man and no government is wise enough to say when the next emergency may confront us.

Such legislation, in the judgment of your committee, should be along lines substantially as follows:

1. As to those war facilities and commodities which must be provided by all the outside industries of the country, definite provision should be made by law that they be carried on and the commodities or facilities furnished, under contracts involving complete definite responsibility, and under no circumstances permit wide-open uncontrolled administration and expenditure. In other words, legislation should now be passed providing, as completely as possible, not only for the coordination, marshaling, and using existing agencies and facilities for or in any future emergency, but also providing for the definite control thereof.

2. That, in order to make such control effective, and to prevent the marking up of properties and costs and the boosting of prices because of the mere fact of the existence of a state of war, legislation be now enacted providing that, upon declaration of war by the United States, prices of all properties and commodities necessary in the prosecution of the war, including food, fuel, clothing, building materials, transportation, and all materials used in the production, assembling, or conversion thereof, and of all materials used in or in connection with the manufacture of supplies and equipment for the Army and Navy, including ordnance, quartermasters' supplies, or other articles used by or in connection with the Army or the Navy in the prosecution of the war, shall come automatically under Government control, as a necessary exercise of war power, and likewise all wage scales, and providing that all such prices and wage scales shall remain fixed until further action by the Government in the emergency.

3. As far as possible construction and other tasks which an emergency would produce should at this time be definitely delegated to existing or constituted governmental agencies.

Moreover, in order that such legislation thus fully and carefully considered and enacted may not be superseded or rendered inactive by subsequent hastily prepared and special legislation in the emergency or when the emergency is definitely threatening such present legislation should contain provisions, so far as legally possible, against repeal by implication.

IV.

Your committee respectfully recommends the declaration of policy by legislation that whenever in a war emergency it be found necessary to employ men not then in the military service to have direct charge of work of a military or quasi-military nature, connected with the equipping of troops, or providing facilities for them or similar tasks affecting the prosecution of the war that such persons be temporarily commissioned in the proper corps or arm of the service.

Your committee is moved to make this recommendation through its firm belief that there was no sufficient reason for paying to certain contractors and certain contracting firms fees that were nothing more than salaries in sums ranging from $50,000 to more than $500,000 within a year, whereas persons charged with supervisory responsibility over them on the part of the Government and others performing equally meritorious and technical services received merely the salaries of the military grade to which commissioned.

Your committee expressly states that this recommendation is not to be regarded as in any manner either condoning past or encouraging any future wholesale or unwarranted commissioning.

V.

Your committee respectfully recommends that Congress make provision to place all engineering and construction work for the Army under the Corps of Engineers of the Army. It is moved to this recommendation by several considerations:

1. That the Corps of Engineers is distinctly the technical branch which should handle such work.

2. The initial features of any construction work involve engineering. Therefore they are best fitted to start such work promptly.

3. They are engaged in peace times in a greater variety of engineering and construction projects than any department.

4. The sole ultimate purpose of having any military organization is to be prepared for an emergency. Therefore, if this corps is given, in addition to its present peace-time duties, all construction work, it will then obtain during peace times that complete variety of experience which will best fit it to meet the emergency.

5. Your committee's conviction in making this recommendation is further strengthened by the fact that the Construction Division, as now constituted, appears still, as Maj. Foster so frankly described the emergency committee in 1918, "to be in sympathy with them (the contractors) both in theory and fact." And your committee reaches this conclusion from the fact that in its last annual report, which has just been printed (February, 1920), the Construction Division, notwithstanding the numerous iniquitous results and evils which had been disclosed by the testimony taken before this committee, still emphatically defends the cost-plus system and assails the lump-sum system, with its well-established and recognized safeguards (see annual report, Chief Construction Division, printed in 1920, pp. 94–101), and because, in its solicitude for the contractors, it even surpassed the emergency construction committee in the only exercise of its veto power over acts of the emergency construction committee, of which we have record, by overruling the committee's recommendation for downward revision of certain fees. (R. 2963.)

6. Since the closing of hearings in this investigation your committee has been advised by the War Department that, after careful consideration by the General Staff, it recommended such transfer, and still strongly recommends it. Apparently the only reason why such transfer has not been made by War Department order prior to this time is that after the approval of the Secretary of War of such transfer, in a memorandum from the Director of Operations, dated March 11, 1919, to The Adjutant General for the issuance of the order to become effective at midnight March 31, 1919, the Secretary left Washington, and the Acting Secretary, Mr. Benedict Crowell, at the instance of the Construction Division, countermanded such direction of the Secretary of War for reasons of temporary administrative convenience, which your committee deems insufficient.

VI.

Your committee respectfully recommends legislation definitely restricting the subcontracting evil. It suggests that such legislation be drafted only after careful hearings and consideration by the proper committee. Your committee is moved to make this recommendation from the fact that while it was clearly the intention of those who drew the emergency form of contract that the prime contractor should carry the definite job to completion, yet because of a permissive clause placed in the contract subcontracting was generally practiced, with the result that not only was the prime contractor allowed a percentage, but the subcontractor was also given the usual contractor's percentage, thereby adding useless expense and dissipating responsibility with attendant harmful results.

VII.

Your committee respectfully recommends that an amendment to the Constitution be drawn and submitted to make profiteering in war times treason.

Article III, section 3, of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

"Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort."

Modern war has been called "technical war," and we now know what such technical war means in the straining to the utmost of the resources of the Nation. What can then be more dangerous or give more "aid and comfort" to the enemy than that which seriously strikes at and impairs such resources? All profiteering does this. It is common knowledge that the profiteering during this war has been great, but what proportion of the $22,000,000,000 expended falls under the head of profiteering will probably never be known.

While hindering the Nation's war program by impairing its resources through profiteering is, to that extent, giving aid and comfort to the enemy, still it is clear that it may not be, and probably is not, coupled with such personal adherence to the enemy as is necessary to bring such conduct within the constitutional definition of treason. Your committee appreciates fully the seriousness of enlarging the constitutional definition of treason. However, it assumes it to be a certainty that in every future war a strict censorship will be in force, thus practically suppressing criticism, whether honest or unwarranted. That being so, it would seem additionally necessary, as far as possible, to provide against the recurrence of those things which should be criticized. And it is the deliberate judgment of your committee that effective legislation to prevent profiteering is one such much-needed step.

Realizing, as it believes fully, the seriousness of its recommendation because of the seriousness of the need, your committee respectfully recommends that a constitutional amendment be prepared and submitted for ratification, so amending the constitutional definition of treason as to include that form of unconscionable taking of the Nation's resources in time of war, which is commonly known as profiteering.

It suggests the following language for consideration:

"That Article III, section 3, of the Constitution of the United States be amended by inserting a comma in lieu of the period at the end of the first sentence thereof and adding the following: "or in giving them aid and comfort by injury to the military, physical, or financial resources of the United States."

VIII.

Your committee respectfully recommends that Congress refer this report and the testimony taken to the Department of Justice, with the request or direction that a complete and thorough investigation be made of all cantonment and camp construction projects, to the end of bringing to book those responsible for the losses to the Government, and frauds through which they occurred, both by recoveries and merited penalties. In the judgment of your committee enough irregularities and fraudulent practices have been uncovered by the testimony to warrant such recommendation and complete investigation of the entire cantonment and camp construction work.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, at the conclusion of the debate, it is provided that a substitute resolution may be offered. Is there a substitute resolution to be offered?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report H. Res. 515 to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that commttee, having had under consideration H. Res. 515, referring certain hearings and a report of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department to the Department of Justice, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered on the resolution to final passage.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DOREMUS moves to recommit the resolution and report of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department to that committee with instructions to report to the House a resolution specifying all persons, firms, and corporations which, in the judgment of said committee, should be investigated by the Attorney General in connection with the construction of camps and cantonments, and requesting the Attorney General to institute investigations, either by grand jury or otherwise, for the purpose of beginning civil or criminal proceedings against such persons, firms, or corporations in any case where the facts warrant the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 169, answered "present" 2, not voting 125, as follows:

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the conference report upon the bill H. R. 9065, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8 and 9 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and may appoint a deputy registrar who shall during the unavoidable absence or disability of the registrar perform the duties of that office," and also by adding after "registrars," in the sixth line of said paragraph the words "deputy registrars"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and may appoint a deputy registrar who shall during the unavoidable absence or disability of the registrar perform the duties of that office"; also, on page 1, line 13, of the engrossed bill strike out the period and insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the first paragraph of section 10 be amended to read as follows:

"'That whenever an application for a mortgage loan is made through a national farm loan association, the loan committee provided for in section 7 of this act shall forthwith make, or cause to be made, such investigation as it may deem necessary as to the character and solvency of the applicant, and the sufficiency of the security offered, and cause written report to be made of the result of such investigation, and shall, if it concurs in such report, approve the same in writing. No loan shall be made unless the report is favorable, and the loan committee is unanimous in its approval thereof.

"'The written report required in the preceding paragraph shall be submitted to the Federal land bank, together with the application for the loan, and the directors of said land bank shall examine said written report when they pass on the loan application which it accompanies, but they shall not be bound by said appraisal.'"

"SEC. 3. That the third paragraph of section 11 be amended to read as follows:

"'Third. To fix reasonable initial charges to be made against applicants for loans and to borrowers in order to meet the necessary expenses of the association: Provided, That such charges shall not exceed amounts to be fixed by the Farm Loan Board, and shall in no case exceed 1 per cent of the amount of the loan applied for; to acquire and dispose of property, real and personal, that may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'incurred for agricultural purposes, or incurred prior to the organization of the first farm loan association established in and for the county in which the land is situated'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment, insert the following: "incurred for agricultural purposes, or incurred prior to the organization of the first farm loan association established in and for the county in which the land is situated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disgreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment, insert the following: "$40"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend certain sections of the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916."

EDMUND PLATT,
LOUIS T. MCFADDEN,
MICHAEL F. PHELAN,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEO. P. MCLEAN,
A. J. GRONNA,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

This report differs from the conference report on the same bill, rejected in the House on March 2 (Report No. 684), chiefly in amendments 4 and 7. In amendment No. 4, the matter inserted by the Senate, amending section 7 of the farm loan act, relating to the payment of expenses of the secretary-treasurer, has been stricken out. This took out the whole of section 2, making a renumbering of the sections necessary. The authorization for a reasonable initial charge against applicants for loans is made only in amendment No. 5, amending section 11 of the farm loan act, relating to the powers of the farm loan associations. It thus appears in one place only, instead of two, and is more carefully limited than before—"and shall in no case exceed 1 per cent of the amount of the loan applied for."

In amendment No. 7, referring to loans to liquidate already existing indebtedness of the owner of the land, the following has been inserted in lieu of the former restrictions stricken out by the Senate, "incurred for agricultural purposes, or incurred prior to the organization of the first farm loan association established in and for the county in which the land is situated."

The rest of the report is the same as Report No. 684, the former report of the committee of conference on the same bill. The Senate's method of numbering amendments gave two numbers to each amendment, which made the former report and this one look somewhat complicated. The bill was written to show exactly what changes were made in the law, the words stricken out being stated and also those inserted, with the paragraph as amended then printed in full. In each case this was only one amendment to the law, but in changing the wording of these amendments two numbers were given, one in the introductory clause and one in the paragraph as amended. This method of numbering made the House conferees seem to have receded on twice as many amendments as was the fact.

EDMUND PLATT,
LOUIS T. MCFADDEN,
MICHAEL F. PHELAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the conference report.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, this conference report, as the statement of the managers on the part of the House indicates, differs from the report that was presented on March 2 in three places. One of the amendments was in the bill before in two places. It was said to have been so placed on account of harmonizing the act. It provided for an initial charge upon borrowers in order to furnish funds for the carrying on of the farm-loan associations. In one place it was an amendment to section 7 of the farm-loan act, referring to the salaries of the officers of farm-loan associations and the expenses, and in the other place it was an amendment to the powers of the farm-loan associations. This duplication was confusing and the amendment was necessary only in one place, as we now have it in this report. The charge authorized is more carefully guarded than it was before. It is fixed so that it can in no case exceed 1 per cent, and the presumption is that the Farm Loan Board will regulate it in such a way that probably very rarely will a charge as high as 1 per cent be made. It is claimed there are some counties where it would be necessary to allow a charge as much as 1 per cent, but not in a great many instances. There are about 4,000 farm-loan associations, or were in November, when the last report of the Federal Farm Loan Board was made. They average about 19 members each, which is a pretty small average, and one thing which I failed to explain fully, I think, when the last conference report on this bill was under consideration by the House, is that the whole system is new; that its great growth so far has been from the organization of new farm-loan associations. Very few of them have had much chance yet to grow. There is one notable exception, however, and that is in the State of Oregon, where there is one farm-loan association with 384 members, and it is known as the millionaire association, having something like a million dollars of loans. The assocations average, I think, about $80,000. There is a tendency, apparently, in some places to keep them as close corporations. Men who have already gotten their loans have no great inducement to go out and get others to join them, and the records show some counties where there are two or three associations, apparently new associations having been organized within the limits of the county because it was not easy to get into the old association. The whole thing is new. Not only has the growth so far been through the organization of new associations, but the reports from the associations showing what they have been doing and how they have raised funds for their expenses have only just begun to come in. That is, they have been coming in only within the past few months. I am informed that the Federal Farm Loan Board has had some trouble in getting the farm-loan associations to report. There are places where the secretary-treasurers think it is not necessary to make reports to Washington, and they have been very delinquent in making the reports.

I think everyone who studies the act will admit that it is absolutely necessary that there be some inducement to the secretary-treasurer to go out and get loans. I might perhaps quote Mr. Lever, of the Farm Loan Board, formerly the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of this House, who told me that there are places in his State where mountain farmers, for instance, never hear of the farm-loan associations or of the farm-loan act, and if some secretary-treasurer or somebody interested did not go out and tell them about it they would never learn of it. He says that what the board wants to do is to have the secretary-treasurer given some inducement to go to the county clerk's office or the register's office, or whatever office it is where mortgages are recorded, and find out what outlying farms are mortgaged, where probably the farmer is paying a high rate of interest and perhaps renewing his mortgage every three or four years and paying commissions to do so. There ought to be inducement to the secretary-treasurer to look those fellows up and ask them to come into the farm-loan association and get their loans fixed at a low rate for a term of thirty-odd years.

Mr. Speaker, one thing I want to do is to ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter to Hon. E. B. BROOKS, of Illinois, by Mr. Lever, of the Farm Loan Board, explaining fully the purposes of this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU,
Washington, March 10, 1920.

Hon. E. B. BROOKS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BROOKS: Responding to your letter of recent date, in which you ask for information regarding an amendment to the farm-loan act, which was voted on the early part of last week, permit me to say that I am glad to give you the facts.

The farm-loan act provides, section 7, bottom of page 9, that "the reasonable expenses of the secretary-treasurer, the loan committee, and other officers and agents of national farm-loan associations, and the salary of the secretary-treasurer shall be paid from the general funds of the association, and the board of directors is authorized to set aside such sums as it shall deem requisite for that purpose and for other expenses of said association."

The funds of a national farm-loan association can be collected only from four sources, as follows:

"(a) The board of directors may levy an assessment on members in proportion to the amount of stock held by each, which may be repaid as soon as funds are available. (Sec. 7.)

"(b) It may secure an advance from the Federal land bank of the district, to be repaid with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from dividends belonging to said association. (Sec. 7.)

"(c) Subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board, any national farm-loan association shall be entitled to retain as a commission from each interest payment on any loan indorsed by it an amount to be determined by said board not to exceed one-eighth of 1 per cent semiannually upon the unpaid principal of said loan, any amounts so retained as commissions to be deducted from dividends payable to such farm-loan associations by the Federal land bank. (Sec. 9.)

"(d) Dividends paid to the association upon stock owned by it in the Federal land bank."

You will note that there are really only two methods of supplying money for the general fund of an association: (1) By assessing members already in the association who already have their money, in proportion to the amount of stock held by each; and (2) from dividends paid to an association upon stock owned by it in the Federal land bank, the others being only loans.

The principal expense of an association arises in connection with the making of new loans, and it is hardly to be expected that members of an association, who already have their loans made and the money in their pockets, are going to assess themselves to permit their neighbor to secure the benefits arising out of membership in the association. They do the very human thing of requiring him to do as they have already done, namely, pay for the expense of securing his loan.

It has been found in the operation of the system, therefore, that this method of supplying the general fund of an association with money is of no practical value and will not be resorted to by members of an association. The only other method of raising money for association expenses is through dividends coming to an association upon stock owned by it in a Federal land bank.

Three out of the 12 land-bank districts so far have not paid dividends, though all of them are expected to do so in the reasonably near future; but even if all of them were paying dividends the funds accruing to the associations from this source would not be sufficient in a great majority of cases to meet the reasonable expenses of the associations, for the reason that the average loan per association is about $80,000, which would mean that the association had $4,000 of stock in the Federal land bank. This $4,000 at 6 per cent per annum would yield only $240, a sum totally inadequate to meet the expenses of the average association, but which, if it were adequate, should not be used for this purpose, because the dividends of an association belong to all the borrowers, and to use it to pay for the expenses of a new loan would be to deprive the initial borrowers of the dividends upon their stock to which they are justly entitled. I feel that dividends paid to an association should in all cases of which I can at present conceive go to the borrowers who own the stock of the association and should not be diverted for paying the expenses of getting new loans. That was not the intention of the law and works an injustice to the borrowers already in the system.

You may be interested to know some of the expenses of an association. They include stationery; postage, which is considerable; rent; surety bond for the secretary-treasurer; transportation for the Federal appraiser to the property to be appraised; and the expenses of the local loan committee of three members, which varies from $3 to $5 per day; and, in addition to these expenses, comes the salary of the secretary-treasurer, authorized in section 7 of the act.

The secretary-treasurer is the active executive officer of the association. We have found that the best associations, those that are most nearly meeting the expectations of the framers of the farm-loan act are those which have the liveliest secretary-treasurers. The duties of a secretary-treasurer are varied and most important and are as follows:

1. He must take the application of the intending borrower and usually is called upon to fill it out.
2. He must procure appraisal of the land by the local appraisal committee.
3. He must write up, as a matter of practice, the report of the local appraisal committee.
4. He must take charge of the Federal appraiser when he visits the association for appraising purposes and procure for him transportation to the property in question.
5. He must disburse the funds being loaned and is responsible for their disbursement in accordance with the terms contained in the application of the borrower.
6. It is his duty to collect interest and amortization payments from borrowers and to remit the same to the Federal land bank.
7. He must look after the matter of delinquent borrowers and make such efforts as are necessary to collect these delinquencies.
8. He must examine tax records and report tax delinquencies.
9. He must keep accurately the books and accounts of the association and must be present at directors' and annual stockholders' meetings.
10. He must file with the Farm Loan Board quarterly and annual reports showing the condition of his association.

The performance of these duties requires very much more time and attention than would at first be supposed. An examination of our records discloses the fact that fully 90 per cent of the secretary-treasurers by positive, direct vote of their associations are receiving compensation of from one-fourth of 1 per cent to one-half of 1 per cent of the amount of loans closed. Those who serve without compensation are either connected with banks in some position or other or are abstract attorneys, who compensate themselves by the patronage brought the bank or through charges for abstracting.

The small initial assessment charge now being made upon new applicants, in the case of the amendment, not to exceed 1 per cent of the amount of the loan closed, is absolutely the only charge which is being made against the borrower by the association throughout the life of the mortgage. If you do not make it worth while for the secretary-treasurer to go out after business, the existing associations, more than 4,000 of them, in a large majority of the cases will cease to operate, except perhaps in the most limited way. The present members, busy with their own affairs, who have already completed their own transactions, are not going out to seek new members, especially if they are to bear the expenses of procuring the loans for such members.

It is my thought that the secretary-treasurer of an association should receive sufficient compensation to make him alive at all times to the credit needs of a farm community. He should have an incentive to be alert to increase the membership of his association, and thereby aid in fulfilling the aims of the farm-loan act by reducing the rate of interest on farm mortgages, stabilizing it, and of furnishing adequate capital for the fullest and best development of the agricultural resources of the country. I am strongly of the opinion that if we should issue a regulation that farm-loan associations should cease these small initial association charges against new borrowers or applicants, thereby making it impossible to compensate secretary-treasurers, four-fifths of them would promptly sever their connection with the association. I may add in this connection that I have not had one complaint coming across my desk from any borrower as to the charges made to him for the procurement of his loan through an association.

The difficulty involved in this matter lies in the fact that unless this amendment or some amendment of like purport is adopted all of these associations now levying any charges which continue to do so will find their action in direct contravention of that portion of section 31 of the act, which reads:

"No land bank or national farm-loan association organized under this act shall charge or receive any fee, commission, bonus, gift, or other consideration not herein specifically authorized."

What we undertake to do in this amendment is to authorize something, to make it legal, that practical experience in the working out of the system has found to be absolutely necessary.

It should be noted also that no additional authority is being conferred upon the Farm Loan Board, except to limit the amount that a farm loan association may vote upon the new borrower. There is no authority in the amendment proposed to compel an association to vote even one-fourth of 1 per cent. The charge must be the voluntary action of the association. The general fund into which these charges go belongs to the borrowers, and they can only be expended as they are authorized by the board of directors of the association. The association itself must make the charge in the first instance, and it must, through its own action, make the disbursement of the funds raised thereby. The limit of the authority of the board is to see to it that if an initial charge is made against new borrowers or applicants it shall not exceed 1 per cent, which the board believes will produce funds sufficient in all cases, even with the weakest association, to meet the reasonable expenses of such associations.

It should be observed also that there is no intention in the amendment that such assessment should be a continuing one, and it might be well to make that clearer by the insertion of such language as would make it plain that this charge is an initial one.

Trusting that this gives you the information which you wish and assuring you of my pleasure in trying to do so.

Your friend,

A. F. LEVER.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to ask the gentleman to explain a little more fully what difference there is between this report and the one that was voted down on the question of levying assessments on borrowers to pay for the initial expense of the loan. I think the House ought to understand that thoroughly.

Mr. PLATT. That item was carried in the Senate amendment to the bill as the conference report was presented on March 2, in section 2, on page 4 of the bill, and it was also carried in section 3 in an amendment referring to the powers of the farm-loan associations. We have stricken it out entirely in section 2, taken the whole section out, so that it does not appear there, and so that there can be no possibility of any claim that the board could authorize a charge over the heads of the local associations.

Mr. MORGAN. As I understand it, under the report you have now, no charge can be made to a borrower except it is done by the authority of the local association.

Mr. PLATT. That is the fact. It must be done by the authority of the local association.

Mr. MORGAN. The secretary-treasurer on his own account, even by authority of the Federal Farm Loan Board, can not make a charge unless the board of the local association authorizes him to make that charge.

Mr. PLATT. That is the fact, and I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we have made it clearer. The criticism was made before that it was not absolutely clear that this was an initial charge. Some seemed to think that it was a continuing charge. I do not think that was true, but we changed that to make it "to fix reasonable initial charges to be made against applicants for loans and to borrowers in order to meet the necessary expenses of the association." And we strengthened it still further by saying that the charges shall not exceed an amount to be fixed by the Farm Loan Board and shall in no case exceed 1 per cent.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what his understanding is of amendment No. 10 of the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. Amendment No. 10 refers to the denomination of bonds. Section 20 of the farm-loan act provides for bonds beginning with as low as $25 and $50, and when we amended the act, when we passed the bill in the House, we struck out the $25 and $50 bonds in the bill. There were plenty of Liberty bonds at $50 denomination, and there was no reason for continuing such a low value of bonds. The Senate thought there might be some people who might want to invest in a farm-loan bond of as low a value as $40——

Mr. WALSH. So the Senate made it a $40 bond?

Mr. PLATT. Struck out the $25 and the $50 bonds and inserted $40. Struck out $100 and put it at $40.

Mr. WALSH. No; the Senate has not stricken out $100. The Senate has inserted $40.

Mr. PLATT. The House struck out the $25 and $50 bonds and the Senate substituted the $40.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, the present law permits $25, $50, and $100 bonds.

Mr. WALSH. I am asking about what the gentleman understands to be Senate amendment No. 10, which simply inserts $40.

Mr. PLATT. Forty-dollar bonds.

Mr. WALSH. It just inserts $40. Now, the conference report says:

In lieu of the matters proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "$40"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Now, that is the Senate amendment, $40. Unless the conferees may have been referring to a prior amendment the conferees have inserted nothing, because that is the identical Senate amendment. In line 10, page 9, they insert the figures or symbol "$40."

Mr. PLATT. I will say to the gentleman I asked Mr. Wold, the Senate clerk, about that. I told him I did not think it was stated right, but there is something else involved in the amendment, the renumbering of the section or something of that sort. He explained it to me and convinced me it was right at the time, but I do not recall just what it is. Of course, there is no sense in numbering this amendment 9 and 10. It is one amendment. I wrote it so as to be absolutely plain, showing what was stricken out and what was inserted and how the paragraph would read as amended. This is all one thing, and I see no reason for the two numbers. It should have been given one number instead of two, which makes confusion.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. PLATT. I do.

Mr. WINGO. I noticed the language to which the gentleman called attention, and evidently the reason why the person writing the report for the Senate put it in was this, that the House bill provided for striking out of existing law $25 and $50 bonds. Now, the Senate amended the proposal of the House by providing for $40 bonds. In other words, they treated the language they put in this report the same as if the House bill had carried the present existing law and put in $25 and $50, and they struck out the $25 and $50 and inserted $40. That is the only explanation of the use of the awkward language which has been used.

Mr. WALSH. No; not only awkward, but it is incorrect. If the gentleman is referring to No. 9——

Mr. WINGO. I am referring to No. 10.

Mr. WALSH. No. 10 is simply inserting $40. Now, the conferees report that in lieu of $40 the conferees strike out $40 and insert $40.

I wanted to be sure that the report of the conferees was correct, because that language, of course, would carry the implication that something else was substituted for what was eliminated by amending the Senate amendment, and I wanted to make sure that the gentleman had the report correct.

Mr. PLATT. The report is correct, I am sure of that, because I talked this matter over with Mr. Wold as to exactly how it came about.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, here is where the confusion comes. It is a fact amendments Nos. 9 and 10 are the same.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly.

Mr. WINGO. Now, section 5 of the bill undertakes to amend section 20 of the act, and section 5 of the bill says that "said section 20 of said act shall be amended by striking out the $25 and $50, in line 2 of paragraph 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral '40,' and also by inserting after '$1,000' the words 'and such larger denominations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may authorize,' so that the paragraph as amended will read," and then proceeds to give section 20 as amended. Now, the error was in undertaking to say that the new matter inserted in line 10 should be treated as a separate amendment. As a matter of fact, it is not. The amendment is amendment No. 9. They undertook, though, to number every change, so there is amendment No. 10 and the figures "$40" that occur with amendment No. 10 in line 10 is to make the section conform to amendment 9, which inserts $40 instead of $25 and $50. The legal effect, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will agree, is the same. It might be misleading, but the legal effect is the same.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the explanation clarifies the situation, and if that is the understanding of the conferees——

Mr. PLATT. That is the understanding. I may say to the gentleman I protested against this thing of numbering the same amendment as if it were two amendments, but I could not change the Senate forms.

Mr. WALSH. I should think you could not treat them any other way except by numbering them singly.

Mr. PLATT. As the amendments should be numbered, one number should be given to each amendment, and not two.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. PLATT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to make any fight on the conference report. The Members who were here on March 3 remember that the House disagreed to the conference report that was reported on that date. The result has been that the Senate has receded from those things we contested on that date, and which were the reasons why we defeated the conference report. Briefly, to remind the Members of the House, the controversy which I raised at that date was that I contended that the local associations should at all times have the sole power to determine what if any shall be the assessment on themselves for their local expenses. Now, the only change that is made in the amendment that is brought in here—as a matter of fact, it was in the report before this—is that while the local association retained the power to initiate an assessment upon themselves, yet we do give the Federal Farm Loan Board the right to limit them in making assessments upon themselves, and we also fixed a legislative limit of 1 per cent. In other words, if the local association refuses to make any kind of assessment, under the conference report as it is brought in to-day, the Federal Farm Loan Board can not compel them by rule or regulation to make any assessment as it could have done under the conference report that was defeated before.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield.

Mr. MORGAN. As I understand, under section 7 of the original act it required that the reasonable expenses of the Secretary of the Treasury, and so forth, should be paid from the general fund of the association, and permitted an assessment to be made, but it did not authorize an assessment upon the applicant when he applied for a loan.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; it did. If the gentleman will turn to page 5 I will give him the language that was in the Senate amendment that we defeated and which is dropped by this conference report. The new language is to be found in line 17, and is as follows:

Such funds under rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Board to be provided by reasonable charges not to exceed 1 per cent of the amount borrowed.

I am not sure, but I may have overstepped and taken some of the language of the present act. But the vicious language is this:

Such funds under the rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Board.

In other words, the board might fix a rule and regulation that would make the assessment compulsory, but under the wording brought in, if a loan association in Kansas, Oklahoma, or Illinois says, "We will not assess ourselves one single dime," there is not any power in the land bank or in the Federal Farm Loan Board at Washington to compel them to make such assessment. They retain local self-government over the question of taxing themselves. We do put a limitation on it. If any of the local directors should be extravagant the Federal Farm Loan Board could limit it, but we say they can not put a higher limit than 1 per cent; but they can make a limit of one-half of 1 per cent or one-fourth of 1 per cent.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Have the local boards been making assessments on the members without law?

Mr. WINGO. That is a disputed question. I want to tell you this: The words "initial charges" in the present conference report are very wise. You can not always make the percentage basis fair. One-half of 1 per cent on a $1,000 loan would be $5, and on a maximum of $10,000 it might be deemed unnecessary, as they would not need it to meet their expenses. The general rule is to make a small nominal charge. Now, this permits them to do what they are doing now—instead of putting them on a percentage basis, according to a strict interpretation of the law, they may put on a nominal charge less than the percentage basis, but which would not be strictly uniform. To be frank with the gentleman, I am going to agree to this report. I am waiting for the Supreme Court to settle the question of the constitutionality of the act. The gentleman understands that at the present time the banks are held up and can not make loans and can not sell their bonds because the Supreme Court of the United States is holding up the act on the question of its constitutionality. But after they hold it constitutional—which I think they will; I do not believe they can do otherwise—I am going to insist that we cut out the question of assessment entirely, except what? Require each applicant to put up a small nominal sum of $5 or $10, so as to prevent a bogus application, in order to get the land appraised by an appraiser; and if the loan goes through, return the initial fee, because he can still contribute to his local association. I contend the 1 per cent profit the land banks make between the interest rate they charge the farmer and the interest rate at which they sell their bonds, if handled properly, will pay the administrative expenses, pay the title examiners, and all the expenses, including those of the appraiser that goes out and represents the bank. That should be taken out of the 1 per cent, and the farmer should not be assessed for it.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman, I understand, has some very interesting statistics from the Farm Loan Board, and I was going to ask him if he will refer to them.

Mr. WINGO. I am going to ask to revise and extend my remarks for the purpose of inserting some memoranda which I suggest the Members can study at their leisure, and will afford information as to the expenses of the operation of these banks, the number of borrowers, the gross loans in force, the average amount of loans, and the average cost of title examination, and so forth.

Now, to get back to the proposition we have been discussing. In the initial stage it was contended that we ought to require this fee to be paid by the borrower. But the banks are getting upon their feet. You remember we had up the question of the Springfield bank the other day. Going over the data which I have accumulated, I understand why it is $38,900 in the hole. They are paying too much for legal and other overhead expenses. They are paying too much for overhead charges.

Mr. PLATT. The Springfield bank is located in a different sort of country from that in which the gentleman lives. It is a rocky and hilly country, and, not only that, but the people who have got farms can borrow from the old mutual savings banks as cheaply.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman did not catch the point. They have an old, cumbersome title system.

Mr. PLATT. And they do not have the same system of taxation.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from New York will realize that there is a comparatively clumsy method of examination of titles in Massachusetts and that puts some burden on it. In my State you can get an abstract from a bonded abstract company in an hour's time, and an attorney in 15 minutes can pass on most of the titles. But in addition to that, they are paying too much for their overhead expenses. I think that is undoubtedly so. Of course, it will rate higher proportionately, because they have a smaller number of loans. You take the gross amount of expense of that bank and you will find it is outrageous. I am going to tell the board to go through it and make them cut down expenses. The appraisal and legal expenses amount to $178,000. That is outrageous for 4,405 loans.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman know as to the amount paid for salaries that these local land banks pay?

Mr. WINGO. No; I do not know.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the gentleman ought to know.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, that is a detail; but I can not be expected to recall everything I am questioned about.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not a fact that the presidents of some of these banks get $7,500 a year?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MORGAN. Do not all of them get that?

Mr. WINGO. I am not sure of that, and when I make a statement of fact I want to be sure. That is a matter that I have not looked into because I have felt sure that the board would control that in a reasonable way.

Mr. MORGAN. Do you not think that $7,500 a year as salary to the president of one of those banks, with no responsibility as a public officer, is too much?

Mr. WINGO. I know one of them turned down an offer of $20,000 a year.

Mr. MORGAN. Who was it?

Mr. WINGO. I am not going to say, because it came to me in a private conversation. He is a man whom I have known all my life, although he is not from my State, who is a very able and efficient executive and is wrapped up in the farm-loan act. Men in a distant State have offered that man $20,000 a year to handle a financial operation for them.

Mr. MORGAN. Is he not an exception to the rule?

Mr. WINGO. Well, I know some men in this House that are worth more than the salary that is paid them, and then I know of one or two who are not worth a cent. [Laughter.] You can not standardize men.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I hold no brief for the Springfield bank and I do not know how it is managed, but I do not think its expenses are excessive as compared with the expenses of the Baltimore bank, for instance, or the Omaha bank, which make much larger loans. The gentleman, of course, knows that these old farms in the East have titles going back to the days of the kings and queens of England and the details are intricate and have to be looked up carefully.

Mr. WINGO. I know that.

Mr. PLATT. And the farms have been added to and taken from from time to time, so that the problem is made complicated.

Mr. WINGO. The land grants in Texas, I will say to my friend, go almost as far back. When parts of Massachusetts were a howling wilderness, whenever Longfellow, the poet, wanted to find a genial atmosphere he went to my district, and in a poem he referred to "that grand old southern gentleman down by the Choctaw line." But here is the point——

Mr. PLATT. In the gentleman's district there are sections laid out in regular squares, but in New England the lines are complicated, and some one has got to see to it that the titles are right, and that the surveys are right. It is the way the farms are bounded.

Mr. WINGO. I do not care whether you follow the "meandering lines," as is done in Massachusetts, Tennessee, and other States, or otherwise. I do not think that that adds to the expense. Take the Baltimore bank, for instance. That is as old as the Springfield proposition, with over two times as many borrowers and nearly four times as many loans. The total legal expense of the Baltimore bank was only $20,000 more than the legal expense of the Springfield bank.

Mr. PLATT. But the legal expenses are necessarily different.

Mr. WINGO. I do not charge any mismanagement to the Springfield bank. I think possibly they could use a little more economy there, and, of course, I admit that when you have a smaller and fewer number of loans, necessarily the overhead cost per loan would be greater. But when you compare it with the lump sum, I think possibly the expenses are a little heavy.

But to get back to the proposition I was discussing. When the dispute over the farm loan act is settled and we get back to a normal basis, I want to insist that the 1 per cent difference between the rate the bank charges the farmer and the rate at which it sells its bonds should be used to cover all expenses, including the bank's appraiser.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the data in the RECORD that I referred to in debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the statements referred to:

COMPARATIVE DATA COVERING OPERATIONS OF FARM LAND BANKS.

Tables 2, 3, and 4 attached hereto indicate the total costs of the various land banks of appraisals, title determinations, and all other operating expenses with the average cost per loan and per thousand for each. These figures do not represent the cost to the borrower.

Table 6 indicates the rates charged by the banks against the applicants for appraisal and title determination expenses. Table 7 is a comparison of the total of such collections by the various banks with the total amount expended for appraisal and legal departments. It will be noted that the total amount expended has in every instance exceeded the total collected from the borrowers:

[1] The average cost per thousand is based upon the total amount of appraisals made and not upon the total amount of approved loans. This basis of computation is necessary in order to reflect the correct average cost per thousand on the lands appraised because in many instances the loans are either rejected or approved for greatly reduced amounts after appraisal, or withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman suspend long enough for me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday calls to-morrow, and I do it for this reason: The Army appropriation bill is reported. The gentlemen of the committee are exceedingly anxious to take that bill up. It is rather important that the bill be passed as soon as possible. There may be some difference of opinion as to the sums that the bill should carry, and I think it is very well to start the bill along on its legislative course as soon as possible.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. How can they report an Army appropriation bill when we do not know what the Army organization is going to consist of?

Mr. MONDELL. The appropriation bill is based very largely on the Army organization bill as it passed the House, and one reason for passing the Army appropriation bill as promptly as possible is that the bill may go to the Senate and be there and be considered about the time we get the Army reorganization bill into conference.

Mr. WALSH. Then suppose the Army reorganization bill comes out, and——

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, the Army reorganization bill will come out of conference before the Army appropriation bill goes into conference, and it is rather important to have the measure well along; and, furthermore, there are members of the committee that are very anxious to have the bill disposed of.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, it seems to me that is rather an unwise precedent to establish; when a coordinate branch is considering a measure that is to control the appropriations that are to be made for a branch of the Government, to rush——

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, it is only a question of whether the bill will come up to-morrow or the day after.

Mr. WALSH. That is why I mention it, because if we waited until the day after to-morrow the reorganization bill will be on its way back here.

Mr. MONDELL. What we do on the Army appropriation bill will not affect the Senate's action on the reorganization bill. The reorganization bill will in any event take its way in the Senate. In the meantime the Army appropriation bill will have taken its way.

Mr. WALSH. Very well; I will not object.

Mr. RAYBURN. To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it a week or two weeks before we get another Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. MONDELL. A week.

Mr. ESCH. I want to say, speaking for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that that committee will not have enough work to carry it through another Calendar Wednesday. We will not lose any rights if it is dispensed with to-morrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. You may lose a week.

Mr. ESCH. Yes; a week.

Mr. PLATT. I shall not object to putting it over to-morrow if we can have a Calendar Wednesday next week.

Mr. MONDELL. We will.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman from New York—I am sure the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will agree to it—that there is some question whether or not under the rules the Committee on Banking and Currency would be entitled to go on to-morrow. I am pretty sure though that the request of the gentleman from Wyoming will simply leave our rights in statu quo, deferring the consideration of the question for one week. I think that is what the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] wants to protect.

Mr. PLATT. That is what I wish.

Mr. WINGO. It will not jeopardize any rights that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have, but will simply defer the whole matter for one week?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Reserving the right to object, do I understand that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures will have the call a week from to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have the same rights a week from to-morrow that he would have to-morrow.

Mr. VESTAL. With that understanding I shall not object.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I merely want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] if it is not a fact that the Committee on Military Affairs is reporting the Army bill in this apparent haste in order to get the Army bill through the House and over into the Senate, to use it as a prize pole on the Senate with reference to the Army reorganization bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I hardly think that is true. I have not thought of that as being true. I have thought it was desirable to have this whole program of appropriations well on its way, and particularly this bill, which will necessarily be delayed somewhat in the Senate.

Mr. GARNER. I want to congratulate the gentleman on passing his appropriation bills as quickly as possible, but I think it must be apparent to everyone that if the Army appropriation bill goes through the House and over to the Senate based on the Army reorganization bill as it passed the House, it will be a considerable prize pole on the proposition of making the Senate agree to the House provisions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

The SPEAKER. The House will resume consideration of the conference report on the Federal farm-loan act, H. R. 9065. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, this report has been modified somewhat from the original report which the House voted down. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this report. As the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] state, this gives the local association the sole authority to levy a commission upon borrowers—the initial charge. The original act provided that the local association might make assessments upon stockholders, but it did not give them the right to levy a special assessment or commission upon borrowers applying for loans. After the borrowers obtained their loans, of course they did not feel like levying assessments upon themselves. I think this assessment or charge ought to have been limited to one-half of 1 per cent instead of 1 per cent; but inasmuch as it is a local association that levies the assessment, I suppose we can trust it. I believed at the time the Federal land bank act was passed that the local association would be expensive to the system. There are 4,000 of these local associations to-day, and their number will increase as the system grows. The secretary-treasurer keeps an account with each borrower. Interest payments are collected and transmitted to the Federal land banks. Some of these secretaries handle large amounts of money. Consequently, what did the Farm Loan Board do? They came into the Committee on Appropriations and said, "We have 4,000 of these associations doing business. We have nobody to examine their accounts. We have already had a defalcation or two, and we want $60,000 appropriated to employ 8 or 10 examiners to go out and examine these local associations." I have always contended that the local association ought to exist as an organization for the mutual benefit of borrowers, but that the secretary-treasurer ought not to be allowed to collect the interest; that the borrowers themselves ought to send their interest into the banks. In this way the chief labor of the secretary-treasurer would be eliminated. In this way the expense of the local associations would be greatly reduced. The cost of Federal supervision of the local associations now amounting to $60,000 annually would be saved.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. I have only a short time, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. WINGO. I will say that in one bank they do require that. They require them to send it in. The president of that bank sees that notices go out far enough in advance, and he tells them to send in their checks ahead of time, and the checks are dated ahead.

There is another point on which I wish to correct the gentleman. The figures that I put in the RECORD are misleading, because they cover only the amount collected for the banks. This does grant some relief, because the president of one bank admitted to me that on a loan of $1,000 they charged $29 altogether, $15 when the application was first made and $14 when it was finally approved. This amendment providing for 1 per cent will cut them down, and does grant some relief. But I am willing to go still further.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I want to say a few words myself, but I will yield.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. I see by the act that 1 per cent may be levied for local expenses.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Suppose a man is already a member.

Mr. MORGAN. An assessment can not be made on him. It is only the initial charge for the man who makes application for a loan.

Now, the gentleman from Arkansas referred to the 1 per cent that the Federal land bank has for operating expenses; that is the difference between the interest rate of the bond and interest rate paid by the borrower. Land banks may charge 1 per cent more interest annually than the bonds bear, giving the banks 1 per cent to do business with. Now, gentlemen, that is too much. Our Federal land banks are spending too much money for administration expenses. The law should be amended. These banks should do business on one-half of 1 per cent. The European banks, I think without exception, run on less than one-fourth of 1 per cent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes more?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MORGAN. I repeat that the European banks run on less than one-quarter of 1 per cent. The managers and officers of the Federal land banks have no financial interest in economical management. I fear that the tendency is to employ too large a number of people and pay them excessive salaries. I think they are employing too many men now. I understand each land bank employs on an average about 50 persons and pays salaries ranging up to $7,500. I think that is excessive, and I think we ought to limit their expenses, and when we come to revise the laws I think we ought rapidly to cut down the expense account, the amount allowed the Federal land banks to use for operating expenses, to at least one-half of 1 per cent. It has been asserted that these banks are making money, that they are paying dividends but they are not making money. When these banks have a surplus it merely means they have made overcharges. One per cent is more than they need, notwithstanding they have all the employees they want and pay them liberal salaries.

If you examine the joint-stock land banks and the number of employees they have and the list of their salaries, you will find that they are run on much less expense than the Federal land banks. Why? Because the officers and owners of the stock of these banks are interested in making money; they are interested in the economical administration; they must make dividends or the stock is worth nothing. You will find that they are operated to-day under much less expense than the Federal land banks. The great danger of semipublic loan institutions is that they will not operate economically as private institutions are operated. This must be guarded against. We must see to it that the managers of these banks reduce operating expenses to the lowest limit. I think the local associations ought to be remodeled. We ought not to have the expensive secretary-treasurer. We have 4,000 secretary-treasurers. Of course, every man wants to make as much out of it as possible; he wants his salary raised, as everybody else does. If we do not employ the secretary-treasurers there would not be 4,000 or 5,000 men wanting a boost in their salaries.

In the future the one great central idea for Congress to consider with reference to the Federal land banks is limitation of expenditures and reduction in the cost of administration. More than 500 people are employed by these banks. All this expense is on the borrowers. An efficient and economical administration should be the keynote of the future legislation on Federal land banks. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13555, the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SANFORD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For the repair and restoration of sea walls, retaining walls, and fill, and for urgent repairs to batteries in the defenses of Galveston, Tex., $10,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the figures "$10,000," insert "for the protection of the shores of Fort Screven, Ga., $500,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that that is a river and harbor project.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is not a river and harbor project, Mr. Chairman. A similar item was carried in the bill last year for Sandy Hook, in which there was a $500,000 item similar to this. I offered an amendment last year to this same bill appropriating $160,000 and no point of order was made, but the chairman of the subcommittee said that he did not think the work was necessary to be done at that time. It is not an item that ought to be carried in the river and harbor bill. It should be carried in this bill, as similar items have been carried in the bill for the protection of other fortifications.

The CHAIRMAN. The point that the Chair has in mind is that this is a specific appropriation for a specific project.

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is a similar item in this bill on line 15 for the construction of a sea wall and embankment, $20,000. This is for a similar purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. That is a different proposition; that is where they have emplacements. The gentleman's amendment authorizes an expenditure of $500,000 for the reclamation of the shore.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Government owns the land at this point. Fort Screven is a Government reservation and consists of several acres of ground. The purpose of my amendment is to protect the reservation and keep the shore from being washed away and the sea from encroaching on it. The engineer in charge at Savannah, Ga., has recommended the appropriation. Last year they recommended an appropriation of $160,000, and this year they say that it will require $520,000. Unless it goes into this bill, I do not see that it can be carried in any other bill.

I went before the subcommittee, as the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] knows, and explained this matter to him. He went down to Tybee as a member of the subcommittee and examined this reservation. He looked into the project himself with a view of allowing this item in the bill. When the engineers came before the subcommittee Mr. SLEMP asked them whether they thought this work could remain as it is for another year. The engineer said he thought the work was necessary, but that the work could remain for another year. That is the reason the item is not included in this bill. There is no doubt that the amendment is germane, but I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his point of order that I may discuss it more fully and that the committee may vote upon it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to make it very clear to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. OVERSTREET] that without any reference to the merits of the project he speaks of, the amendment he proposes is in order only if the project has been specifically authorized by law or is already in progress. If it is not in progress it is not in order under this bill unless it has been specifically authorized by law. Unless the gentleman can show the Chair that it is authorized by law the Chair would feel constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Before the Chair rules I would like to state that there is a project in the bill similar to this, and if it would not be in order to offer this amendment in its present shape, then I would move to amend it by making the sum $520,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, without expressing any opinion as to the merits of this particular amendment, I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact, and I think the gentleman from Georgia has already adverted to it, that his amendment simply carries a provision for the purpose, as I understand it, of constructing a sea wall and embankment at a fortification where guns are now emplaced.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. A regular fortification in continental United States. It is not a question of a new project, but it is simply a proposition to repair and to maintain a project now in existence, and heretofore the bills have carried projects of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the very suggestion the Chair has already made to the gentleman from Georgia. There is no way the Chair can discover whether there is a project for a fortification there already authorized at Fort Screven, or if there is such a project already in existence, except he be assured of these facts by the gentleman offering the amendment or the gentleman show the Chair the law. If there is such a project, and it is authorized by law, and is a public work already in progress, then of course the amendment would be in order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is such a fortification. This is simply an amendment to repair and properly maintain that fort and keep it from washing away.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield? The gentleman will not contend that any law has been ever passed authorizing the development of the improvement suggested in this amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There has been no legislation authorizing the construction of this sea wall, but I submit that where a public improvement exists, Congress has authority without express legislation to make an appropriation to keep it in order and to preserve it, and that is all this amendment does.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a fort at Fort Screven, Ga.?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And this is for the purpose of taking care of the wall around that fort?

Mr. OVERSTREET. This is to keep the reservation from washing away and protecting the armament; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, last year when this bill was before the House for consideration I offered an amendment authorizing the expenditure of $160,000 for the protection of the shore at Fort Screveh, Ga., for the reason that amount at the time was recommended by the local engineers as being sufficient to do the work that was necessary to protect the reservation. Both engineers have seen the necessity of doing something to prevent the reservation from being washed away, and I recently appeared before the subcommittee that prepared this bill and urged them to put in the bill an item carrying the amount named in my amendment, but the committee failed to do so, and I have brought the matter before the House and am asking you gentlemen of the committee to agree to this amendment.

There is no doubt that the Government property at this point is liable to great damage owing to the rapid encroachment of the sea, and both last year and this year the engineers have recommended the construction of a breakwater parallel to the shore with a connecting dike, which is required to prevent further erosion of the shore. This reservation is a very beautiful place. When the Government bought this property several years ago there was no shrubbery of any kind there, except a natural growth that was very unsightly, but all that was taken up by the Government and beautiful palm trees were set out and are growing all over the property. It would be a great pity if the waves and elements were allowed to encroach upon this land and destroy the buildings or any part of the reservation. The Government has erected a number of handsome and substantial buildings on this property, and I was informed last year by the Chief of Coast Artillery that the value of these buildings alone is around $1,000,000, besides land, armament, and other equipment. I should think that the whole of the property owned by the Government at this place would be worth several million dollars.

The private citizens on Tybee Island have gone to considerable expense also in building up and beautifying the island, which is considered one of the most attractive summer resorts on the Atlantic coast, and the mayor of the island and a number of citizens have been very insistent for the last two years that the Government take steps to protect the island from the encroachment of the sea. A few weeks ago the island was visited by a storm which caused very high waves to roll in upon the island, and as a result a number of buildings were washed into the sea, and others were badly damaged.

The engineers and members of the subcommittee all agree that the work is necessary, but they seem to think that perhaps it can stand a year longer as it is, but it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that when it has been pointed out by the engineers charged with the duty that a certain amount of work is necessary to preserve and protect Government property the necessary amount of money required to do this work should be appropriated without hesitation, because in the meantime it is admitted that the reservation is being damaged and washed away, and no one is able to say when nor how soon a storm and high waves may again visit the island and do much greater damage to the reservation and other property belonging to private citizens.

In this connection I desire to say that several years ago some jetties were constructed at Fort Screven, or out some distance from the shore line, and they were built of rock of various sizes. Some of the stones used in these jetties proved to be too small to remain in place under action of the sea, but one of these jetties in particular proved practically adequate for the purpose, and is now intact, and this would seem sufficient proof that the scheme proposed by the engineers for the protection of Fort Screven is practical and effective.

In conclusion, I appeal to you to agree to the amendment. The Government engineers recognize the necessity for doing this work. The chairman of the subcommittee visited the island for the purpose of getting first-hand information in regard to this project, and he is satisfied that the reservation needs protection. Sooner or later an appropriation will be made by Congress for the purpose, and why delay any longer? It is like plugging a tooth with a small cavity; the sooner it is done the better. I sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is the amount asked for by the amendment based upon the estimate made by the Government engineers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes. They recommended $520,000 and I have asked for $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. OVERSTREET]. The circumstances of this case are simply these: A year ago the War Department asked that $147,000 be appropriated to restore the shores at Fort Screven. This year I was amazed when the department asked for $527,000 for the same purpose. Therefore I took it upon myself to go down to Fort Screven to look the situation over. I found three reports, or three different views as to this project, one costing $147,000, one costing $300,000, and one costing $527,000. The matter was then taken up with the Engineer Department to see whether there would be any damage caused by a delay of this project for another year, inasmuch as the Engineering Department of the United States Government had given three different views within a year. The gentleman from Georgia offered an amendment last year for $147,000——

Mr. OVERSTREET. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. SLEMP. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars; and had that amendment been agreed to at that time the money would have been wasted.

Mr. OVERSTREET. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The work could hardly have been done upon it and the appropriation could have been added to.

Mr. SLEMP. The theory upon which the $160,000 would have been appropriated upon is an altogether different theory from the one owned by the $527,000 estimate; absolutely different. If $160,000 had been given last year upon that theory, it would have been wasted. Inasmuch as there can not be any damage to a building there during the coming year, and inasmuch as there are three different views about this matter, the committee thought it would be well to withhold action for another year. The Chief of Engineers before the committee said that the work was necessary in order to protect the reservation and a certain number of buildings on the reservation, but that it was not essential, because at a relatively small cost the buildings that are already there could be protected or removed. He further said that the reservation was being washed away and that a great many demands were being made by local authorities for protection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman says the buildings could be removed. I submit it would be unfair to remove the buildings in from the shore.

Mr. SLEMP. The buildings that are of any importance are about 40 yards back on ground 15 feet above the shore line. The ground they are talking about is the parade ground now used for a golf course. The proposition is not a sound one for us to spend $500,000 upon until the engineers have agreed on their policy.

Mr. OGDEN. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to the answer given by Col. Sherrill on page 102.

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. OGDEN. The question was asked, "What did you say that amounted to," and the answer was, "$526,500. It can be omitted without any very great detriment for this year."

Mr. SLEMP. It can be omitted without any detriment this year.

Mr. PELL. What is the difference between the three plans?

Mr. SLEMP. It is a rather scientific, technical engineering proposition. There is an old wall there, built about 10 or 15 years ago. Perpendicular to that wall there is a little projection called jetties. Some are standing to-day and some are not. The first proposition was to continue the extension of those jetties. Now, the district engineer thought that another system ought to be adopted and the project of extending the jetties abandoned. I talked the matter over with him personally. The gentleman who has charge of the entire district down there now says that we ought to go out in the ocean about half a mile from the land and build a wall that is 46 feet wide at the base, about 20 feet high, and 6 feet wide at the top, and carry the rock from Augusta, Ga., to Savannah, and load it on barges, and then come in there and place that along that wall a half mile out in the sea at a cost of $14.50 a cubic yard. He thinks that will do the work, with an additional feature intended to provide still water there. Now, there is so much uncertainty as to the course that should be pursued that I do not see how we could stand up on that proposition, however much we love our friend from Georgia and however much I would like to do something for his State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have a minute additional in order to enable me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I appreciate very greatly the reference the gentleman has made to the State of Georgia. I would like to ask him this question: Is it not true that the United States Government pays engineers a fine salary at different places in the United States to make reports to different committees of Congress and that the committees of Congress themselves act on those reports? Is it not true that the engineer has recommended specifically the sum of $520,000 to do this work?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes; I will say to the gentleman they have made three specific reports. Which one would the gentleman adopt?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The latest one, because it is made more recently and because this work, as we all know, has considerably increased in cost in the last two or three years.

Mr. SLEMP. No; this is an entirely different proposition, so the recommendation of the subcommittee and of the full Committee on Appropriations is that this matter go over until the coming year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. OVERSTREET] has just regaled us with the statement of the fact that this is a great summer resort; that they have very beautiful trees upon the ground. We have been later informed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] that there is the golf course to be protected, and yet the gentleman from Georgia comes in here and asks for $520,000 to be taken out of the Treasury at a time like this to preserve a golf course, to preserve a summer resort for a lot of people who want to bask in the sunshine. There ought to be more important reasons why this appropriation should be granted than those offered. Five hundred thousand dollars is quite a sum of money, and it ought not to be expended for this purpose at this time, when the Treasury is empty and when everybody in the United States is groaning under a load of taxation they are unable to bear; so that the gentleman from Georgia certainly ought to have some consideration for the people who are compelled to forego every pleasure in the world in order that they may be able to keep body and soul together rather than to come in here and ask for $500,000 to preserve a summer resort. These beautiful trees can go along very well without this expenditure of $500,000. Why, we had better let these trees burn up and replant them, and it would not cost half as much to do that as to spend this money. The gentleman from Georgia, of course, understands the beauty of the spot, because I understand he spends his summers there and likes to bask in the sunshine of this beautiful island and drink in the sea breezes that come across the ocean.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Not just now. I am more concerned about the Treasury of the United States than I am about those who have time to spend at summer resorts. I am more concerned about the overloaded burdens that are being carried by the American people now than to protect a golf course. If, perchance, a wave should wash from the ocean and break away one or two of the links of the golf course, why, it would not hurt my feelings. It may disturb the gentleman from Georgia and those who have time to play golf and sit around while the rest of us are working, but that does not appeal to me at all. I am opposed to the appropriation on the ground that it is unnecessary, even though it should wash a foot or two of the land away; and since the engineers have three plans, neither of which they can agree upon, we certainly can afford to wait until they come to an agreement. An engineering proposition of this sort involves an expenditure of $500,000 as an initial expenditure, but maybe possibly $5,000,000 as a final expenditure, and it ought not to be considered lightly. For myself, I do not propose to sit here and permit the injection of $500,000 in a bill of this kind for the purpose different from that of fortifications——

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Not now. The fortifications are secure; there is no danger of their being swept away, except that something extraordinary occurs to which we do not look forward now. The ocean will pass along in its peaceful moods and in its wild tumult and wash along those shores, and the people who are basking in this beautiful summer resort can go to some other place, if it is necessary, to pass away their time. We can give them the fine crisp mountain air or the prairie breezes if they come out our way and we will not ask the Government to spend $500,000 for their entertainment.

We will give them a chance to come out and drink in the glories of the Middle West and to see the golden harvests of grain that grow for the millions of people here and everywhere else in the world. [Applause.] We will not call upon the Government to contribute one cent toward their entertainment. And as to giving $500,000 or any other sum for the purpose of enabling golf players to entertain themselves while they are drinking in the sea breezes, I am opposed to it. The time has come when we must be serious with the Government's Treasury. Now is a good time to begin. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that the millionaire leader of the steering committee is rather at variance with the gentleman who is the chairman of this branch of the Appropriations Committee, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP], who is, I understand, not alone a devotee but a distinguished exponent of the ancient and noble Scottish game of golf.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman's statement will add to my credit, for I am pretty hard up just now, and I have trouble in getting credit at different places.

Mr. GARD. I trust it will, because I understand both statements that I have made concerning the gentleman are very happily true.

What I rose to say was that the gentleman has a new idea about people coming out his way for a summer resort. I suppose he refers to his own excellent State of Illinois. After finding fault with the State of Georgia and this island, which he characterizes as a summer resort, which should not be protected—I do not know anything about the merits of the situation myself—I notice that summer resorts in Illinois seem to be sadly criticized to-day, because I see in the columns of a reputable newspaper, the Washington Post, under the signature of a reputable writer, that under the headline, "Drag Illinois in mud," "money has been spent in wads, lies have been backed by forged letters, vice dens, gunmen, and gamblers have been compelled to support designated candidates—there is disgust among the clean element of the city that men calling themselves Republicans should engage in such tactics."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Very gladly.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Illinois needs no defense from the gentleman from Ohio or from any other section. She stands upon her merits and is willing to be judged by fair men from every section of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that the gentleman from Ohio is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. The amendment was to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The amendment was to insert $500,000.

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to pursue it any longer; I only desired to show that possibly the summer climate spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois may not be salubrious.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum. I would like a word more.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask my friend to give my colleague five minutes more. He is discussing the merits of a proposition.

Mr. SLEMP. All right. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and on this amendment close at the end of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to consume five minutes. I only want to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] briefly.

When I first proposed this amendment, before the gentleman from Illinois knew anything about the merits of it, he objected to it simply because he saw that the "gentleman from Georgia" was undertaking to have an amendment agreed to that might benefit his section of the country in some slight respect. The gentleman objected to it before he knew anything of the merits of the amendment, and the gentleman tells the members of this committee that this amendment is offered for the purpose of protecting a golf course in the city of Savannah. I will ask the gentleman if he has ever been to Tybee Island and seen Fort Screven? Does the gentleman himself know anything about it? Does the report of the committee state that they have a golf course at this place? Has he no faith in the report of the Government engineers, who are supported by this Government and who have recommended that the sum of $500,000 be appropriated for this purpose? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] gets up here in a facetious sort of vein in an effort to defeat this amendment by stating it is offered for the purpose of protecting golf links in the city of Savannah.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; I will not yield. He would not yield to me and I will not yield to the gentleman.

I say the statement of the gentleman shows very plainly that he is not in favor of allowing the smallest appropriation, even, to protect Government property, to improve the reservation at Fort Screven, Tybee Island, because, forsooth, it is in the southeastern part of the United States. I would like to ask the gentleman to put aside that feeling of prejudice, that feeling of envy.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman is doing himself a great injustice in making that statement.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman should not oppose an amendment of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 16.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses incident to the construction of seacoast fortifications and their accessories, under the Engineer Department, $50,000.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SLEMP offers the following committee amendment: Page 3, after line 21 and before line 22, insert the heading: "Under the Chief of Coast Artillery."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SLEMP. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that this item is under the Chief of Coast Artillery, and this heading is simply to have the bill so provide. It is simply the heading for the item.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman mean that he establishes here a different heading and that instead of "Engineer Department" he puts in what he asks for?

Mr. SLEMP. The item is already under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Coast Artillery.

Mr. GARD. What is it the gentleman now seeks to do? I merely do not understand.

Mr. SLEMP. To insert between lines 21 and 22 the words "Under the Chief of Coast Artillery," that would apply to the paragraph to follow.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will note, the succeeding pages have interspersed between the paragraphs headings indicating what the paragraphs contain, and this amendment is intended to do that.

Mr. GARD. As it is on page 4, line 14, "Under the Chief Signal Officer"?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. GARD. This is to make it comprise lines 22, 23, and 24?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes. No change is involved in existing law.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WATSON. I notice this item carries $50,000 for contingent expenses incident to the construction of fortifications; and on page 2, line 11, $25,000 is carried for the preparation of plans for fortifications. Who draws the plans for fortifications?

Mr. SLEMP. The Board of Engineers, located in New York, use about $12,500, and $12,500 is used by parties going out in the field and studying fortifications and plans, and so on. It is a very small sum.

Mr. WATSON. Does the bureau employ permanent engineers?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Are they not competent to prepare the plans?

Mr. SLEMP. This is for drafting work.

Mr. WATSON. Are not the engineers competent?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes; and this will be used by the engineers.

Mr. WATSON. Why is it necessary to appropriate $25,000 when $50,000 is appropriated in the item to which I first alluded?

Mr. SLEMP. That is an entirely different item.

Mr. WATSON. Is it under the engineers?

Mr. SLEMP. It is under the control of the engineers.

Mr. WATSON. I do not understand why it is necessary to have an extra appropriation of $25,000 when the Government engineers are competent to draw the plans for the fortifications.

Mr. SLEMP. This is what the Chief of Engineers says about that item:

Col. SHERRILL. Twenty-five thousand dollars has been regularly estimated and has been allowed for the last few years, and this item is divided into two parts, one of the expenses of the Board of Engineers, and the other is the general preparation of plans for defense for which no funds are definitely or specifically set aside by Congress. In other words, if a question comes up for consideration of certain defense plans down at some small place on the coast and we have no definite appropriation for that, then this would be used. It is just for preliminary work.

Then I asked him:

Mr. SLEMP. And you look upon this as a useful appropriation?

Col. SHERRILL. It is absolutely vital, because it enables us to get up data or records we want and that Congress wants all the time in advance to the appropriation.

Mr. WATSON. Then I understand that the engineers who are permanently employed by the Government have not the time to prepare the plans for fortifications, and therefore others than permanent engineers are required.

Mr. SLEMP. This is for the Board of Engineers. It involves surveys and all sorts of things of that kind. It has been in the appropriation bill for a great many years. It has been carried that way, and they consider it as absolutely necessary and one of the vital small items of the bill. I asked them if there was any way to get rid of it, and if some other appropriation could not care for it, and their reply was that it was absolutely vital.

Mr. WATSON. The War Department employs its engineers to prepare plans for bridges constructed under its care.

Mr. SLEMP. I was assured that there was no duplication in the item at all. The money would be used, for example, in making preliminary topographic surveys, to be finished up by the departmental organization.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of fire-control stations and accessories, including not to exceed $48,755 for the purchase of lands and rights of way; purchase and installation of necessary lines and means of electrical communication, including telephones, dial, and other telegraphs, wiring and all special instruments, apparatus, and materials; coast-signal apparatus, subaqueous sound and flash ranging apparatus, including their development; and salaries of electrical experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the use of coast artillery; purchase, manufacture, and test of range finders and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $770,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Is this $48,000, in line 23, to be used for the purchase of additional lands?

Mr. SLEMP. It is not for additional land in the sense of any new project, but it is for land upon which the fire-control stations are to be placed.

Mr. McKEOWN. I was wondering whether during this war we had not bought all the land, or contracted for all the land, we would possibly need during any emergency, and why should we be buying more land?

Mr. SLEMP. I think the point of the gentleman is well taken, except that the acquisition of this land is already arranged for in pursuance of the general policy.

Mr. McKEOWN. Where is it proposed to buy this land?

Mr. SLEMP. They ask for that $48,000 for acquiring land at the different places where these fire-control projects are under way. One is at Boston, another at Charleston, another at Savannah, and another at Galveston. The property was taken possession of and steps taken to purchase it a year or so ago, and then the Army act of last year prevented the carrying out of the purchases.

Mr. McKEOWN. This is to pay for lands already purchased?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes; already contracted for. They are not for new projects, however.

Mr. McKEOWN. The Army certainly bought plenty of land during the war, and that ought to be enough.

Mr. SLEMP. After the passage of the Army appropriation bill last year, preventing the purchase of additional land, the Army could not pay for the land it had contracted to purchase. This item is to cover cases of this kind.

Mr. McKEOWN. This is to cover lands already purchased?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes; land, in most cases, which had already been occupied by the Government.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operation and maintenance of fire-control installations at seacoast defenses, $165,000.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EAGAN: Page 4, after line 16, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The sum of $9,617,179.38 of appropriations heretofore made for aviation purposes for use in connection with the seacoast defenses of the United States is hereby continued and made available for obligation until June 30, 1922, and the Secretary of War may expend from said sum $596,725, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase or acquisition of land necessary for aviation stations for use in connection with the coast defenses within the continental limits of the United States."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is the item providing for the eight aviation stations in connection with our coast defenses that the House on several occasions has passed upon.

These stations are to be erected as follows: At or near Portland, Me.; at Boston; at Narragansett Bay; eastern end of Long Island Sound; southern end of New York City (Staten Island); Langley Field; San Francisco; and Puget Sound.

The War Department originally estimated for 16 stations, and the House two or three years ago reduced the number to 8. That number was considered absolutely essential in the opinion of the responsible officers of the War Department, and the House saw fit to agree with that opinion. This calls for no new appropriation, but merely continues and makes available the sum of $9,617,179.38 remaining of the $11,600,000 that have been appropriated already for the purpose.

The purpose of these aviation stations is not for direct offense so much as for observation in connection with fire control and to making the coast defenses of the country really serviceable. They are what might be called the eyes of the coast defense. Gen. Menoher testified before the committee in answer to a question by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]:

I think that matter has been gone into very carefully not only at the time they were originally proposed but since then, and I do not think there is any division of opinion as to the necessity for air defense at those various points. Later on it will probably be desirable to extend this service to some other stations along the coast.

Then later on Gen. Menoher said:

Now, it is a well-known fact, well known to every artilleryman, that there is no use shooting your guns unless you can see where the shells are falling, unless you are firing from a big vessel lying 30 or 40 miles out of New York and having them hit Manhattan Island, say. So it is necessary, in order that the coast defenses may function efficiently, to have eyes, as Mr. BYRNS suggested.

I think that since Congress has already functioned on this matter on two prior occasions, and as it has been approved on several occasions by the responsible officers of the War Department, and since nobody knows what the future may hold in store for us, it is the part of wisdom and good insurance to make provision so that the 12-inch and 14-inch guns of our coast fortifications may be made efficient and useful.

The establishment of these coast-defense stations was not a temporary measure to meet possible German submarine operations in the United States. They are designed, on the contrary, as a part of the permanent coast-defense plans, carefully drawn as a permanent part of the Army and Navy plans for the defense of our coasts.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order? What is the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. The Revised Statutes provide that "no land shall be purchased on account of the United States except under a law authorizing such purchase." This amendment specifically provides for the purchase of land not authorized by law, in violation of the provisions of law. That section which I have read is section 3736 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discuss the merits of the amendment at this time, but I do want to say something in opposition to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Of course we are all familiar with the statute to which the gentleman has just referred. This bill makes an appropriation for the purpose of providing proper coast defenses. If those who appeared before the committee and who have charge of our fortifications are to be believed, unless aviation stations are provided at these certain points—Portland, Boston, Narragansett Bay, Puget Sound, and the eastern end of Long Island—they will have no real adequate coast defenses.

In the bill which was passed for the fiscal year 1918 Congress approved eight aviation stations and made an appropriation of $8,000,000. That appropriation reads as follows:

For the establishment of eight aviation stations for use in connection with the seacoast defenses of the United States, including the acquisition of land, buildings, heating, lighting, plumbing, water, sewers, roads, and walks, $8,000,000: Provided, That land may be acquired for the said stations only after a determination by the Secretary of War that sites on existing Government reservations can not be utilized.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that that is an express and specific authorization for this appropriation. Congress has heretofore authorized the purchase of land under an act providing for war powers, and in this amendment which the gentleman from New Jersey offers he seeks simply to reappropriate the money which was unexpended from a previous appropriation, and it is really in the form of a limitation upon the appropriation, for it provides that the Secretary of War may not expend for land more than the sum named in the amendment.

Now, that money was not expended during the year for which it was appropriated for the reason that shortly after the beginning of the fiscal year Congress passed a provision in the Army appropriation bill providing that no part of any of the appropriations made in that bill nor any of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the Army or the Military Establishment should be expended for the purchase of real estate. That is the provision in the Army appropriation bill. It does not repeal the authority contained in the specific act of Congress authorizing the purchase of land for these stations and for general purposes, but simply provides that no part of any of the appropriations made for the Army or the Military Establishment shall be expended for the purchase of land.

Now, those in charge of this service were of the opinion that this provision did not apply to the air stations, and it is stated in the hearings that they proceeded under that assumption. Finally, when they called for the opinion of the Judge Advocate General as to whether or not the provision applied to the appropriations carried in the fortifications bill they were advised that it did and that they had no authority to purchase the land out of the appropriation.

But the point I am making, Mr. Chairman, is that Congress has heretofore by specific statute authorized the purchase of land for these stations. That authority has not been repealed, and the only reason the land was not purchased was the fact that Congress later on passed a provision saying that the appropriations made should not be expended for the purchase of real estate. Now, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] simply seeks to reappropriate the money that was previously appropriated for this specific purpose, and I submit that if the majority of Congress sees fit to do so it has the authority, notwithstanding the statute to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, as I caught the reading of the amendment it seems to me it is further subject to a point of order in making the appropriation available until June 30, 1922. That is clearly legislation not authorized upon this bill. This bill is for the next fiscal year, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] seeks to make available some $9,000,000, of which five hundred thousand and odd dollars shall be used for the purchase of real estate, and that the entire appropriation shall run over for another year, which is clearly a legislative provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I make that point of order additional to the one submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. EAGAN. The point of order is sustained which was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment, simply striking out the figures "1922" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "1921."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks to modify his amendment.

Mr. WALSH. No; he offers a new amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reoffer his amendment?

Mr. EAGAN. I submit a new amendment, simply changing the figures as stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as changed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EAGAN: Page 4, after line 16, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"The sum of $9,617,179.38 of appropriations heretofore made for aviation purposes for use in connection with the seacoast defenses of the United States is hereby continued and made available for obligation until June 30, 1921, and the Secretary of War may expend from said sum $596,725, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase or acquisition of land necessary for aviation stations for use in connection with the coast defenses within the continental limits of the United States."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the war legislation of August 29, 1916, and other acts that followed the Secretary of War was given the broadest possible power to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise for the United States such land as might be necessary for aviation purposes. Those general statutes have not been repealed. That war power is still lodged in the Secretary of War. In recognition of such power Congress adopted different aviation projects, and this amendment proposes to continue one or more of these projects, and therefore the Chair feels constrained to rule that the amendment proposes expenditure for a purpose authorized by law and is not subject to a point of order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted, because I believe it is absolutely essential if we are to provide adequate coast defense for the eight different places which the coast service has in view. These places are Portland, Me., the nearest port to Europe; the great city of Boston; Narragansett Bay; the eastern end of Long Island, which is so important to the great city of New York; Staten Island, for which land has already been purchased; Langley Field; San Francisco; and Puget Sound.

Personally I believe, in view of the statement made by the various officers who appeared before the committee, that there ought to be, and I believe there will be, if we continue the coast defense, one or two stations in the South, because that is an inviting field for attacks by any formidable naval power with which we may have trouble in the future.

This reappropriation contemplates a station only at these eight places to which I have referred, all of which are upon the coast of New England and in the vicinity of New York, where the population is greatly congested, and out in the West at San Francisco and Puget Sound.

Here is the proposition, gentlemen: We have batteries of large guns at these stations. We have guns of an effective range all the way from 27,000 yards up to 40,000 yards. This bill carries appropriations for 16-inch guns which have an effective range of 50,000 yards, and one officer said 60,000 yards. It is perfectly evident that these guns are absolutely useless as a matter of defense unless we provide some means by which those who man the guns can get the range of the target at which they are shooting. They can not see it, it is impossible to know where it is or where it is located, without observation from a balloon or without an aeroplane to send back information by wireless and direct the fire of the guns. Gen. Mitchell and every other officer who appeared before the committee were absolutely emphatic in the statement that these coast defenses were absolutely useless as a matter of defense unless we give them aviation stations. I take it that it does not need an expert to tell us that that is true when you consider the long range of these guns.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman that there would have to be some way to find the target where they were using these guns at that distance, but what is the Air Service of the Army doing if they are not looking after such a situation. If we are going to use the seacoast defenses, we will never use them except when the whole Army is at home.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be entirely true, but I submit that we have a great long coast line on both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and the enemy are not going to tell us where they are going to strike, so that the aviators of the Army can have time to appear on the scene. They are likely to strike at some important city or harbor, and therefore we must have at these important places permanent aviation stations in order to inform the gunners and furnish proper fire control and provide proper and adequate defenses for those cities.

Of course, if the Army officers knew in advance that a certain power was going to strike New York at a certain hour, or on a certain day, they could have all the Army aeroplanes there in order to take care of the situation; but that can not be expected. The enemy would not be likely to publish their plans in advance.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On the contrary, I assert that if the Army Air Service is worth anything at all, they will find out about that. Does the gentleman think that any vessel attacking our coast would be near as speedy as an aeroplane? These aeroplanes would be at sea looking after the ships.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that the Navy is our first line of defense. If we can have the Navy off New York, we do not need any coast defense as long as the Navy lasts; but suppose the Navy is dispersed, or suppose the strike is made at some part of the coast where we have no Navy. Then the coast defense is the second line of defense. Gen. Mitchell made the statement that in 15 or 20 years the Air Service would be so developed that the Navy would be obsolete.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would be very much pleased if that were so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And that the Air Service will be our first and real line of defense; but that is not now. What I submit is this: While I do not believe in a large standing Army in time of peace, yet in the present condition of unrest which exists throughout the world, and in almost every nation in the world, it is absolutely important and imperative, in the absence of some concert between the nations of the world in favor of peace, to have not only an efficient and adequate Navy but also to provide an adequate coast defense for these exposed cities along our coast.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Otherwise, if we have trouble, then we will be subjected not only to great loss of property and destruction of property in these large cities but to great loss of life. So I say it seems to me that if we are undertaking to provide adequate coast defenses for these places, we must provide for these aviation stations. It does not mean an appropriation of one dollar of money over and above what has heretofore been appropriated, but it is simply reappropriating a sum now in the Treasury to the credit of this service, and which will go back, of course, on June 30 if this amendment is not adopted. I hope the committee will see fit to adopt the amendment.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] involves, net, about $7,000,000. The situation in relation to this matter is this: In the spring of 1918 representatives of the War Department came before the Committee on Appropriations and stated that there was danger of German submarines bringing aeroplanes and attacking the coast of the United States, and that as a war emergency proposition it was proposed to establish 16 air stations.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. EAGAN. Gen. Jervais, director of operations, made the statement on April 15, 1919, and the Secretary of War approved the same, as follows:

> The establishment of our coast-defense stations was not a temporary measure to meet the German submarine operations in the United States.

Mr. SLEMP. I know perfectly well the statement made before the committee, because I asked the gentleman what the source of his information was, and he told me, and he told the committee, that he had private telegrams from men working in the Krupp yards, and that they were then making large submarines for the purpose of bringing aeroplanes to attack our coast. I am not mistaken about that. This inaugurated in war time as a war proposition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes; although I would really like to finish my statement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I just wish to ask the gentleman this: Does the gentleman contend that these guns, which have a range of 40,000 yards, can prove anything like effective without some means of ascertaining just where the target is?

Mr. SLEMP. If the gentleman will pardon me, I am not referring now to that phase of the matter. I wish to explain to the committee how this matter had its inception. It was not started as a peace proposition but as a war proposition. Last year this committee, of which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was then the chairman, brought in a bill with a provision under which the War Department could either obligate this money prior to the 1st of July, 1920, or permit it to revert. That was pursuant to the action of the subcommittee last year, of which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was the chairman, and for which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] voted. This year the War Department—and I would like the committee to know this—did not make the request that the gentleman from New Jersey is offering by way of amendment, and the Secretary of War submitted no estimates for this proposition. There is nothing in this bill, so far as estimates are concerned, that refers to this proposition. The committee's action is in line with the official, formal action of the War Department.

Where do you propose to stop? I think the general trend of thought is that there ought to be some limitation of this Air Service. Here is what we have now: The Army has a field at Mineola, one at Langley, one at San Diego, and one at Arcadia, Fla., and the Navy has one at Lakehurst, N. J., one at Cape May, N. J., one at Chatham, Mass., one at Hampton Roads, one at Rockaway Beach, and one at San Diego.

Gentlemen are fond of quoting Gen. Mitchell, Chief of the Coast Air Service; and what does he say?

> I want to say further that we should contemplate the coast defense under one specific system of defense.

We now have the Army aviation stations and we have the Navy aviation stations, and these gentlemen now propose additional Army stations. Gen. Mitchell says this:

> If you persist in the mistake of not forming a united Air Service, then you should concentrate the defense of the land in the Army and you should make the Navy develop its aviation service for duty on the sea.

Gen. Mitchell recommends that every one of these Navy stations be taken over by the Army. He is the Chief of the Coast Air Service. The proposition of the committee is this: We leave the Army alone, we leave the Navy alone. We allow the Army to go on and continue with funds that will be available for obligation until the end of the fiscal year the stations they have already started—that is, one at Staten Island and one at Presidio—and to improve the one at Langley Field, but no appropriation for those stations for the next fiscal year was requested by the Secretary of War. The proposition does not come to Congress officially, and simply resolves itself into another unnecessary draft on the Treasury amounting to $7,000,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 16 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, it is true that Gen. Mitchell is heartily in favor of a united Air Service, and in the language just quoted by the gentleman from Virginia he makes the statement very definitely, and he winds up that statement with this sentence:

> The function of observation on the coast and all along the coast is the proper function of the Coast Artillery.

Now, the gentleman from Virginia says that no estimate has been made by the War Department in this year's estimate. There has been no definite estimate put in, I take it, because they assumed, this money having been appropriated, a new estimate was not necessary; but Gen. Menoher repeatedly testified before the committee that the purpose of his coming before the committee and the chief purpose of the hearing was to justify the request for a continuation of the appropriation of this money and the authority to purchase land for some of these stations. He said:

> The project on which these funds have been obligated, reserved, or on which it is proposed to apply the free balances, have not been hastily prepared; but, on the contrary, are the result of a definite and careful study made by the Army and Navy prior to the war for the purpose of carrying into effect the functions of coastal air service assigned to the Army in the report of the joint Army and Navy board dated March 12, 1917, and as redefined and reapproved by the joint board January 22, 1920. These projects have had the definite sanction of Congress, as indicated by appropriations made therefor in 1917 and 1918.

Now, with responsible officers of the Air Service of the War Department, knowing their business, as we must assume they do, coming before us and telling us, as they did repeatedly in the hearings, that it was necessary to have this money continued and made available, surely the mere technical failure to make a definite request in the estimates ought not to prevent us from functioning, and especially as Congress has on two prior occasions approved these projects. These aeroplanes are used in connection with the Coast Artillery; they are to give eyes to the Coast Artillery. Surely we want to be able to use the guns in case of necessity.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely that it is necessary to have aeroplanes in the sighting of these great guns from the distance at which they will be used. The aeroplanes will be the eyes of the Coast Artillery the same as they are of the Army, and without them these guns could not be efficient, but in case of an invasion by a foreign foe or an attempted invasion by a navy every aeroplane we have in the United States belonging to the United States Army and the United States Navy will be within our boundaries and be ready for service with the Coast Artillery. It is the only place, then, where they can be used. Unless we use them with the Coast Artillery they might as well be packed away and no attempt made to use them at all. I can not state at this time how many aeroplanes we have in the United States in both the Army and Navy, but there ought to be enough, and I believe they are ample, to supply the Coast Artillery in a case of this kind. No gentleman, in fact, has claimed there will not be enough, so what need have we to add still another department? Where would we use the Army and Navy planes if we were not using them for this purpose? What would be done with them? Of what account would they be under such circumstances? I can understand why gentlemen want aeroplanes in connection with the Coast Artillery, but why they are not willing to use the Army and Navy planes for that purpose when they have nothing else to do and would be conducting no useful function if they were not so used is more than I can understand.

Mr. MADDEN. The Coast Artillery is a part of the Army?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is part of the Army, of course.

Mr. MADDEN. Then why do they want to separate them?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They seem to want to add another division to the Aeroplane Service. This is simply, it seems to me, to have control entirely. It seems that every particular department, subdivision, of the Government wants to get as much under its control individually as possible, and that seems to be the whole of this particular case. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment ought not to prevail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], as I understand him, says that aeroplanes will not be necessary or useful for the Army, and therefore they can be used for the Coast Artillery. He concedes that they are necessary for the Coast Artillery at these various defenses or fortifications. I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa if that be true that he has put the cart before the horse. The gentleman ought to allow the Coast Artillery all the aeroplanes they need and take them away from the Army if it does not need them. The Army appropriation bill is going to be called up to-morrow, as I understand, and if the gentleman thinks the aeroplanes are not necessary for them, why cut them out, and I will gladly vote with the gentleman if he is correct on that sort of a proposition, but I submit it is hardly a sensible thing to do to appropriate aeroplanes to the Army when you say they are not needed on the theory that they can be used for the Coast Artillery. The gentleman from Virginia referred to the fact that the last appropriation bill carried a provision covering all unexpended appropriations into the Treasury to June 30. That is true. That provision was put in the fortification bill passed by the House in February a year ago. That bill made no appropriation for the stations, but simply left in the hands of the service the money theretofore appropriated, just as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN], by his amendment, is seeking to do now in this bill, and Congress, without objection, unanimously approved the action of the committee in making the report at that time. Now, that money would have been expended, or at least obligated, in the building of these stations during the past current year had it not been for the provision of law which I read a while ago and which was adopted in July, 1919. That provision prevented the Air Service from spending this money, because at Portland, at Boston, Narragansett Bay, at the eastern end of Long Island, and at Puget Sound it is absolutely necessary to purchase land, since the Government has no land there upon which to build those stations. They have bought the land at Staten Island, having contracted for it prior to July, 1919.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. Are there any facilities in the way of hangars at the time available at any of these fortifications for aeroplanes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Absolutely none.

Mr. HUSTED. There are none. So that even if you had aeroplanes assigned from the Army or Navy for this purpose you could not use them, could you?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; there are no facilities whatever at any of these places.

Mr. HUSTED. There would not be any sense in assigning aeroplanes from the Army for this particular purpose until you acquire the land necessary to erect the facilities to take care of the aeroplanes after they are assigned?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am glad the gentleman made the suggestion. And just what this amendment seeks to do is to authorize the money now in the Treasury to be used for the purpose of providing these facilities to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] referred.

Mr. MADDEN. How many places have they now where they can land aeroplanes along the coast?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have no place except at Langley Field.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say that aeroplanes in the last war were not used, irrespective of stations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I know they were used. These stations are intended to be permanent and must have hangars for the aeroplanes. They must have a proper field for the aeroplanes to rise and also to land.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Put it in the Army bill. If you give it to the Army you give it to the Coast Artillery. If you take it away from the Army you take it away from the Coast Artillery.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman's position would mean this: That you would provide aeroplanes for the Army, which he says does not need them, and turn them over to the Coast Artillery, without a single facility to take care of them, and also deprive the Coast Artillery of the observation balloons which are necessary in order to properly train the guns. I call your attention, gentlemen, that you are providing in this bill nearly $2,500,000 for air stations at Staten Island and San Francisco, where the Government owns land. Now, if you do not need the air stations at the other five places, then it is a useless and wasteful expenditure of money to provide those air stations at those two places. On the other hand, if you need them at Staten Island and San Francisco to protect those cities, then you should give them to Boston, you should give them to Portland, Me., and at the eastern end of Long Island for the further protection of New York, and at Puget Sound for the protection of Seattle, Tacoma, and other cities on the western coast. So I submit you are up against this proposition—that either you ought to pass this amendment and provide for this service and make the coast defenses worth something at these places, or you ought to strike from this bill the appropriation of $2,500,000, which provides for air stations at Staten Island and San Francisco.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman point to the item in this bill that we can strike that out of? The gentleman knows there is no such item.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows this: They have about $1,900,000 which they have obligated and several hundred thousand dollars in reservations at Staten Island, and there is not a line in this bill that undertakes to take it away from the Air Service and cover it into the Treasury. It is to be used at Staten Island and San Francisco.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman says that we should strike out of the bill the provision for Staten Island.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then, offer an amendment, I will say to the gentleman, in the interest of the economy for which he says he stands, covering that money back into the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is a very ingenious method to raise the total in this bill by some $7,000,000. The gentleman says that because we allowed some of the departments to retain unexpended balances last year that was an invitation for them to extend the amounts and all of the amounts. Now, the bill last year, the current law, in section 5, contains this provision:

> That the appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armaments thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, heretofore made in fortifications or sundry civil appropriation acts, shall not be available for obligations after June 30, 1920; and all unexpended balances of such appropriations which remain on the books of the Treasury on June 20, 1921, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Now, the gentleman says that because this appropriation, that was made when we were at war, was not actually repealed last year we should now go ahead and spend the money, and the amendment is to that effect. Now, what are the facts? At every one of these eight stations, excepting Portland, Me., and Puget Sound, we now have air stations, and in time of war they are available for the coast defenses. And yet the gentleman wants to spend this $7,000,000 to construct additional air stations where some department of the Government already has an air station. The adoption of this amendment can have but one beneficial effect, simply to embarrass the committee and Congress and help to swell the items in the bill. There can be no other reason for trying to raise this amount.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. For a question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman, of course, makes a rather serious charge when he tells us that it is purely an effort to embarrass the committee——

Mr. GOOD. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell where there is an aviation station at Boston that will serve the coast defenses?

Mr. GOOD. I can not give the exact——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman contend that the coast defense has any authority over the naval aviation station?

Mr. GOOD. It is about 3 miles away, I am advised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows they have no control over the Navy.

Mr. GOOD. There remained an unexpended balance of $700,000,000 for ammunition last year in the appropriation bill, and by the same logic gentlemen should urge that we should reappropriate that or about $500,000,000. The War Department has been very reckless in the expenditure of the appropriation for Air Service. It went over to Staten Island and bought land for $400,000 on which to erect a station. And the gentleman has here a provision to allow some real estate men interested in locating these stations upon their land to sell their land to the Government at $5,000 an acre or thereabouts, as was done over at Staten Island. There is a "nigger in the woodpile" here in regard to this matter. The War Department does not want the money unless they are allowed to purchase land. If they had been allowed to purchase land this year, most of this money would have been spent or obligated. This amendment throws down the bars so far as the right to purchase land is concerned. The adoption of the amendment is unthinkable.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think the gentleman ought to make a remark like that on the floor of the House. The gentleman says there is a "nigger in the woodpile"——

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows very well that without the provision in here——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman mean to insinuate that either the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] or myself is influenced by improper motives?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows me too well for that.

I want to say that the "negro in the woodpile" is with the War Department, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] ought not to get too warm under the collar when the War Department is called. The gentleman from Tennessee has himself denounced as vigorously as any man can denounce the purchase of the land by the War Department over at Staten Island for this air station. The gentleman knows it, and the gentleman knows that without that authority to purchase land in this amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] the appropriation would be useless, because under the law they have no right to expend the money. And so here they come in and want to swell the bill by this amendment in absolute violation of the estimate made by the Secretary of War.

Why, here is an amendment for a project that the Secretary of War saw no merit in, and the Secretary of War never asked for it, but because some officer down in the War Department has urged it, it is sought to put it in on the floor of the House. I do not know what interest he may have in the matter or whether he has any interest in the matter; but the Secretary of War, at least, never felt strongly enough impressed with the necessity of this appropriation to ask for it or for the right to use these unexpended balances to build the air station.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. EAGAN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMAMENT OF FORTIFICATIONS.

For purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, $1,500,000.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MACCRATE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. KENYON, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bills of the following titles:

S. 1005. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa; and

S. 1222. An act for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11877. An act granting the consent of Congress to Madison and Rankin Counties in the State of Mississippi to construct a bridge across the Pearl River between Madison and Rankin Counties; and

H. R. 12889. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River at or near Division Street in the city of Youngstown, Ohio.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment. On page 4, line 21, after the word "manufacture," strike out the figures "$1,500,000" and insert "$7,735,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: Page 4, line 21, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$7,735,000."

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, could we agree on the amount of time?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know that we could right away. I do not know how many gentlemen may want to talk about it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman, who also comes from Iowa, if this is an amendment for raising this bill for political purposes?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say it is not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not think so; in fact, I am sure that it is not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that no one in this House is more in favor of economy than I am, but I think that some of the committees are pursuing a policy of false economy in regard to the armament of this country. I do not want to go back and dig up any ancient history; but we went into this war without a well-defined policy of production in our arsenals for the production of armament. In the year 1915 and in the year 1916 amendments were offered on the floor of this House which, if they had been put in the bills, as we advocated at that time, would have saved this Government millions of dollars, even billions of dollars. But they thought that we ought to economize, and we did economize, and as a result of that economy, when this war came upon this country you had nothing to fight with, and you never obtained it during the entire war.

Now, there were some of us who thought that we ought to have a supply system that would function, and we tried to work out one. I will say right here that it was not the fault of Congress that you did not have a supply system. It was absolutely the fault of the General Staff of the Army. I came to Congress in 1915, and I found that Congress and every succeeding Congress friendly to the idea of making your arsenals function, and function efficiently, and we have had to fight the General Staff every time in regard to that matter. We have at last reached a basis by which we are going to try to make the arsenals efficient, so that when war comes we will have something to fight with.

Mr. WALSH. What does the gentleman mean when he says "we"?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I mean Congress. I think the great majority of this Congress is with those of us who are trying to make a supply system that will produce something, so that when war comes you will have supplies of all kinds to fight with. But when you come to items like this and reduce them as far as this you are robbing the very thing that you ought not to rob; you are taking the personnel out of the arsenals; you are destroying the whole system.

Now, as far as this appropriation goes, I do not know that it has very much to do with any arsenal near my home. I have no arsenal in my district. I have one adjacent. I do not think that this appropriation goes there. I think that most of this appropriation goes to the Watertown Arsenal and the Watervliet Arsenal. But I say to you that it is essential to have five great working arsenals in this country, and in those arsenals you can produce everything you need to fight a war with; and it is more essential to keep those men in your arsenals—at least a working force that will function—than it is to keep your combat troops in the field, standing idle, without arms. Unless you keep your arsenals running your Army will be without arms to fight and defend your country with.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised to find that when this bill was reported this item was only $1,500,000, because I had had some talk with the members of the committee in regard to this question of the maintenance of the arsenals.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to do either one of two things: We either ought to go on the assumption that there is never going to be another war or we ought to maintain an efficient Military Establishment. In the former case, if we desire to relieve the people of this country from the burdens of taxation we should abolish the War Department and the Navy Department and save to the people of this country between one and two billion dollars. That would be a saving that would show itself in the way of the lifting of burdensome taxes. If, on the other hand, we intend to maintain a War Department and a Navy Department and to retain these arsenals and navy yards on which the people of the United States have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in lands, buildings, and equipment, we ought to maintain a skeleton organization sufficient to manufacture the munitions and projectiles that are absolutely necessary to carry on necessary experimental work, and to train ordnance officers who will be competent in case of war to superintend the manufacture of munitions either in Government arsenals or in private plants.

Now, the officials of the Ordnance Department have spent a great deal of time and study to find out the very smallest number of men that will have to be employed in order to maintain such a skelton organization. These officials, who are experts in such matters, insist that an appropriation of $7,735,000 for this particular purpose, in place of the item of $1,500,000 carried in the bill, is absolutely essential, and also that an increase in the appropriation in the first paragraph on page 5 from $2,000,000 to $3,909,000 is also absolutely necessary.

Mr. Chairman, if you are not going to take the advice of these experts, this committee ought not to bring in any fortifications appropriation bill at all and ought to save to the country the whole $18,000,000. That is the logical thing to do. The arsenals should be closed and the property disposed of for the benefit of the Treasury of the United States. For instance, the Watertown Arsenal probably could be sold for $25,000,000 to some manufacturing concern, and the entire cost of maintenance, which even under this bill will amount to over $3,000,000 a year, saved to the Government.

Now, I want the committee to understand clearly that the increased appropriation for which this amendment calls is not for the manufacture of a single munition of war that is unnecessary. It is for the purpose of manufacturing different kinds of ordnance for experimental purposes, in order that we may profit by the lessons of this great war and in order to train our future odnance officers.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman mean to tell the committee that the $18,000,000 carried in this bill does not provide funds enough for a skeleton organization?

Mr. DALLINGER. I certainly do.

Mr. GOOD. In 1913 we appropriated, in round numbers, $4,000,000. In 1915 we appropriated $5,000,000. In 1916 we appropriated for all purposes in the fortifications bill $6,000,000, and we had more than a skeleton organization then——

Mr. DALLINGER. That is just the trouble. We did not have an efficient skeleton organization, and that is precisely why the war proved so costly to us.

Mr. GOOD. And if we had more than skeleton organizations with $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, how does it happen that we can not have more than a skeleton organization with $18,000,000?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, that is perfectly evident. The lessons of this war have shown that the methods of warfare had changed even while those appropriations of which the gentleman from Iowa speaks were being made. We were handicapped by our lack of a proper skeleton organization, and it cost this country hundreds of millions of dollars and the lives of thousands of our boys "over there" because we had not kept up the proper kind of a skeleton organization and carried on the necessary experimental work which we should have carried on. We were behind other countries in the matter of the recoil mechanism of guns and in many other things. If we had kept up this experimental work before the war and had been prepared as we should have been, it would have saved this country an immense amount of blood and treasure. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of this amendment and shall vote against it, because I believe that the bill carries a sufficient amount of money to provide just the kind of an organization to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] have referred. It was a very big cut that was made in the estimates. Now, we have the artillery, but I agree with the gentleman that it is necessary to continue the organization in these arsenals, and, as I stated, I think the appropriation that has been made, with the obligations that have been made, and which will be carried into the next year, will be sufficient to provide that organization.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. DALLINGER. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what the advice and opinion of the experts was in regard to the very smallest amount that was absolutely essential to maintain a skeleton organization?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not recollect the exact testimony on that subject. I will say to the gentleman, however, that they contended that there should be appropriated a much larger amount than the committee finally agreed to recommend to the House.

Mr. DALLINGER. As a matter of fact, was it not very much larger than the amount of this amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think so. I am not positive, though, as to the figures.

But, Mr. Chairman, I arose mainly for the purpose of expressing some wonder as to what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, would have to say with reference to the amendment offered by his colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL], and also as to the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], both of whom are recognized able, strong, influential, and loyal Republicans upon the floor of this House. Certainly there are no Republicans upon the floor of the House who are more loyal to their party and to their party's interests. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] a few minutes ago in his zeal in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN], which amendment did not carry a single dollar, but merely proposed to reappropriate a less sum than is proposed by this amendment, made the distinct charge that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] was actuated solely by the desire to increase this bill for political purposes. I have wondered what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will have to say as to the action of his colleague [Mr. HULL] and the action of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], and whether he will read them a lecture because they see fit, from motives of the utmost sincerity, to offer an amendment which they believe ought to be adopted and which they believe is essential to the security and defense of our country.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman and I do not misunderstand each other with regard to the activity of Members who happen to have arsenals in their districts. The gentleman and I understand the pressure that is brought to bear upon them, and we understand the reason why they are always found together asking for large appropriations. It is perfectly natural, and I suppose we would have to do the same thing under the same circumstances.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that I have more confidence in the sincerity and patriotism of the gentleman who offered this amendment and of the gentleman who spoke in favor of it than he seems to have, from the statement he has just made, because I believe they were actuated by the purest motives of patriotism and the sincerest desire to secure an appropriation which they believe to be necessary to the defense of this country.

Now, as to the amendment which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] offered, I want to say to the House, inasmuch as it has been disposed of, that it at one time had the support of the entire subcommittee, including the three Republicans upon it. I submit that simply in defense of the gentleman from New Jersey and myself as against the charge that we were standing here trying to have the amount of this bill increased over and above what we believed it ought to be and purely from political motives.

Mr. GOOD. As a war-time appropriation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am referring to this bill and the subcommittee which proposed it. I submit that if the three Republicans on the subcommittee, in whom we have the utmost confidence, were convinced at one time that the proposition ought to be put through, no such motive can justly be attributed to the gentleman from New Jersey and myself.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is the use of fixing time on all these little amendments?

Mr. SLEMP. We want to get through as soon as we can.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, the item to which this amendment has been offered is for field artillery. The increase in field artillery since the war has been from 1,891 to 11,000. Not a single officer of the War Department asked for a single dollar for a gun for field purposes. In view of that situation, I wondered myself what we were going to do with the arsenals. If we did not need any guns, if we had all the guns that we ought to have—and we do have enough guns for 1,500,000 men—what was the use of making any more guns?

I went to the arsenals to see what was going on. I wish to say here to both Republicans and Democrats, and especially to my Democratic friend from Tennessee, that the Appropriations Committee and the Appropriations Subcommittee on Fortifications do not use this information as a vehicle for an attack on the War Department or for criticism of what they have done. We have tried to do a constructive thing rather than to find things to criticize. But, to my amazement, when I visited the arsenal in the district represented by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, I found that they were employing five times as many men at the Watertown Arsenal as they employed before the war. Some of these men were working three shifts a day making guns and gun carriages, taxing the people straight on without reservation and without stopping.

Mr. HULL of Iowa rose.

Mr. SLEMP. Just a moment; I have not got to Rock Island. [Laughter.] I went to the Watervliet Arsenal and found that they were employing for the purpose of making guns nearly five times as many men as they employed in 1916. The total number of men employed in these arsenals before the war ran between 5,000 and 6,000.

At Rock Island they are employing nearly 8,000 men to-day. I did not go out in the newspapers and denounce that, but I asked the gentlemen responsible for these items in the bill what their policy was.

We did not need the material. I thought we might work out some plan, some scheme, by which we would have a skeleton organization at each of these plants and not lose the art of gunmaking in this country. If we did not need the material and we did not need the guns, why run the arsenals?

So we asked the gentlemen responsible for the Watertown item what they thought would constitute a minimum organization. They had in 1916 about 600 men. What do you suppose their minimum organization was to be in 1920? They propose 1,800 men as their minimum skeleton organization—three times the number of men that they utilized in 1916.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLEMP. Certainly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman speaks of the organization previous to this war.

Mr. SLEMP. I used the term 1916 specifically.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman tell us how many guns that organization produced to fight this war with? That is a pertinent question.

Mr. SLEMP. I told the gentleman we had secured something like 11,000 pieces of artillery, some purchased abroad and some made in this country. How many were purchased abroad will be found in the hearings.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What did your organization before the war produce?

Mr. SLEMP. They produced a part of the guns that were used during the war.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We did not have any.

Mr. SLEMP. I told the gentleman how many guns we had.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You never used them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLEMP. We tried to work out a skeleton-organization proposition. We found that the arsenal people reduced their estimate from three times the full number of men that they employed in 1916 to twice the number of men as a skeleton organization—twice as many men as they used to run the plant in 1916—and called that a skeleton organization, and I lost confidence in the skeleton organization when they asserted they should have twice the number of men they had in their former peace organization.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he thinks it fair to compare the skeleton at the Watertown Arsenal in 1916 and the Watertown Arsenal in 1920, when during that time, between those two dates, the plant has been quadrupled in size and in the kind of things done there?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes; and I will answer that proposition in this way: In 1916 this item carried $450,000, and it now carries more than three times as much. We are carrying in this item more than three times as much as we did in 1916.

Mr. DALLINGER. But you are doing four times as many different things at that arsenal.

Mr. SLEMP. We ought not to, and we have got to stop it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not this the fact, that as far as the needs of the Government and the people of the United States are concerned at this or any time in the near future, no matter what may happen, this entire item could go out?

Mr. SLEMP. Absolutely.

Mr. MONDELL. And that we are only carrying what is being carried here in order to keep an organization in the arsenal, and we are keeping them at work making things, even this organization, that we do not need?

Mr. SLEMP. Except one point, where the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], I think, is correct. That is this: All of the officers of the War Department recommend the manufacture of certain types of guns to test out for the future, and they call that experimental and development work. Some of the development business is absolutely a joke. In one instance they spent $400,000 in trying to make a fuse, and the hearings are full of questions, "You spent two and a half million dollars last year on your experimental proposition and what have you got to show for it?" And they answer, "Not a single gun; absolutely not a single gun." I think we have got to get down to business. That is what we tried to do here. They will have spent this year, on this item, $41,000,000—I mean this fiscal year. I believe it is a good idea to get down out of the trees, and if they wish to experiment on something, let gentlemen come forward to the committee and state what experiments they wish to make, and how much money they will cost, and then Congress can function on it; but just to give so much money, or three times as much as we gave in 1916, with no excuse for it except a minimum organization, as they call it, which is three times the previous full organization, does not have the approval of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, in line 21, page 4, by striking out the figures "$1,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$1,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 4, line 21, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am led to offer this amendment by the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee that all that is being sought to be maintained is a skeleton organization at these arsenals, and in the light of the statement of the leader of the majority, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], it would seem that the sum of $1,000,000 would be amply sufficient, because he states that the entire item should go out, and that they are not manufacturing anything which is necessary up there. The guns are not needed, the material is not needed, and there is nothing needed which apparently is being manufactured. Just what is being manufactured the leader of the majority does not tell us.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Very gladly.

Mr. GOOD. The estimate of the Secretary of War was for $15,000,000.

Mr. GARD. Oh, yes; and I am very glad to have the gentleman's word about that, but of course that does not take into consideration the maintenance of the skeleton organizations. That has in view the plan proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], which the gentleman himself repudiates. My plan is now to save $500,000 upon what the gentleman himself said is unnecessary, and what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said is unnecessary, and to maintain merely a skeleton organization there. One million dollars is enough to maintain the experimental ideas.

Mr. GOOD. Why, the Secretary of War estimated that it was necessary to have $15,000,000 originally, and as I recall in the reduced estimates $11,000,000, and that was on a very much reduced organization, somewhere between a skeleton organization and the amount asked for.

Mr. GARD. Yes; but we have left the elements of the organization except the skeletonizing of it, and, as has been said by the leader of the majority, there is nothing being manufactured there and this whole item can go out. Now, if the whole item can go out, surely there is enough left in the item to maintain the experimental features with a million dollars instead of $1,500,000 to appeal to those who are interested in saving large amounts on these appropriation bills. I make this amendment in the utmost good faith and point out where by their own statements and the statements of their own leader a saving of $500,000 can very properly be made.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. Is this the item, which I think amounted to some two or three hundred million dollars in the bill of 1916 or 1917, out of which all the money was taken to build the Muscle Shoals alleged nitrate plant?

Mr. SLEMP. I do not think so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. My recollection is it was the item——

Mr. SLEMP. It was out of munitions, not out of this.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is one of the items on the next page?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I wanted to ask, and might as well ask now, is the department now confining the expenditure of its appropriations to something like what the appropriations really call for?

Mr. SLEMP. That is the purpose next year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They are going to confine their items to what they call for and not——

Mr. SLEMP. That is what they say.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am very glad to know that is to be done.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say with reference to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] that we have cut this just as far as we could to do anything at all at the arsenals and we think it will result in doing some useful work. We cut it from $15,000,000 down to $1,500,000. If I could see any good object in a further cut of $500,000 I would not seriously object. We have got a lot of guns there which are incomplete and a small amount of money will complete them. There are some experiments——

Mr. VARE. The gentleman thinks they are entitled——

Mr. SLEMP. I believe in having a little common sense.

Mr. VARE. The gentleman believes they are entitled to 10 per cent of what they ask for?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question in reference to this. If you cut the amount which you now carry in this proposed appropriation an additional 33⅓ per cent, could they then conduct efficiently the experiments they wish to make and keep these plants in order?

Mr. SLEMP. I will state to the gentleman that with reference to an experimental proposition it is one of the most difficult things which the subcommittee had to handle. We would give a certain amount of money and we hoped it would get results, but in the very nature of things, with reference to an experimental proposition, we do not know of a certainty what we will get out of it.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Then the judgment of the committee that investigated it is they will at least need this much money to work at all?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes, sir.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The sarcasm of the gentleman from Ohio is very humorous in the light of the great amount of money that was expended for continuation of experimental stations during the war. I have in mind, in particular, the Curtiss aero plant, at Buffalo, which was maintained during most of the time as an experimental station, while the efficient Aircraft Board was experimenting as to the kind of aeroplanes that we should have and the engine that should be put into them, and the experiment resulted in about 27,000 men being kept on the pay rolls most of the time during the period, and contributed largely to the $1,051,000,000 for aircraft.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, $2,000,000.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 5, line 6, by striking out the words "two million" and inserting in place thereof "$3,909,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 5, line 6, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,909,000."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the indulgence of the committee for speaking twice on this matter, but this paragraph to which I have offered an amendment and the one to which the gentleman from Iowa offered his amendment and in favor of which I spoke are the two vital parts of this bill.

The adoption of these two amendments is absolutely essential, as I indicated before, to the maintenance of a skeleton organization at the arsenals and the carrying on of the absolutely essential experimental and training work of the War Department.

Now, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who is absolutely ignorant of this question, so far as its details are concerned, talked about manufacturing things that are not necessary. As a matter of fact, every cent of that $7,735,000 contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is necessary to carry on experimental and training work. It is necessary to make different kinds of ordnance in order to train men to make them, in order to train officers who shall be capable of supervising their manufacture, and for experimental purposes. A Government arsenal must keep up with the times. And if, as I have said before, we had had an efficient skeleton organization before the war, we would not have been in the deplorable state of unpreparedness that we were. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] did not affect the Watertown Arsenal to any great extent. About one-eighth of that appropriation would have been used at Watertown. The amendment which I have offered, however, does affect the Watertown Arsenal more directly, as about half of this item is to be expended for the manufacture of carriages for the new 16-inch guns and 16-inch howitzers which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] admits ought to be manufactured for coast-defense purposes.

Why, Mr. Chairman, is the Watertown Arsenal being maintained? It is not being maintained for the purpose of manufacturing useless munitions of war. It is being maintained for three reasons. In the first place, there are manufactured there the carriages for the new 16-inch coast-defense guns and their projectiles. In the second place, Watertown has been chosen as the principal laboratory of the War Department for the purpose of making experiments, in order that we may utilize the lessons of this Great War. In the third place, and most important of all, the Watertown Arsenal is being maintained for the purpose of having a training school for ordnance officers, a matter in which we were sadly deficient at the outbreak of this war.

In order that the Watertown Arsenal may carry out these purposes it is necessary that Congress should appropriate sufficient money to maintain a skeleton organization. Now, it is very unfair for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] to compare the skeleton organization of 1916 with the skeleton organization now. It is true that in 1916 there were employed at Watertown only 675 men. But what has been done at Watertown since that time? The people of the United States have expended over $15,000,000 on that plant. There has been added to the Watertown Arsenal a steel plant. There has been constructed there a gun-forging plant, a mobile-carriage plant, and a recuperator plant. Twelve new buildings have been constructed, the floor space quadrupled, and the arsenal converted from a small establishment requiring a small skeleton organization into a large, up-to-date manufacturing plant requiring a much larger skeleton organization. If 675 employees constituted a sufficient skeleton organization in 1916, then three or even four times that number would be necessary to maintain an efficient skeleton organization in 1920. Col. Dickson, the commandant at Watertown, reports that 1,800 employees are absolutely essential to the maintenance of such an organization.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] talked about a certain expenditure of $400,000—a mere bagatelle compared with the billions that were spent during the war—which he says was expended for the purpose of getting a better fuse, and he says that those in charge of the experiment have not yet succeeded in perfecting the improved fuse. Hence, he says, the money is wasted. If the gentleman from Iowa is correct, then all the money spent in medical research in order to find a cure for cancer, for instance, is wasted. So money is being spent in the new recuperator plant in experimenting with devices for the recoil of guns. Great improvements have been made and will continue to be made in this important field if the organization can be maintained.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I wish to resent the insinuation that I am in favor of the appropriation of a single dollar for the purpose of keeping a single man on the pay roll at Watertown or anywhere else unnecessarily.

The fact that the Watertown Arsenal is in my district and that some of the men employed there reside in my district is no reason why I should advocate an unnecessary expenditure of money by Congress, and I would be false to my duty as a Member of this House if I did so. As a matter of fact, the mechanics employed at the Watertown Arsenal have come from all parts of Massachusetts and from all over the United States—men who are experts in their line, and whose skill is absolutely necessary for the carrying on of this essential experimental work and to give the ordnance officers of the United States Army the necessary training that they should have. If you are not willing to give the Ordnance Department a sufficient amount to maintain the necessary skeleton organization, it is a great deal better to be manly about it and to say to the country, "We will close these arsenals; we will give up this work; we will trust to luck in case war comes, as we have done in the past. We will sell these great plants in order that the Treasury of the United States may be the richer by several hundred million dollars, and in order that the American people may be saved this large annual maintenance charge." That is the only logical thing to do. To refuse to heed the advice of the experts of the Ordnance Department and to permit the organization of these Government arsenals to be destroyed for the failure to appropriate a comparatively insignificant sum is the most shortsighted economy and can not be justified from any point of view. [Applause.]

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, there was no experimental work proposed under this item except as to one 18-inch gun, upon which the department desired to spend $300,000 next year. The committee did not agree. This is the situation: This item relates to the manufacture of 16-inch guns and 16-inch howitzers. They have thirteen 16-inch guns and twelve 16-inch howitzers, and their carriages are being manufactured. I do not know whether it is wise to go on with their production or not. In my judgment it is. That is where I stand. The Government of the United States on that proposition has already expended over $6,000,000. These guns are the largest and best guns in the world. They have been requested and demanded by every expert of the War Department from 1885 down to 1920. There has never been an expert before the Appropriations Committee who did not demand them. Looking back at the proposition, it occurs to me to ask why we did not make these guns at the start instead of having produced a lot of other things. Three of the pieces will be delivered before the 1st day of July and five before the 1st day of January, 1921; that is, if their program goes through. And some of the work has already been done on the carriages. Now, we figured that a good skeleton organization might be kept going in these arsenals, particularly the arsenal at Watertown. And I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] can not praise that arsenal too much or praise its facilities too much; but when he says they make steel there I wish to say that they have a steel plant, but they can not manufacture steel for less than $35 a ton, or something like that.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is not that because they are not able, because of the lack of appropriations, to run their plants continuously the way plants ought to be run?

Mr. SLEMP. It was because they wished to be independent, and that was all there was about it. They can not hope to compete with the United States Steel Corporation, which owns its own coal mines and its own transportation facilities. In case of emergency they have got that steel plant.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SLEMP. Certainly.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact that it is necessary to run all these different processes in order to give the ordnance officers the necessary training, the same as in the technical school?

Mr. SLEMP. Certainly not. There is no reason for running a steel plant in Watertown except in an emergency and in case of a deficiency in the supply of commercial steel.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in 1916 this item carried $300,000, and Watertown got along with it. In 1915 it carried $336,000. In 1914 it carried $128,000. We have been more than liberal in giving them more than $2,000,000, and I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the establishment, construction, enlargement, or improvement of aviation stations for use in connection with the seacoast defenses of the Hawaiian Islands, including the acquisition of land or any interest in land by purchase, lease, condemnation, or otherwise, and the preparation necessary to make the same suitable for the purpose intended, $1,300,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARD. I do it for the purpose of asking for information about the way this appropriation is carried. I note on page 11, beginning line 2 and including line 8, there is an appropriation "For the purchase, manufacture, maintenance, operation, and repair of airships," and so forth, which seems to be very inadequate, $100 for the Philippine Islands and $100 for the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. SLEMP. I will say to the gentleman that we asked the representatives of the department about that, and they said they did not want any money for these islands, but wanted to retain the language in the bill, and they asked for $100 just as a nominal matter.

Mr. GARD. A nominal matter?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What good does a nominal matter do?

Mr. SLEMP. It is to keep the language alive in the bill for the future. That is all there is in it.

Mr. GARD. It certainly does not do anything in the way of either purchase or manufacture or operation or repair of aircraft with a $100 item unless it is desired to carry that item so as to enter the estimates for another year.

Mr. GOOD. It is for future reference only. It will enable the department to keep their books open on this item, and when they come to Congress for an appropriation, the appropriations will be set down in our printed code for the committee, showing the appropriations by the year, and it will simply keep the books open on the matter.

Mr. GARD. As I gather, these two items are merely put in for the purpose of identification in future appropriation bills?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; at the request of the War Department.

Mr. GARD. I would like to have the gentleman inform me further—and I thank both the gentlemen for the information they have afforded me—as to the expenditure of $1,300,000 for the establishment, construction, and so forth, of aviation stations in the seacoast defenses of the Hawaiian Islands. What is included in that, and how far has any progress been made, if any?

Mr. SLEMP. The proposition stated before the committee was that we already have a field there purchased, one-half of it owned by the Navy and one-half owned by the Army; that the men are there without any place to live in, with salt water to drink, without quarters, and with no roads.

Mr. GARD. This provides "for the establishment, construction, enlargement, or improvement of aviation stations."

Mr. SLEMP. The field is already there and already purchased, and already in existence, and the men are already there. There are squadrons there, living in tents. This is to construct quarters and the necessary buildings for them, and to build the roads and provide the sewerage, and so forth. It is in Pearl Harbor. Lute Field is the field referred to.

Mr. GARD. How large a reservation is this for aircraft purposes?

Mr. SLEMP. My recollection is that it is 234 acres.

Mr. GARD. Two hundred and thirty-four acres?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes; but I can not verify it without looking it up.

Mr. GARD. Is it necessary to spend this money?

Mr. SLEMP. This is only a little over 50 per cent of what they asked. We have trimmed it down as best we could. We can give them quarters and facilities and technical buildings and roads, and fresh water to drink for the boys who are there now.

Mr. GARD. How many men are proposed to be maintained at this aviation station?

Mr. SLEMP. Four hundred, I think.

Mr. GARD. Are there any existing barracks there?

Mr. SLEMP. No.

Mr. GARD. No improvements on this field at all?

Mr. SLEMP. No.

Mr. GARD. So that it means the development of a field without any improvements on it at all?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes. A part of this money, $300,000, had been previously appropriated for certain buildings, and that was carried on in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, specifically for fortifications and armament thereof for the Panama Canal, $1,985,534.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations a question. Recently I saw in some paper the statement that the fortifications of the Panama Canal Zone are now inadequate and the batteries becoming obsolete. Does the chairman know anything about that matter, or was it investigated?

Mr. SLEMP. The situation about that is simply this: There is some misgiving as to the effectiveness of shells of the 12-inch guns against modern battleships. We have quite a number of 12-inch and 14-inch guns down there, and one 16-inch gun. Now, with modern ammunition, for which this bill carries a sufficient amount——

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice that it does——

Mr. SLEMP. We ought to be able to maintain our defensive position there. Originally the estimates contained about $5,000,000 for the further fortification of Taboga Island, about 15 miles out on the western side. That matter is under joint consideration by the Army and the Navy and they have not agreed on it just yet; so that was cut from the bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. Pending an agreement between the Navy and the Army?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes. I will say in regard to the fortification of Taboga Island, that the fire-control project provided in this bill will make it absolutely complete. Of course, the broad proposition would embrace questions of attack from vessels of certain depths and carrying certain thicknesses of armor on the decks and sides; but I do not think we are taking any chances.

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice this newspaper statement said the defenses of the Panama Canal Zone were rather inadequate—in fact, were regarded as inadequate against attacks by sea—and I saw no appropriation for armament and equipment there, and I wondered why.

Mr. SLEMP. They might, perhaps, be injured by an attack from a vessel like the Hood, and there is one Japanese vessel which might do some damage there out of the range of our guns. Of course, there is no French vessel, no Italian vessel, and no German vessel which would be dangerous, and only a few British vessels. I imagine there are not more than five vessels in the world that would be dangerous against the Panama fortifications. There are no British vessels armed with 17-inch guns; there are some with 15-inch guns, and there may be some new ones coming along that will have 16-inch guns. We have one 16-inch gun at Panama, and I think it is proposed to put some of the 14-inch guns there on railway mounts; but the big item is to add some more 16-inch guns when the Army and Navy agree on the policy, which will make those fortifications absolutely impregnable.

Mr. BRIGGS. That matter is now being worked on by the Army and Navy?

Mr. SLEMP. Yes. They have not agreed upon it, and so it was stricken from the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Section 2 has been carried in the bill 12 or 15 years or more. The same language has been carried giving the Secretary of War the right to purchase abroad. The third section was put in the bill when it was found that, so far as powder is concerned, as I recall it, we were purchasing it long before the war and paying a great deal more for it than we could manufacture it at the Picatinny Arsenal. That amendment was adopted on the floor of the House, and the proviso providing for giving some leeway, so that if an emergency should arise, if the President felt that it was emergent to purchase some material at a cost even more than 25 per cent in excess of the cost at the arsenal, the President, being Commander in Chief, should have that authority, but it was only in such an emergency that it was thought that right should be exercised, and it was given to the President instead of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WALSH. It is supposed that when they purchase abroad it should be an emergency or for the best interest of the United States, and yet they say in that section the Secretary of War can decide that question. I think the Secretary of War would have a much more intimate knowledge of the purchases that are being made and whether they could be manufactured in the Government plant as cheaply as in private establishments than would the President. I think it would facilitate action upon this particular proposition if we substitute the Secretary of War for the President.

Mr. GOOD. I have given the gentleman the history of the legislation. Foreign purchases were not looked upon with favor, as discriminating against home producers.

Mr. WALSH. But I would like the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. GOOD. I think that power that is given the President in section 3 should never be exercised except in case of war or threatened war. Now, the other might be a different case; it has to do with the purchase of raw materials, and things of that kind, that the President would not perhaps need to be consulted about and perhaps would not know anything about it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the proviso in section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That all orders for manufacture of material pertaining to approved projects, which are placed with arsenals or other ordnance establishments and which are chargeable to armament of fortifications appropriations, shall be considered as obligations in all respects in the same manner as provided for similar orders placed with commercial manufacturers.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to section 6, which apparently is a legislative provision, or at least it is so stated in the report. I make the reservation of the point of order for the purpose of asking why this new order of things is authorized by the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In order to save the Government money. At a certain time in the year, for instance, at the present time, if you wanted 100,000 rifles you could not place them in the Government arsenal because you could not finish them before the 1st of July. But you could buy them of private manufacturers.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman's statement does not apply to section 6. This is only chargeable to armament fortification appropriations.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The same thing applies to cannon—I used the word "rifles." We are using this same language in the Army bill. It was suggested by Gen. Lord, because, when they come to carry out the provisions of section 5 and place the orders in Government arsenals, where it is cheaper to manufacture them, they find that at certain times of the year the appropriation will run out before the order can be completed in the Government arsenals. If they went out and bought them the money could be used. This section makes the money applicable in Government arsenals.

Mr. GARD. Does it have any other effect than to give them two years instead of one year?

Mr. SLEMP. It does not.

Mr. GARD. What is the use of it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It has no other purpose than to make the money available for the Government arsenals and to save money for the Government.

Mr. GARD. How do you save any money for the Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because you can manufacture them cheaper in the Government arsenal than you can buy them. If you want to buy cannon you would have to buy them out of money appropriated in last year's bill for use in this fiscal year, and it would run out before you could manufacture them in the arsenal.

Mr. GARD. As I understand section 6, under existing law the appropriation continues only for the fiscal year, whereas under section 6, if this legislation is to be carried in this bill, the appropriation will be carried along for two years.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman understand that if the appropriation is available for the purchase or to make a contract with a commercial firm, and the obligation is entered into, the appropriation is available for two years?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not the intention to put these Government arsenals on the same footing by this section, so that if they entered into a contract or an agreement with the arsenal, the obligation is thereby incurred, and it will continue for two years, whereas without this language it would only continue during the period of the appropriation law?

Mr. GARD. I understand, as it is said in the report; but what I am trying to get at is, What benefit is there by including this in this bill, because it simply means, if anything, a little less bookkeeping?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Having been carried in the Army bill, where moneys are appropriated for certain works in the arsenals, can not the gentleman see that in reporting out this bill the committee ought to keep in mind what has already been done in the other bill, so as to have a uniform policy with regard to appropriations available for work in the Army?

Mr. GARD. Is this section carried in the Army bill?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That whenever any Government bureau or department procures, by purchase or manufacture, stores or materials of any kind, or performs any service for another bureau or department, the funds of the bureau or department for which the stores or materials are to be procured or the service performed may be placed subject to the requisitions of the bureau or department making the procurement or performing the service for direct expenditure: Provided, That funds so placed with the procuring bureau shall remain available for a period of two years for the purposes for which the allocation was made unless sooner expended.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order as against section 7. Will the gentleman explain what good purpose is accomplished by section 7?

Mr. SLEMP. This is a new section. The Army and the Navy seem to have the arrangement mentioned in this paragraph, and this will enable other bureaus of the Government to do business with the Government arsenals and the Government institutions. They can advance them money, and in that way they can make contracts. Suppose you want to make road machinery; suppose you want to use your arsenals for peace purposes, or any other Government operating plant. This will enable that particular department to do that, as I understand it. This is legislation and is subject to the point of order, but it is recommended by the various departments.

Mr. GARD. Does it do anything else than permit a transfer of funds?

Mr. SLEMP. Not as I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Suppose the Army should desire some work done in the gun factory here at Washington, and the Navy did not have the money appropriated to do that work. The bureau goes on with the work and the men must be paid weekly. Under the law the work can not be paid for out of the Army appropropriation until the work is completed and delivered. Under the authority carried in this bill they would be authorized to transfer funds so that the laborers could get their pay as they perform the work. It places that department on the same basis that it would be on if they were contracting with a private concern. With a private contractor the funds would be available even if not expended during the fiscal year, but this plan is not the same if the work is done in a Government plant, and we simply put the department on the same footing in that respect that the private concern the Government would contract with is now on.

Mr. GARD. I do not see that this affects the Government's private contracts. I do see that it may effect a transfer from one fund to another fund to care for existing emergencies.

Mr. GOOD. It amounts to an authorization to make a contract with another department just the same as authority is given to contract on the outside. That was the reason urged by the department, and they have earnestly requested this legislation. It is not legislation that has been offered without the recommendation by the department.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANFORD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLEMP, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the fortification bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House to-morrow for 10 minutes——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House tomorrow—when?

Mr. VARE. Upon convening.

The SPEAKER. Upon convening.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I presume the gentleman means after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. VARE. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman upon what subject?

Mr. VARE. On the coming congressional election.

Mr. GARD. On what?

Mr. VARE. On the congressional election that is now coming on.

Mr. WALSH. The approaching congressional election?

Mr. GARD. On the general wide subject of the general election, or pertaining particular to the gentleman's district——

Mr. VARE. On the approaching general election.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MACGREGOR was granted leave of absence, for one week, on account of urgent business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, April 14, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a bill to amend the Penal Code of the Canal Zone and the navigation rules of the Panama Canal, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 821), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRAGO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5815) granting relief to persons who served in the military telegraph corps of the Army during the Civil War, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 824), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2528) to grant certain lands to the city of Pocatello, State of Idaho, for conserving and protecting the source of its water supply and as a municipal park site, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 825), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BEE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9337) for the relief of the Cornwell Co., reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report

(No. 822), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13542) for the relief of the Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, Santa Rosa, Calif.; and Mineral City Bank, Mineral City, Ohio, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 823), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13497) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870 (16 Stat. L., 670), authorizing the Postmaster General to continue to use in the Postal Service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand-stamp patents, and directing him to "determine upon a fair, just, and equitable compensation for the use of said inventions," or arising otherwise, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. RAMSEY: A bill (H. R. 13588) authorizing the Secretary of War to enter into a contract with the borough of Tenafly, county of Bergen and State of New Jersey, to share with that municipality the cost of grading and paving a portion of Hickory Avenue, in said borough; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVILA: A bill (H. R. 13589) authorizing and directing investigations and experiments for the improvement of the fisheries of Porto Rico; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. RAYBURN: A bill (H. R. 13590) granting the consent of Congress to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., for the construction of a bridge across Red River, between the counties of Fannin, Tex., and Bryan, Okla.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUSTED: A bill (H. R. 13591) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty for collisions caused by and salvage services rendered to public vessels belonging to the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 13592) to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to commute their entries; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 13593) to change the name of oleomargarine to margarin; to change the rate of tax on margarin; to protect the consumers, dealers, and manufacturers of margarin against fraud; and to afford the Bureau of Internal Revenue more efficient means for the detection of fraud and the collection of the revenue; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RANDALL of California: Resolution (H. Res. 519) relating to increase of weight and size of parcel-post packages; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of New York, regarding the development of all aircraft and aerial navigation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 13594) granting a pension to Thomas J. Meadows; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPLEY: A bill (H. R. 13595) granting war-risk insurance benefits to John C. Kromer; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13596) granting war-risk insurance benefits to Hetta M. Flood; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 13597) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Pigg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYS: A bill (H. R. 13598) granting an increase of pension to George W. Overstreet; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUSTED: A bill (H. R. 13599) granting an increase of pension to George W. Hart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IGOE: A bill (H. R. 13600) for the relief of Mrs. William B. Ryan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PLATT: A bill (H. R. 13601) for the relief of P. Delany & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: A bill (H. R. 13602) for the relief of the Consolidated Gas Co. of New York; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TEMPLE: A bill (H. R. 13603) granting an increase of pension to Mary McNally; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 13604) granting an increase of pension to George W. Spann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 13605) granting a pension to Merrill Martin Chenoweth; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKS of Illinois: Resolution (H. Res. 518) authorizing the payment of $500 to August Buehne for extra services rendered the Members of the House of Representatives during the year 1920; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2934. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the American Legion, Department of Hawaii, urging the passage of legislation by Congress favoring the employment of citizen labor on all Federal projects in the Territory of Hawaii and urging the passage of certain legislation in regard to military matters; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2935. By Mr. CAREW: Petition of Signal Post, No. 343, the American Legion, New York City, favoring the passage of the Wadsworth bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2936. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, urging that the United States accept a mandatory in the Near East; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2937. Also, petition of the New Success Magazine, protesting against the proposed tax on advertising; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2938. Also, petition of the National Federation of Federal Employees, requesting investigation as to the efficiency of the Bureau of Efficiency; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2939. By Mr. PELL: Petition of the Amsterdam Democratic Club, of the seventh assembly district of New York City, favoring an increase in the Navy of the United States, making it a greater power than any other navy in the world; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 14, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast touched our poor human life with an infinite purpose. Those who have desired to see Thy glory have seen it not in the work of Thy hands but in the perfect life of Thy Son. Thou art the God of the perfect life. We thank Thee that the foundations of our civilization are based upon the qualities of life that He has revealed to us. Our common law, our standard of morals, our highest ideals are in Him. Grant us this day so to construct our lives as that we may be patterned after the image of Thy Son. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

BONUS TO EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I present and ask to have read an article from the news columns of The State, of Columbia, S. C., regarding resolutions of the American Legion of South Carolina.

I wish to state that the South Carolina Legion has spoken with discretion, judgment, and patriotism. South Carolina soldiers can be counted on to do the right thing in time of peace or in time of war. Their example ought to be emulated over the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From The State, Columbia, S. C., April 13, 1920.]

BONUS ATTITUDE CLEARLY STATED—STATEMENT SETS FORTH DEPARTMENT VIEWS.

"In order that the people of South Carolina may understand the position of the South Carolina department on the American Legion and the bonus Irvine F. Belser, State adjutant of the legion, yesterday gave out a statement for State headquarters, setting forth the attitude of the department.

"At a recent meeting of the executive committe of the South Carolina department resolutions were passed placing the department on record as being opposed to the legion waging a campaign for the bonus. The statement says that the department does not go into a discussion of the merits or demerits of the bonus, but leaves such matters entirely to Congress, the department being, the statement ends, 'unalterably opposed to the American Legion waging a campaign in "its selfish interest." The statement follows in detail:

"'The State convention of the department of South Carolina left the matter of a bonus to the delegation to the national convention, and the delegation voted unanimously for the American Legion to be hands off. The national convention passed resolutions leaving the matter to Congress, feeling that it could not "ask" for legislation in its selfish interest.

"'The national executive committee, at a meeting held February 10 and at a subsequent meeting held March 22, decided to advocate a bill asking for the bonus.

"'The department of South Carolina will not cooperate with the national organiaztion in waging a campaign for the bonus for two reasons:

"'1. The national executive committee went beyond its jurisdiction in reversing the national convention, for the executive committee is an administrative body and the convention the legislative body.

"'2. It is inconsistent with the principles on which the American Legion was founded.

"'The department of South Carolina does not go into a discussion of whether the bonus is advisable; whether the country can afford it; the merits or demerits of the question. It leaves such matters entirely to Congress. It is unalterably opposed to the American Legion waging a campaign in "its selfish interest."'"

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COLT. I present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1920.

Resolution recommending to Congress the passage of legislation providing for Federal inspection of inland barges. (Approved April 8, 1920.)

Whereas the loss of life along the shores of the State of Rhode Island is much endangered by the operation of inland barges, which are in many cases without lifeboats, anchors, cables, or life preservers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully requests our Senators and Representatives in Congress to introduce or urge the passage of a bill in Congress providing for the Federal inspection of all inland barges of 100 gross tons or over, and providing for the issuance of a certificate of inspection, which shall require that such barges shall be suitably equipped and in proper seaworthy condition; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, April 9, 1920.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution passed by the general assembly and approved by the governor on the 8th day of April, A. D. 1920.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid this 9th day of April, in the year 1920.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. COLT presented a memorial of the New England Coal Dealers' Association, remonstrating against further governmental regulation of the retail coal industry, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Columbus, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting adequate bonus to ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the American Cooperative Publishing Co., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the so-called Sherman antitrust law giving to the farmers of the country the right to collective bargaining, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELIEF OF ARMENIA.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have here a memorial which is addressed to the President of the United States and to Congress by a delegation of American Veterans of Armenian Origin. Some 500 of them have been here just now, in the uniform which they wore during the war, the uniform of our Army, and have requested me to present this memorial to the Senate, which I now do. The memorial is very brief; it will take but a few moments to read it, and I ask permission to have it read.

There being no objection, the memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

A MEMORIAL ADDRESSED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND TO CONGRESS BY A DELEGATION OF AMERICAN VETERANS OF ARMENIAN ORIGIN, APRIL 14, 1920.

We, 500 delegates representing the Union of American Veterans of Armenian Origin, the members of which fought in the recent war, have come to Washington respectfully to express to the President and to Congress the profound sense of disappointment which we and our comrades feel at the delay in the settlement of the Armenian question; to call attention to the intolerable conditions to which our kinsmen, the Armenian people, continue to be subject, and earnestly to petition our Government to extend to them immediate protection and assistance.

When we were called to arms and while we were on the field of battle we were happy in the conviction that we were fighting not only in defense of the beloved country of our adoption but also for the triumph of the principles for which she stands, as applied to the protection and liberation of oppressed nationalities, among which we naturally placed first our motherland, Armenia. And if we had been told that a year and a half after the date of the armistice our kinsmen would still be at the mercy of the Turk, would still be subject to violence and massacre, would still be prevented from returning to their homes by an undisarmed foe, and forced to the humiliation of subsisting upon charity, we should not have believed it. But, unfortunately, such is the appalling situation. While in the case of such sufferers as France, Belgium, and Serbia the foe was immediately disarmed, forced to evacuate the invaded territory, and to make restitution in the form of heavy indemnities for the property destroyed; while, as in the case of the nationalities which aspired to freedom from foreign domination, such as the Poles and the Czechoslovakians, boundaries have been defined and conditions established which have enabled these peoples to begin to organize States, to establish commerce, to resume industry, and the cultivation of the soil, Armenia, chief sufferer among all the nations which have been swept by the war, has during all these long months been left in a condition comparable to that which existed throughout the war.

We respectfully submit that this is altogether deplorable, not only on the general grounds of humanity, but also because of the fact that Armenia was actually an ally to whom America and the allied powers are indebted for significant military services. It may not be amiss to recall in a word what these services were. You are aware that at the very beginning of the war the Armenian people, through their representatives, were formally offered an autonomous government if only they and their brethren of Russian Armenia would definitely ally themselves with the Turks and the Central Powers against Russia, and that it was largely as a result of their refusal to do this that they lost over 800,000 of the flower of their race by a systematic deportation and massacre which have no parallel in history. You are aware of the part played by the Armenian volunteers in the army of Grand Duke Nicholas and of the services rendered by the 150,000 Armenian regulars of the Russian Army, who fought for two years on the eastern front, and who, with the volunteers, after the breakdown of Russia, took over the Caucasian front and held it for months without aid from any of the Allies. You are also aware that in the Palestinian campaign there were 9,000 Armenian volunteers, several thousand of whom came from the United States, and that the Army of the United States included thousands of Armenian soldiers and a very creditable proportion of Armenian officers.

In view of the heroism thus displayed by the Armenian people, and of the character of the despotism against which they had struggled for centuries, their complete liberation and future protection was universally agreed upon as a war aim, and specifically pledged by all the official spokesmen of the allied and associated powers. It is therefore in the belief that we are asking for no more than is just, and that in so doing we are but expressing the best of American traditions, that we respectfully state that we believe our Government is in a position to afford that immediate protection which Armenia so greatly needs, and to hasten a satisfactory settlement of the Armenian question. We further believe that our Government can use its influence to prevent the rumored break-up of Armenian territories which threatens to deprive Armenia of its richest and most valuable regions and an indispensable outlet to the sea.

We therefore respectfully urge our Government to take the necessary measures for the immediate protection of the Armenian people, now in imminent danger; to furnish them with adequate means of self-defense; and to provide them with facilities for the repatriation of the Armenian people, so that they may resume their normal life; and to extend immediate recognition to the Republic of Armenia, already in existence.

And may we add that to this chivalrous service, which we respectfully urge our Government to perform, we, the Union of American Veterans of Armenian Origin, pledge our own services and resources to the uttermost.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12581) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between the said States, and I submit a report (No. 525) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the section line between sections 13 and 24, township 146 north, range 49 west, fifth principal meridian, on the boundary line between Minnesota and North Dakota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND NATIONAL QUARANTINE.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 342, submitted by Mr. FRANCE on the 1st instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to hold hearings, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; to sit and act at such times as it may deem necessary during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ELIZABETH A. AGNEW.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 349, submitted by Mr. GLASS on the 13th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Elizabeth A. Agnew, widow of Frank E. Agnew, late the upholsterer and locksmith in the employ of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

RUSSIAN PROPAGANDA.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I submit, pursuant to Senate resolution 263, a report (No. 526) relative to the status and activities of Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, the representative in this country of the soviet régime in Russia, which I ask may be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 4216) for the relief of Ferdinand A. Roy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4217) granting a pension to John T. Clark;

A bill (S. 4218) granting a pension to Rhoda Button;

A bill (S. 4219) granting a pension to Raliegh H. Hamilton (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4220) granting an increase of pension to Edward A. Ward (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4221) granting an increase of pension to George Morrison (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4222) granting a pension to Emilie Deetz (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 4223) granting an increase of pension to Edward Jacob Stewart; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4224) for the relief of Sophie K. Stephens; to the Committee on Claims.

RESUMPTION OF COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit a proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute for House joint resolution 327, the so-called peace resolution, which is now before the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas actual hostilities between the warring nations in the late war ceased on the 11th day of November, 1918, under and by virtue of the terms of an armistice of said date; and

Whereas the German Government has acknowledged its defeat, and has by treaty yielded to every demand imposed by its enemies in said war, including the disbanding of its armies; and

Whereas commercial relations have been resumed between the said German Government and other Governments associated with the United States in said war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That commercial relations between the United States and Germany be, and the same are hereby, resumed to the same extent and under the same limitations as though no war had existed between the said Governments, and all laws prohibiting trade and commerce between the nationals of said Governments, enacted since the 6th day of April, 1917, are hereby repealed in so far as they are in conflict with this resolution.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13555. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11892, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], on page 7, line 21.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	McCormick	Smoot
Ball	Edge	McKellar	Spencer
Beckham	France	McNary	Thomas
Calder	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Townsend
Capper	Glass	Nelson	Wadsworth
Chamberlain	Gronna	Nugent	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Harris	Overman	Warren
Comer	Harrison	Page	Watson
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Wolcott
Cummins	Kellogg	Sheppard
Curtis	Kendrick	Smith, Ariz.
Dial	Kenyon	Smith, Md.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] are absent on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. LENROOT, Mr. NEW, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. REED answered to their names when called.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. KNOX, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. MOSES entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is known to the Senate that there are some very important nominations to be confirmed, action upon which ought to be taken at once. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 50 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3792.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. HARRISON. Let it be read, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] proposes to strike out section 37, page 44, beginning with line 11, in the following words:

SEC. 37. The construction service: There is hereby established a construction service which, under regulations to be established by the President and in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be charged with the construction, maintenance, and repair of all buildings, structures (other than fortifications), and utilities, and the preparation of plans therefor in accordance with the requirements of the several arms, corps, and services of the Army of the United States, and with the operation of such utilities as the President may direct, and with the acquirement of real estate and the issuance of licenses in connection with military reservations under the jurisdiction of the War Department.

The permanent personnel of the construction service shall consist of 1 chief of construction, with the rank of brigadier general, and 200 officers, in grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, and 6,000 enlisted men, in their appropriate grades, all of whom shall be detailed or assigned from the permanent personnel under the provisions of this act. The reserve personnel of the construction service shall consist of all reserve officers and reservists assigned thereto as provided for in this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Capper	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Chamberlain	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Colt	Harrison	Moses	Spencer
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Sterling
Dial	Kendrick	Nelson	Swanson
Dillingham	Kenyon	New	Thomas
Edge	Keyes	Nugent	Townsend
France	Kirby	Overman	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Page	Wadsworth
Gerry	Lenroot	Reed	Warren
Glass	Lodge	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	McCumber	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to his name when called.

Mr. WATSON, Mr. CALDER, and Mr. CULBERSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am anxious for progress upon the bill, and I shall speak very briefly upon the pending amendment, which is to strike out the provision for a separate construction division of the Army.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] on yesterday, in his defense of the separate construction division, disclaimed all responsibility upon the part of the construction division for the cost-plus system, and then, in the very next breath, after he had put in a very effectual disclaimer, said that the cost-plus system under the construction division had brought splendid results.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LENROOT. I shall do so in just a moment. It is a little curious why the defenders of the separate construction division and the cost-plus system are so anxious to disclaim responsibility for the cost-plus system. Now I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not think there is any inconsistency in the position I took. The cost-plus system was charged with gross evils in the argument yesterday, and I think by the Senator from Wisconsin. The purport, at least, of what I said, if I did not say it in terms, was that the construction division was not responsible for the cost-plus system, if that system was wrong. Later I sought to give some reason for the adoption of the cost-plus system, by whomsoever adopted, but with the statement that the construction division did not have the initiative in the cost-plus system. That is all that I meant to say; and I do not think there is any inconsistency in the argument which I made.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think there is any serious difference between the Senator from South Dakota and myself, but I understood the Senator yesterday to defend the results that had been secured through the cost-plus system.

Mr. STERLING. Not exactly to defend them, if the Senator will permit me—not that—but to say that the cost-plus system was, under the conditions at the time, a necessary evil; that contracts could not be made for camps and cantonments unless they were made under a contract of that kind—a cost-plus contract—and that the price of materials and the cost of labor being so uncertain was a reason why the cost-plus contract was insisted upon by the contractors.

Mr. LENROOT. Now I think we fully understand each other. The fact is, Mr. President, that there were thousands of professional men—civilian engineers and others—who patriotically volunteered their services, accepted commissions, and served for the salary of a commissioned officer—major, captain, or even of lesser rank—and then under the cost-plus system that is defended, not these officers but whoever is responsible, turned around and paid for services less valuable than many of these commissioned officers rendered fees under the cost-plus system amounting to a fortune in themselves to each individual contractor.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, does he blame that on the construction division? Was not that in pursuance of a policy inaugurated by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff and their determination that that kind of a contract should be made?

Mr. LENROOT. I do blame the head of the construction division, for the reason that when the evils of that system were developed, as they were developed in the very beginning of the war, and the gross and almost criminal extravagance that resulted from it, the head of that division, who had charge of it, ought to have protested and attempted to secure some other system, but, instead of that, he defended it, and defends it to this day.

I wish, Mr. President, that before voting upon this amendment every Senator might have read the report of the subcommittee on war expenditures of the House of Representatives and the testimony which they there quote concerning the results of the cost-plus system. If they had read it, I venture to say that there is not a Senator upon the floor, including the Senator from South Dakota, who would not vote for this amendment. That committee in making its report accompanied it with a proposed resolution, which I desire to read:

> Whereas the hearings before the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department on the construction of camps and cantonments contain testimony tending to show that there was criminal conduct in connection with the emergency construction work; and
> Whereas said hearings disclose cases where it is alleged Government funds were fraudulently and illegally paid to contractors and others in connection with emergency construction work: Therefore be it
> Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to refer to the Attorney General of the United States the testimony taken before the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department on the subject of camps and cantonments, together with the report of said committee and the minority views on that subject, with the request that the Attorney General institute investigations before grand juries for the purpose of indicting and prosecuting such persons as are guilty of criminal conduct, and to institute civil suits for the recovery of any Government funds which have been fraudulently or illegally paid on account of such emergency construction work.

That was the resolution. It was voted upon in the other House yesterday, and it was carried by a vote of 299 for it and 4 votes against it, showing that there was no partisan division upon the question. There was almost a unanimous vote in the other House.

Mr. President, it is fair to say that so far as I have read this evidence there is not the slightest suggestion of any criminal conduct upon the part of any of the officers or any "graft." It was due, in my judgment, almost wholly to the cost-plus system defended by the present head of the construction division. In fact, officers who served in the construction division have told me that because of this cost-plus system, the contractor's interest being to make the work cost as much as possible, and that there be as much loafing upon the job as possible, it was impossible for the officers in direct charge of the work to secure an honest day's work upon the part of the workmen.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] hands me the recommendations of this committee, with special reference to recommendation V, which I read:

> V.
> Your committee respectfully recommends that Congress make provision to place all engineering and construction work for the Army under the Corps of Engineers of the Army. It is moved to this recommendation by several considerations:
> 1. That the Corps of Engineers is distinctly the technical branch which should handle such work.
> 2. The initial features of any construction work involve engineering. Therefore they are best fitted to start such work promptly.
> 3. They are engaged in peace times in a greater variety of engineering and construction projects than any department.

I shall not take the time to read the entire committee report, but I want to repeat that a thorough examination of the testimony taken by this committee, considered in connection with the defense by the present head of the construction division of this cost-plus system, it seems to me ought to convince any Senator that this separate construction division, with one at the head of it who defends that system, ought not to remain in this bill.

Mr. President, Gen. Pershing, it should be presumed, is a very fair authority upon this subject. He had ample opportunity to observe the work of the engineers in the performance of the construction work in France; and I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter from Gen. Pershing upon this subject, under date of March 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

> MARCH 18, 1920.
> Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
> Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
> House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR MR. KAHN: As you will doubtless recall, when I appeared before your committee some months ago I stated my belief that the work of constructing barracks, quarters, hospitals, camps, and all other construction for the Army in the United States should be assigned to the Quartermaster Corps, by which such work was done before the World War.
> I was then, and am now, strongly of the opinion that the creation of a separate construction department is wrong in principle and decidedly uneconomical. This is based upon my experience in France, which showed conclusively that such a separate agency is unnecessary, therefore poor organization and wasteful of money.
> If for any reason Congress is indisposed to return this construction work to the quartermaster, in accordance with my original recommendation, then it might be well to confide it to the Corps of Engineers, which in France has proved itself competent to perform such a task promptly and economically. It may be said that the training which the officers of the Corps of Engineers would secure while doing this construction work in time of peace would be valuable in time of war.
> Very sincerely, yours, JOHN J. PERSHING.

Mr. LENROOT. That, Mr. President, is the opinion of Gen. Pershing. Secretary of War Baker is also of the same opinion and makes the same recommendation—that there be no separate construction division and that all original construction work be confided to the Corps of Engineers. I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter from Secretary Baker to Mr. KAHN, under date of March 12, making this recommendation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

> MARCH 12, 1920.
> Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
> House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR MR. KAHN: I desire to call attention to my communication addressed to you on March 5, 1920, referring to H. R. 12775, in which appears the following paragraph:
> "It is, therefore, my respectful recommendation that in due consideration of this subject provision be made for a separate transportation service and a separate construction service in the proposed bill."
> Through inadvertence the full purport of the paragraph above quoted escaped my notice, and I desire to at once correct any erroneous impression it may have conveyed as to my attitude on these two important subjects.
> It is now and has been my recommendation that the transportation service should be separated from the Quartermaster Corps and should constitute a separate and distinct service, independent of said corps, and be known as the transportation service; and it is now and has been my recommendation that the construction service should be separated from the Quartermaster Corps, be assigned to the Corps of Engineers, and be known as the construction service of the Corps of Engineers.
> It is hoped that the above corrections will receive careful consideration in the bill now before the House.
> Respectfully, yours, NEWTON D. BAKER,
> Secretary of War.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] attempted to make much of the fact that Gen. Rogers, of the Quartermaster Corps, and Gen. Beach, of the Engineer Corps, had exchanged letters with each other, as I recollect, advocating this consolidation between the Quartermaster Corps and the Engineer Corps, cutting out a separate construction division; but the Senate will recognize that five days before those letters were written the Secretary of War himself, the chief of all of these departments, had written a letter, which has just been read from the desk, advocating this very thing; so that in the exchange of letters between these two departments they were simply carrying out the recommendations of the head of the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am quite sure the Senator is mistaken. The letter from the Chief of Engineers to the Quartermaster General agrees with the suggestion of the Quartermaster General that transportation and finance be put under the Quartermaster General, which is something the Secretary of War never has urged. He has urged that we have a separate transportation service and a separate finance service.

Mr. LENROOT. I am confining myself to the construction department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The significance of the letter was that they did not coincide with the judgment of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LENROOT. They did, so far as the construction service was concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is only one-third of the problem.

Mr. LENROOT. The construction service is what is before the Senate at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true, but that is only one of the three problems discussed in those two letters.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator must have been referring to those letters with reference to their bearing upon the question that is before the Senate, which is the construction service; and I am stating that whatever was contained in those letters with reference to the construction service was only in accord with the recommendations of the Secretary of War himself.

Now, Mr. President, just one word more.

I confess that I can not quite understand the views that must have actuated the subcommittee, whatever views they may have held with reference to new and original construction, to induce them to place the operation of utilities and the maintenance of them in this separate division, as against the quartermaster division, if they desired to have economy in the expenditures of the Government. Why, Mr. President, take a small post where, without any increase of personnel, in addition to the duties that under this bill would be performed by the Quartermaster Department, the subcommittee would have a separate division go into that little post and have their officers and men represented there to operate those little utilities that might be done by the quartermaster's force without any increase of personnel at all—clear duplication, additional expense, without the slightest justification for this separate construction division having under its jurisdiction the operation of these utilities.

Mr. President, the expenditures under this bill will in any event be enormous, and it does seem to me that, although we are considering the Army, so necessary for the protection of our country, we ought at the same time to have some regard for economy and the expenditures that will be made under it; and wherever service can be performed without loss of efficiency, even though it may mean less power to some officers, that is a consideration which ought to be taken into account. The Senator from New York spoke yesterday of thirst for power. The major portion of the fight—I am not speaking of the committee—that is being made to maintain and to retain this separate construction division comes from gentlemen outside of the Senate who are thirsting for power and will have it if this separate construction division is maintained in this bill, but who will not have it if this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. President, I have no other possible interest in this amendment than the desire for economy and efficiency. I have had no relations of any kind with one department more than another, but I am satisfied that in time of peace, at least, there can be no justification for this additional expense and loss of efficiency by having a separate construction division.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I merely desire to make an announcement and will yield the floor in just a second.

Some time ago I introduced in the Senate a bill to establish military justice. It was really a bill intended to remodel and revise the Articles of War. It is known as S. 64. I give notice now that I shall offer it as an amendment to the Army reorganization bill; but I am not going to ask to have it printed as an amendment, because it is quite long, and there has been a constant demand for economy in the use of paper. There are a number of copies of the bill that can be laid on the desks of the Senators at the proper time; and I ask that it be considered as an amendment now proposed to the Army reorganization bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to say that, as the Senator, of course, is aware, that bill was referred to a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], the Senator from Oregon, and myself. I think perhaps I am somewhat at fault for not being able to meet with the subcommittee for final determination of the action of the subcommittee upon that bill.

I have completed my study of the bill. I shall be glad to meet with the subcommittee at any time, and I do not think it will take very long for us to make a report.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say, in answer to the Senator from Wisconsin, that I was not blaming him or any other member of the subcommittee. Probably we are all to blame. It would be very much better, it seems to me, if we could get together as a subcommittee and report out the bill; but I did not want the session to end without having it considered by the Senate in some form. It would very materially reduce time and labor if the subcommittee could agree on the amendments proposed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee I wish to say that it is true that the Senator from Wisconsin has been very much engaged on various measures, particularly so until the League of Nations covenant was laid aside, and, in deference to him, and also to the fact that appropriation bills have been pressing, I have refrained from calling further meetings of the subcommittee. The subcommittee has accumulated all the evidence that is necessary, I think, and all the printing is done. I will say now, as both the other members of the subcommittee are here, if they will meet in my room to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock we will undertake to put the measure in shape so that the Senator from Oregon may offer as an amendment what may be determined upon, if he proposes to offer the matter in that way.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator not make it 9.30? I have another meeting to attend at 11.

Mr. WARREN. Nine or nine thirty. I will leave it to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At any time from 7 o'clock on.

Mr. WARREN. We will make it 9.30.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, until the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] had spoken, I had not expected to say another word in regard to the pending amendment, and I shall be very brief now.

I will not yield to the Senator from Wisconsin or to any other Senator in insistence upon the system that will mean economy and efficiency. It is because I believe there is economy and efficiency in the maintenance of the construction division as a separate and independent service that I am opposed to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. President, I can hardly conceive why the question of cost-plus contracts has been dragged into this debate. That question is wholly apart from the question as to whether we shall continue to maintain a construction division in the Army as a separate and distinct division. Reasons have been given as to why the cost-plus system was resorted to in the first instance. It seemed necessary in order that we might have a great work accomplished in a certain very limited time, a period of 90 days, that the War Department, under the conditions as they then existed, should adopt that kind of a contract.

It has been shown, I think, and quite conclusively, that the head of this division is not responsible, and never has been, for that form of contract, but that the Secretary of War is the official who is responsible to begin with. He realized the situation, and no other form of contract could be adopted with a prospect of results such as were demanded at that time.

Mr. President, I have seen the letters of Gen. Pershing, Quartermaster General Rogers, and the Secretary of War, to which the Senator from Wisconsin has made reference. Of course, what Gen. Pershing saw was in the theater of operations in France, and where, necessarily, the work must have been under the general supervision of the Army engineers. It was for the Army to say, and the Army engineers as a branch of the Army, whether a road was to be constructed here or not, whether a bridge was to be erected there or not. They were on the ground, operating with a great armed force in the face of the enemy, and they knew, and they only could know, the exigencies of the hour and what was needed in the way of Army construction.

Mr. President, we have been referred to the great work, unsurpassed, I think, in the history of this country, if not in the history of the world, which was accomplished by the construction division as a civil division, as it were, from the time it was ascertained in the first instance that it could not be done by the Army engineers, or could not be done by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army, and when, under the direction of the Secretary of War, all of it was put under the control and supervision of this selfsame construction division.

Realizing the situation, Mr. President, the Secretary of War knew that that was the only way by which the great work could be achieved. Our claim is that this demonstrates clearly what the construction division is capable of, what it can do now, and what it can do in the future. The past justifies the continuance in existence of the construction division as a separate and distinct division.

I know, Mr. President, what the Quartermaster General says. What is his proposition? In the main I think this, Mr. President, that the construction part of the work, now under the supervision of the construction division, and which has been in the past under the supervision of that division, shall go to the Army engineers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator that that was a very recent conversion on the part of the Quartermaster General, who for months has been asking that all the construction work be put under him.

Mr. STERLING. I understand so. He is now content, as I understand, that the work of operating and maintaining the work constructed shall be under the Quartermaster General.

There are the two phases of the work, Mr. President, construction work, to begin with, and then operating work afterwards. Both can be performed by this one separate construction division, instead of, as the Quartermaster General now proposes, their being put under two different organizations of the Army, the one under the Quartermaster Corps, the other under the Army Engineer Corps.

I want to refer to what has been said as the expressed opinion of Secretary Baker. Whether he believed it or not, whether he intended it or not, Mr. President, the Secretary, of course, has given expression to two different views in this regard. His first expression was that this should be a separate division, and I quote from his letter, and from the language which he now quotes in a subsequent letter, wherein he wishes to correct the former. He says, in writing to Mr. KAHN, under date of March 12:

> I desire to call attention to my communication addressed to you on March 5, 1920, referring to H. R. 12775, in which appears the following paragraph:
> "It is therefore my respectful recommendation that in due consideration of this subject provision be made for a separate transportation service and a separate construction service in the proposed bill."

Mr. President, there is nothing very involved about that. It would seem as if he had clearly before him from the very language itself the two distinct propositions, and he deliberately recommended the two services as separate and distinct services, the transportation service on the one hand and the construction service on the other. Then he goes on to explain:

> Through inadvertence the full purport of the paragraph above quoted escaped my notice, and I desire to at once correct any erroneous impression it may have conveyed as to my attitude on these two important subjects.

It was not an "impression" simply that would be conveyed, Mr. President, by the language used, and which I have just quoted. The thought that would naturally arise in the mind of the reader would be that it was the fixed opinion, the deliberate opinion, of the Secretary of War, that there should be these two branches of the service. Let me read another paragraph of this same letter:

> It is now, and has been, my recommendation that the transportation service should be separated from the Quartermaster Corps and should constitute a separate and distinct service, independent of said corps, and be known as the transportation service; and it is now, and has been, my recommendation that the construction service should be separated from the Quartermaster Corps, be assigned to the Corps of Engineers, and be known as the construction service of the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. President, that is so elaborate and distinct it is wonderful that the Secretary of War did not have something of the same kind in mind when he wrote the prior letter to which he referred, and in regard to which he wishes to correct any wrong impression that may have been derived from it.

But the point in regard to this, Mr. President, is this: Why a separate transportation service? Why any more need for a separate transportation service than there is for a separate construction service? Why does that not go under the supervision of the Quartermaster General? I have not yet heard an argument advanced by those who favor this amendment, by the Senator who offered it or anyone else, as to how economy and efficiency would be served if the transportation service should be made a separate service, as proposed by the Secretary of War, and the same principle not apply to the construction service.

It seems to me there is something quite inconsistent in these two positions.

But, Mr. President, Gen. Pershing gets his view from conditions at the front and in the theater of war.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I just want to remind the Senator that the Quartermaster Department is the department which procures all the supplies for the Army, and it is highly appropriate that the department which procures the supplies should also provide for the transportation. That is entirely distinct from this other question which the Senator has discussed.

Mr. STERLING. But the Secretary of War recommends not that the transportation service be put under the Quartermaster Corps, but that it be made a separate and distinct service. I would agree that if there is any one of these services that should be united with another and be made to come under the supervision of another, it is the transportation service. The Quartermaster does deal in supplies and in the transportation of supplies in great quantities for the use of the Army. Why should not the transportation service then be under the supervision of the Quartermaster General instead of being made a separate and distinct service?

Now, Mr. President, a word further in regard to the matter of economy and efficiency. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what was recommended by the War Department when the bill supported by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff for the new Army was up for consideration before the committee.

In the bill submitted to the Congress by the War Department there were included for these several services of the Quartermaster Corps some 2,700 officers. Applying an ordinary percentage to this, at least 270 of these would be needed for the operation of utilities, and this bill contemplated that the Quartermaster Corps would not do construction but would operate utilities. This bill also contemplated that the Engineer Corps would do construction, and at least 370 of these officers were for construction purposes alone, making a total of 640 officers for construction and operation of utilities, where the Chief of Construction asked for 294 only—294 at that time, but cut down to 200 by the terms of section 37 of the bill. So what the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General were representing as being necessary for the performance of this work when they appeared before the committee having the bill under consideration was 640 officers, while, as a fact, the work of construction and of the operation of utilities can be done by 294 or perhaps by 200, as proposed by the bill.

I should like that this question be considered wholly on its merits without reference now to the cost-plus proposition, which has nothing whatever to do with the question, and yet I may say that it has been the burden of the argument of the distinguished Senator who introduced the pending amendment. Since January 1, 1919, not a cost-plus contract has been made. Since that time every contract has been a lump-sum contract, and there is no question that they will continue to be so, and if they are not so the responsibility will rest with the Secretary of War, who has the final determination as to the kind of contract that shall be made.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McKellar	Simmons
Calder	Hale	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Capper	Harris	Myers	Smoot
Comer	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	New	Sterling
Curtis	Kendrick	Nugent	Swanson
Dial	Kenyon	Overman	Thomas
Dillingham	Keyes	Page	Wadsworth
France	Kirby	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Pomerene	Warren
Gerry	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wolcott

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. MOSES answered to his name when called.

Mr. REED, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. TRAMMELL, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. COLT, and Mr. WATSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to strike out section 37 of the bill.

Mr. MCKELLAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. SPENCER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], but under the arrangement I have with him I feel free to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I inquire whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I withhold my vote, having a general pair with that Senator. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of official business.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is absent on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. MCCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], who is unavoidably absent. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. KNOX. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. In his absence and not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on official business.

I desire also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM].

The yeas and nays resulted as follows:

YEAS—23.

Borah	Harris	McKellar	Reed
Comer	Harrison	McNary	Simmons
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smoot
Gerry	Kirby	Nugent	Trammell
Glass	Lenroot	Overman	Wolcott
Gronna	McCumber	Pomerene

NAYS—24.

Calder	Hale	New	Swanson
Capper	Kendrick	Page	Thomas
Colt	Kenyon	Phipps	Wadsworth
Cummins	Keyes	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
France	Lodge	Spencer	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Sterling	Watson

NOT VOTING—49.

Ashurst	Gay	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Ball	Gore	Moses	Smith, Ga.

Elkins	King	Ransdell	Williams
Fall	Knox	Robinson
Fernald	La Follette	Sherman
Fletcher	McCormick	Shields

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this question the yeas are 23 and the nays are 24. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] having announced their pairs, there is a quorum present, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as Senators will doubtless remember, I gave notice that, following the striking out of the provisions for universal military training as one of the features of this bill, it would be necessary to make a reallotment of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the permanent establishment, or Regular Army, involving incidentally a reduction of the number of officers by 1,007.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to interrupt me?

Mr. LENROOT. I merely desire to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote in the Senate upon the amendment which has just been voted upon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I purpose at this time to offer those amendments, and I seriously invite the attention of the Senate to them as they are offered, because attention to them will make it entirely possible to understand just what the effect has been of striking out the universal military training feature.

Incidentally, may I say, in view of the notice just given by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], that if the Senator reserves his amendment again to be taken up in the Senate we shall have to ask to reserve this whole matter also.

Mr. LENROOT. I so understand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, perhaps the quickest way is to offer the amendments verbally from the floor, as they are merely changes in figures, which can be followed very easily. On page 9, line 22, before the words "major generals," I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "eighteen."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On the same page, before the words "brigadier generals," in line 22, I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, on page 9, line 23, I ask that the proposed committee amendment to substitute "six hundred and nine" for "six hundred and eleven" in the grade of colonel be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now move that "six hundred and eleven" be stricken out and that "five hundred and sixty-nine" be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make a similar request in regard to the committee amendment on line 24, page 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment referred to by the Senator from New York is rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now move to strike out "six hundred and eighty-eight" and insert "six hundred and forty" as the number of lieutenant colonels.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make a similar request as to the committee amendment on line 25 of the same page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment at the place referred to is rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now move to strike out "two thousand two hundred and ninety-two" and insert "two thousand one hundred and thirty-four" as the number of majors to be provided for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make a similar request as to the committee amendment on line 1, page 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee referred to by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now move to strike out "four thousand five hundred and eighty-four" and to insert "four thousand two hundred and sixty-seven."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make a similar request as to the committee amendment on line 2, page 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment reported by the committee, on line 2, page 10, is rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to insert "four thousand and fifty-four" in place of "four thousand three hundred and fifty-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make a similar request as to the committee amendment on lines 3 and 4, page 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the same order will be made in reference to that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now move that "two thousand seven hundred and fifty-two" be stricken out and "two thousand five hundred and sixty" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those amendments, Mr. President, reduce the commissioned personnel of the permanent establishment from 18,000 down to 16,993, a decrease of 1,007 officers.

Now, if the Senate will bear with me patiently, on behalf of the committee I will offer amendments making certain changes in the allotment of the officers as well as certain changes in the allotment of the enlisted strength of the Regular Army. Commencing on page 17, section 17, the Infantry, on line 10, I move to strike out "five thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And, on lines 10 and 11, I move to strike out "ninety-four thousand" and insert "one hundred and ten thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 17, line 21, in the Cavalry, I move to strike out "seven" and insert "nine," making it read "950 officers."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In line 22, I move to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty," making it read "20,000 enlisted men."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say that that is in line with the suggestion made the other day by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, what is the object of increasing the Cavalry force beyond that provided in the bill? You increase the number of officers and the number of enlisted men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the net result of this whole thing will be a decrease of 1,007 officers, with no decrease in enlisted men.

Mr. NELSON. That does not answer my question. What is the object of the increase of the Cavalry force? It has been increased from 750 officers and 14,000 enlisted men to 950 officers and 20,000 enlisted men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was about to answer that. As I said yesterday, the abolition of compulsory universal military training will relieve the supply services of the Army of a very heavy burden. For example, if we were to call into training camps every year 500,000 boys between 18 and 21, it is obvious that the Quartermaster Corps and the Construction Service and the Transportation Service would have a very heavy burden, the Transportation Service having charge of all the transportation in and about the camps in the way of motor-truck transports, and handling the men on the trains going to the camps and going home from the camps, and the Quartermaster Corps would have a very heavy supply problem; but that being done away with, it is our purpose to suggest the transfer from some of those supply services of a certain proportion of the men allotted to them under this bill, and to put them into the combat branches, such as Infantry and Cavalry.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, the amendment made above reduced the Infantry, too, as I understood the amendment that the Senator offered just before this.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the amendment I offered above increased the Infantry from 94,000 to 110,000 men.

Mr. NELSON. I misunderstood the Senator, then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There being no compulsory universal military training, and the supply services being relieved of a considerable burden by reason of the decision of the Senate not to have universal military training, it is apparent that the greater the strength of the Army that we can put into the combat services the better it will be in the interests of national defense; and by fortifying the combat branches and reducing the number of officers and men to be assigned to the supply services, we put the burden of proof upon the supply services, who, under the terms of this bill, would have to persuade the President that they needed more men; and the President, acting under that elastic provision of the bill, could give them more than we have allotted them, but could not do so without taking them away from the combat services.

Does the Senator from Minnesota desire to oppose that amendment?

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, Mr. President, on page 18, Field Artillery, lines 7 and 8, I move to strike out "two thousand two hundred" and insert "one thousand nine hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On line 8, I move to strike out "thirty-nine" and insert "thirty-seven," so as to read, "thirty-seven thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 18, Coast Artillery, line 18, I move to strike out "one thousand and fifty" and insert "one thousand two hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On the same line, I move to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "thirty," making it read "30,000 enlisted men" of the Coast Artillery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 19, the Air Corps, line 5, I move to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "sixteen."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question in regard to the last amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. I notice that you reduce the number of enlisted men of the Air Corps from 21,000 to 16,000—that is a reduction of 5,000—but you leave the number of officers, 1,550, the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Why is that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is only the officers who are fliers. We do not want to reduce the number of fliers below 1,550. The enlisted men are largely mechanics and men who take care of the hangars and take care of the motors and the machines of all the different types. Had we had universal military training, and some young men offered to train for the Air Corps, it would have required, of course, a larger number of enlisted men to take care of the extra equipment thus made necessary. That having been done away with very largely, the committee feel safe in reducing the number of enlisted men—that is, in reducing the allotment. It ought to be remembered that these are merely allotments. They can be raised or lowered by the President, but not in any way to disturb as a maximum the figure of 280,000 enlisted men.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, they can be raised or lowered without further legislation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, they can; but they must not in any event exceed the maximum of 280,000; and no one branch, may I say to the Senator from Ohio, can be lowered more than 20 per cent.

On page 20, Corps of Engineers, lines 5 and 6, I move to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "six hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In line 6, I move to strike out "sixteen" and insert "twelve."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is the same explanation applicable to the Corps of Engineers with reference to the officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; Mr. President.

On line 15, I move to strike out the word "four," near the end of the line, before the word "hundred," and insert "three."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 32, line 9, the Judge Advocate General's service, I move to strike out "eighty," in front of the word "officers," and insert "one hundred and twenty."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, why is there an increase in that number of officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that is a portion of a committee amendment which takes care of the very peculiar situation in the Judge Advocate General's service. It is perfectly apparent—the committee has been persuaded, and had a special meeting upon it—that 80 officers for the Judge Advocate General's service are utterly inadequate; that 120 are absolutely necessary. They have well over 250 now, and the law business of that branch of the service is enormous, perfectly tremendous.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, during the war it was enormous.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It still is. It is tremendous. In fact, it is growing rather than decreasing, from the best information the committee can get. May I say that the Secretary of War and the Judge Advocate General himself join in a very urgent request that they be given 120 officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, they had very many more than that during the war. This is a very much less number.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a very sharp reduction at that. The House bill, may I say, gives them 100, and my information is that some of the members of the House committee realized that that was too small; but in connection with the Judge Advocate General's service I think I ought to give notice, as I have before, that I shall offer a committee amendment making some special provisions for the Judge Advocate General's service. I will offer it now, in order that it may be printed. It is so important that I think it ought to be printed, because undoubtedly it is going to give rise to discussion. A great many Senators have been interested in it; but that number—120—is the number agreed upon among all the Senators who have offered amendments.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the amendment be stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not going to press it now.

Mr. POMERENE. I understood that, but I should like to have it read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment for the information of the Senate.

The READING CLERK. On page 32, line 6, after the word "purpose," insert:

Immediately upon the passage of this act the number of colonels in the Judge Advocate General's Department shall be increased by 5, and the vacancies thus created shall be filled by promotion as heretofore provided by law.

Line 9, strike out "major" and insert "captain."

Line 12, after "act," insert:

Vacancies remaining or occurring in the Judge Advocate General's service, after the original appointments in the field grades authorized in section 42 of this act have been made, shall be filled by the assignment thereto of officers of the permanent personnel in their proper grades from captain to colonel, inclusive, as provided by this act, by the appointment in the grade of captain of first lieutenants of the permanent personnel or by the appointment in the grade of captain of reserve officers not under 30 years of age of the Judge Advocate's General's service. Appointments in the grade of captain herein provided shall be subject to such examination as the Secretary of War may prescribe. Reserve officers so appointed in the grade of captain shall be considered as having had on the day of appointment sufficient prior service to entitle them to promotion to that grade, and shall be placed accordingly upon the promotion list provided for in section 43 of this act.

Provided, That any person under 54 years of age having special scientific, technical, or professional qualifications, and who is otherwise eligible for appointment to a field grade under the provisions of this section may, upon the recommendation of the chief of such service and the concurrence of the board of general officers herein provided, be appointed to the grade of colonel, lieutenant colonel, or major, as provided in this section, without reference to the minimum age limits otherwise prescribed for appointments in such grades. But no such person under 34 years of age shall be appointed to any field grade.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. What is meant by the phrase "appointed from the permanent personnel" of this department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Regular Army.

Mr. WARREN. As they do now.

Mr. POMERENE. Does that mean that any of these appointments may be made from those who were inducted into the service of that particular department during the period of the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Some of them may; yes. In fact, the majority of the new officers will be from the emergency officers.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand that there was a judge advocate general's office connected with the Regular Army and another one connected with the National Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; it is just one office; but during the war they brought in a large number of lawyers from civil life and gave them commissions from colonel down.

Mr. POMERENE. Am I to understand, then, that some of these men, if they see fit to appoint them, can be appointed without an examination to the higher grades?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; it is not without examination.

Mr. POMERENE. Some of them ought to pass examinations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Do I understand the Senator to say that he is offering the amendment to be voted on now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; to be printed.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason why I ask is because I have a substitute which I shall offer for the amendment when it comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not intend to call up the amendment this afternoon?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As soon as the reallotment amendments are finished with I hoped the Senate could go on and finish a couple of committee amendments.

Mr. KENYON. But not to act on the amendment just read?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; because I would like to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to strike out, on page 30, line 9, the word "eighty," and to substitute therefor the words "one hundred and twenty."

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from New York if a single list is provided for in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. HARRISON. Are those in the Judge Advocate General's office excluded from the single list, or are they included in it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are to be included in it after the initial organization of the Judge Advocate General's Department, as provided for in the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that if you increase this number from 80 to 120, there are certain officers now in the Judge Advocate General's office who have been appointed during the war and who hold commissions as high as major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel—some of those who have had those commissions will be included among the number, will they not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If they are appointed into the permanent personnel as a result of vacancies created by the act.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, if a single list is provided for it will necessarily cause some of the men in the Infantry, Artillery, or Engineers to be demoted that much?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; Mr. President, there will be no demotion as a result of the single list.

Mr. HARRISON. It will necessarily retard the promotion of certain men who have been in the Army for quite a long time, will it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will not retard it in comparison with the rate of promotion in the past. The rate of promotion as the result of the single list will be on the average exactly what it has been through the entire Army. But certain branches of the service will cease having that advantage over other branches, which special legislation and influence have given to them in time past. I admit that.

Mr. HARRISON. I was in hopes that this amendment would not be offered and acted on until we had settled this proposition of a single list, because I have an amendment which I propose to offer making the single list operative from the passage of the bill, and not retroactive, so that it would affect men who have been in the service 20 years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This allotment of the personnel has no connection with the single list. With the single-list provision stricken out of the bill it would make no special difference in this allotment of the different services.

Mr. NELSON. It may not be pertinent to this particular amendment, but to me the slight increase in the Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery which the Senator has made by these recent amendments looks very much like taking care of five or six hundred additional officers. I can not see any reason why the chairman of the committee all at once became anxious to increase the Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery, except that it gave an opportunity to increase the number of officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is quite mistaken. The number of officers is reduced by 1,007.

Mr. NELSON. You reduce them in one part, and here you increase them in another.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me remind the Senator that these figures do not actually fix the strength of these arms. This is merely an allotment, to be considered in each case as somewhat of a standard number. The President may increase or decrease the number of officers and men in each and every branch of the service from time to time as the number of the tactical organizations demand. I thought I explained that when we gave up universal military training it relieved the supply services of a very heavy burden and made it entirely possible to transfer from the supply services some officers and men, especially men, to the combat services. If we are not to have an assured reserve Army composed of citizen soldiers, trained under universal military training, it is wiser and safer for us to build up the combat branches of the Regular Army, and that is just what we are trying to do. We are not taking care of any officers. The spirit of this whole bill, Mr. President, lies in the fact that all the officers of the Army are put into one big pool of officers, with the exception of the medical service and the chaplains, from colonels down to second lieutenants, inclusive. The President can assign that personnel in any way he sees fit, under certain elastic provisions in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; he can go up to the maximum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So long as he does not exceed the maximum number of officers fixed in the bill, he can assign just as many colonels to the Infantry as he wants.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, I was greatly delighted when he told us that on account of striking out enforced military training, and making it voluntary, the corps of officers would be reduced by about 1,000. But now it looks to me as though what he has given in one hand he has taken back in the other.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NELSON. He adds to the number of officers in the Infantry, Artillery, and Engineer Corps, and makes additional officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. NELSON. And, of course, he does that on the ground that he is increasing the force a little. It looks to me as if this was a sudden inspiration to provide for some more officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not attribute any such motive to me. I do not think he really means it.

Mr. NELSON. I do not impute any bad motive to the Senator. I am only telling him how it strikes me, and I can not help it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I explain it once more, and perhaps it is my own fault for not explaining it clearly enough. It is true that by the reallotment which I have just proposed we increase the officers and men, and especially the men, in the combat branches, but we decrease the officers and men in the service. The net result is a net decrease of 1,007 officers.

Mr. NELSON. Do you not think it could be decreased another thousand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The next amendment is, on page 34, in line 5, after the word "and," I move to strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight." That takes a thousand men off the Quartermaster Department. We think that is about the minimum they can get along with in their work. If the President wants to, he can take more off and assign them to other branches which need them more.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs allow me to present a conference report?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and I move its acceptance and agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 40, 42, 43, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 67, 68, 76, 80, 84, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 100, 102, 112, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 145, 154, 158, 159, 160, 167, 168, 174, and 185.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 63, 64, 65, 66, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 77, 82, 87, 88, 89, 90, 98, 99, 101, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 141, 142, 143, 144, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 155, 157, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, and 189, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$24,060"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"The duty placed upon the Secretary of the Interior by section 4 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883, shall be performed on and after July 1, 1920, by the Civil Service Commission.

"For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Civil Service Commission, including furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto; supplies; telegraph and telephone service; freight and express charges; fuel, heat, light, and power; window washing; street car fares not to exceed $100; stationery; law books, books of reference, directories, newspapers, and periodicals, not to exceed $350; charts; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles; maintenance and repair of electric conduit; postage stamps to prepay postage on matter addressed to Postal Union countries; and special-delivery stamps; in all, $50,000.

"For rent of building for the Civil Service Commission, $16,875."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the sum stricken out by said amendment and strike out lines 15 to 20, inclusive, on page 32 of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For temporary employees in the Department of State, $402,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum and not more than 8 persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: Four at $4,500 each, 3 at $4,000 each, 10 at $3,500 each, and 5 at $2,500 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,060"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"Section 3595 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, providing for the appointment of an Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, San Francisco, Cincinnati, and Chicago, and all laws or parts of laws so far as they authorize the establishment or maintenance of offices of such Assistant Treasurers or of Subtreasuries of the United States are hereby repealed from and after July 1, 1921; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to discontinue from and after such date or at such earlier date or dates as he may deem advisable, such Subtreasuries and the exercise of all duties and functions by such assistant treasurers or their offices. The office of each Assistant Treasurer specified above and the services of any officers or other employees assigned to duty at his office shall terminate upon the discontinuance of the functions of that office by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to transfer any or all of the duties and functions performed or authorized to be performed by the Assistant Treasurers above enumerated, or their offices, to the Treasurer of the United States or the mints or assay offices of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, or to utilize any of the Federal reserve banks acting as depositaries or fiscal agents of the United States, for the purpose of performing any or all of such duties and functions, notwithstanding the limitations of section 15 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, or any other provisions of law: Provided, That if any moneys or bullion, constituting part of the trust funds or other special funds heretofore required by law to be kept in Treasury offices, shall be deposited with any Federal reserve bank, then such moneys or bullion shall by such bank be kept separate and distinct from the assets, funds, and securities of the Federal reserve bank and be held in the joint custody of the Federal reserve agent and the Federal reserve bank: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to deny the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to use member banks as depositaries as heretofore authorized by law.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to assign any or all the rooms, vaults, equipment, and safes or space in the buildings used by the Subtreasuries to any Federal reserve bank acting as fiscal agent of the United States.

"All employees in the Subtreasuries in the classified civil service of the United States, who may so desire, shall be eligible for transfer to classified civil-service positions under the control of the Treasury Department, or if their services are not required in such department they may be transferred to fill vacancies in any other executive department with the consent of such department. To the extent that such employees possess required qualifications, they shall be given preference over new appointments in the classified civil service under the control of the Treasury Department in the cities in which they are now employed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "two at $2,200 each, one at $2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$852,790"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 83 of the bill, in line 23, strike out "$68,290" and insert in lieu thereof "$68,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$171,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendment numbered 53 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILL R. WOOD,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. There is one item still in disagreement. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment, ask a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is pending before the Supreme Court of the United States the most important suit that has ever been there, in my opinion, in relation to the powers of the Government. It is a suit which is intended to test the validity of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. I applied to the clerk of the court when the argument in that suit was made for copies of the briefs of counsel and was informed that the number furnished by counsel was so limited that the supply was exhausted. I have here the brief of ex-Senator Root, William D. Guthrie, and others, of counsel in that suit, No. 788, October term, 1919. I regard it as of such importance that I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed as a public document.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Would it not also be proper to have the Government briefs printed at the same time?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not have the slightest objection, if the Senator has them, but I have not been able to get any of the others. Ex-Senator Root sent me his at my request. I met him in the Capitol. I have that, and I have read most of it, and it is so exceedingly important, and, in my opinion, able, as expounding his interpretation of the Constitution, that I have no doubt there will be a great demand for it.

I may say that I am moved to make this request by a gentleman connected with one of the bar associations, who wrote me that the bar of the country is greatly interested in this case, and they are unable to get copies of the briefs, and he asked me if I would not have it printed as a public document. I wrote him that I would be very glad to do so as soon as I could get possession of it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think I can secure copies of the other briefs, and I have no objection to the request if all can be put in the same document.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall have no objection if the Senator wants to make that request. All I am interested in is this one.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he will not have the matter referred to the Committee on Printing, and let that committee pass upon it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly. I send it to the desk and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Connecticut is referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to say that I shall submit the other briefs and ask that the same course be taken in regard to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same order will be made with respect to the briefs mentioned by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in connection with the subject brought to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I desire to say that some time ago it was stated on the floor of the Senate that the ultimate cost of enforcing the Federal prohibition laws in the United States might reach the sum of $50,000,000. I took that matter up with Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, the general attorney of the Anti-Saloon League, and asked him what data he had. I asked him to give me his opinion as to what the cost would probably be. I have here a letter from him which enters into an analysis of the subject, showing that in his opinion the cost will probably not exceed $5,000,000, and that the returns to the Government in fines and penalties will probably for a time exceed that amount. I ask to have the letter inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can have the letter read, but I do not want to have it inserted in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. WARREN. I only wish to remark that it will cost very much more than that amount, and every Senator who has weighed it in his own mind knows it, because in addition to the regular United States Government expenditures are the expenses of all the various States, Territories, and Districts.

While it doubtless may be worth all it costs, it does not become us to underestimate. We should better prepare for and meet cheerfully our responsibilities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1920.

Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: In your recent letter you say "it has been stated on the floor of the Senate that the cost of enforcing prohibition throughout the country will be $50,000,000 or more a year. Kindly let me know what data you have along this line." In my judgment it will not be necessary to spend any such amount to get good results in law enforcement. If it was necessary, however, to spend even that amount in order to prevent a waste of over a billion dollars a year spent for liquor and to check the lawlessness of the liquor traffic it would not be an inexcusable expenditure.

I think five millions a year appropriated to enforce this law would be ample, and if the liquor dealers suddenly became law-abiding it can be reduced when the need disappears. Three million has been provided for this department to cover expenses until July 1, two million in the original appropriation and one million since. One hundred thousand dollars for extra aid for the Justice Department was appropriated for prosecutions. This should be increased. Under the plan adopted by Congress and many of the States in establishing a law-enforcement department, the fines and forfeited bonds collected are more than enough to reimburse the Government for all the funds expended for a law-enforcement commissioner and sufficient deputies and assistants to enforce the law.

In West Virginia from July 1, 1918, to July 1, 1920, $22,500 a year was provided. From 1914 to 1916 the appropriation was $15,000 a year; from 1916 to 1918 it was $20,000 a year; from 1918 to 1920 it was $22,500 a year. The last legislature appropriated $40,000 a year for the next two years. The State is not disturbed about the cost of enforcement when the results show that this policy is not a liability but an asset to the State. The result of the enforcement of prohibition by fines and forfeited bonds has been at least $200,000 this last year, which has been turned into the school fund.

In Michigan the estimated cost for the enforcement of prohibition is set forth by Fred Woodworth, in charge of the state department, as follows: "Will say that the best estimates we can make, taken from our department books and from known expenses in the counties of the State, would indicate that it has cost the State of Michigan about $150,000 a year to enforce the law. County, city, and other local expenses would bring this amount up to about $200,000 a year. The financial benefits received are, of course, hard to calculate, because no one can estimate exactly what the court expenses would have been had Michigan remained wet. From reports received from attorneys and judges all around the State I believe that it is a conservative statement to say that criminal prosecutions have decreased one-third in Michigan since the State went dry. So nearly as we can estimate, the different counties of the State have collected over half a million dollars in fines. We also have on hand in the custody of this department about 300,000 quarts of bottled-in-bond whisky and 300 barrels of alcohol, which has been made out of inferior whisky and has been confiscated from violators. This liquor will undoubtedly be sold by the State of Michigan for medicinal purposes, as provided in the State and Federal law. We estimate that this will bring into the State about $1,000,000."

In Ohio the policy of having a State officer responsible for the enforcement of certain State liquor laws was inaugurated more than 15 years ago. The policy has expanded, and under the State liquor license law a complete law enforcement department was provided for. It returned to the State far more than the total cost of the department. This result was made possible even though the policy of the department for a time under the license system was not vigorous for law enforcement, as a representative of the liquor interests was appointed on the board by the governor.

In Virginia for the year ending October 31, 1919, the cost of the department was $52,430. The total fines imposed from November 1, 1917, to November 1, 1918, was $101,690, from November 1, 1918, to November 1, 1919, $135,849. The estimated receipts from the sale of confiscated vehicles, $10,000. The total cost of maintaining the law enforcement department from November 1, 1918, to November 1, 1919, was $52,430.12. The amount of money paid over to the State through fines and forfeited bonds was more than double that amount. In practically every State or subdivision where this policy is established and operated in good faith, the Government finds that a vigorous and honest enforcement of the law results in from two to five times the amount in returns that it costs the Government to establish and operate the department.

Of course, no one desires to see the Government making money out of lawbreakers. Every good citizen would naturally be better pleased to find every liquor dealer obeying the law, and no fines coming from that source. Under those conditions there would be no need of a law enforcement department. But as the Supreme Court of Georgia recently said (146 Ga., 667): "Dealers in alcoholic liquors have never been known to be over nice in adhering to the strict letter of the law." Or as the United States Supreme Court put it in another case recently, the notorious difficulties always attendant upon the enforcement of prohibition laws justify measures out of the ordinary.

In establishing a national law-enforcement department there is every reason to believe that the results of the department work will amount in fines, forfeited bonds, and prohibitive taxes to far more than the total cost of the department. In the central and southern Federal supervising districts the amount of fines and other sources of revenue collected is greater than the cost of the department in those districts. The department has been handicapped thus far because of the attacks upon the law as to its constitutionality and construction; when these questions are settled better results will follow. In addition to the results secured by the State law-enforcement department, section 34 of the prohibition code places a prohibitive tax upon the illegal manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. If the internal-revenue department and the Justice Department and the law-enforcement department will use this section of the law with the other provisions in it, they can make the beverage traffic in liquor financially unprofitable as well as dangerous. As long as the liquor interests defy the law, no one ought to be oversensitive in providing heavy penalties and fines for these lawbreakers. They complain that under this system they are compelled to pay the cost of both ends of the lawsuit. They say they must retain their own attorney and then with the fines and forfeited bonds and prohibitive taxes the Government is reimbursed for the cost of prosecuting them. There is at least one good answer to this complaint. If the liquor dealers do not violate the law, they will not have to pay attorneys on either side of the case. When the eighteenth amendment was adopted and the Federal Code enacted, patriotic citizens had a right to expect that every person would obey the law. If the way of the law violator is hard under national prohibition, it is made so only because it is necessary in order to deal effectively with this lawbreaking traffic.

Very cordially, yours,

WAYNE B. WHEELER,
Attorney and General Counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on page 42, line 20, I move to strike out "six thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 44, line 3, I move to strike out the words "seven hundred and seventy" and insert "six hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 44, line 5, I move to strike out "twelve thousand five hundred" and insert "eight thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 45, line 1, I move to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 45, line 2, I move to strike out "six" and insert "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That finishes the allotment of the permanent personnel, both officers and men, and with the adoption of three or four small committee amendments, printed in the bill as such on page 10, the consideration of which was postponed at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the whole matter will be completed. The amendments are exceedingly simple, and I ask that they be taken up, because the matter of universal military training having been decided upon, it is entirely proper and competent to take them up at this time. They were postponed until that question was settled.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. In the revised list, how many officers are provided for in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Sixteen thousand nine hundred and ninety-three.

Mr. HARRISON. And 280,000 enlisted men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two hundred and eighty thousand.

Mr. HARRISON. How many officers were provided for in the bill as passed by the House?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Seventeen thousand eight hundred and thirty-two.

Mr. HARRISON. How many enlisted men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two hundred and ninety-nine thousand. This is a smaller Army.

Mr. HARRISON. So we really had more officers provided for in the House bill than are provided for in the Senate bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; by over 800. I ask that the Secretary may read the committee amendments as set forth on page 10 of the printed bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendments proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The READING CLERK. On page 10, line 4, strike out the words "and enlisted men"; in line 6, after the word "academy," insert the word "and"; in line 7, strike out the words "and the flying cadets of the Air Corps"; in line 8, page 10, strike out "sixty-three thousand two hundred" and insert "eighty thousand"; and in line 10, strike out the word "exclusive" and insert the word "inclusive."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, at the time the universal military training provision was stricken out I think I said to the Senate that the question would then arise as to whether we could reduce the Army at the rate of 5 per cent a year in the enlisted strength for five years and at the rate of 2 per cent per year in the commissioned personnel for five years. The provision to make that progressive reduction will be found on page 10, commencing with line 12 and extending through the two provisos to the end of the page.

It is a provision which I very much regret having to move to strike out. Of course, the Senate knows my theory of national defense economically administered, but if we are not to have an assured reserve Army, if we are going to depend upon uncertainty, and guess from time to time how many men we shall have in the National Guard and how many men in the organized reserve, and trust to chance and the fluctuation of public sentiment, I do not think it is safe to reduce the Army of 280,000 men to 210,000 men as provided on page 10. It was my intention, therefore, to move to strike out those two provisos, which I now do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, line 12, after the words "Philippine Scouts" strike out all on that page down to the period, being the remainder of section 12, in the following words:

Provided, That, beginning with the fiscal year after the year in which the system of military training hereinafter provided for shall have been established, the total permanent personnel herein authorized and that hereinafter authorized for detail or assignment to each of the several arms, corps, and services shall be decreased, as follows: Commissioned officers, 2 per cent per annum for five successive years; enlisted men, 5 per cent per annum for five successive years: Provided further, That the decreases provided for in the next preceding proviso shall be distributed proportionately among the several commissioned and enlisted grades, and during the period of decrease vacancies occurring in such grades shall not be filled until the decreases herein provided for have been made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not sure that I understand the proposition of the chairman of the committee. What is it he moves to strike out?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can tell the Senator in just a few words. What I propose to strike out is the proviso commencing in line 12 on page 10. The bill as reported from the committee, as the Senator knows, provided for universal military training, which at the end of seven years would have provided a trained citizen reserve army of over 3,000,000 men. In view of the situation, the committee believed that the Regular Army, which is always the costly element in our military forces, should be progressively reduced, and that the money saved by reducing the Regular Army, which in this case would have amounted to $125,000,000 or $130,000,000 a year, should be applied to the training of citizen soldiers. We wanted to reduce the professional force, the standing Army, and to build up the citizen force, which must bear the burden whenever there is a first-class war. Now, however, that no provision for universal military training is left in the bill, and nothing upon which we can surely depend, there is a very grave question whether we should reduce the Army down to 210,000 men at this moment in the world's history.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. REED. I wish, first, to ask a question, and then I will yield. The Army provided for in this bill numbers 270,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It numbers 280,000 enlisted men.

Mr. REED. And how many officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It provides for 16,993 officers.

Mr. REED. That is practically three and a half times larger than any Army we have ever had in time of peace?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; we had a Regular Army of approximately 120,000 men when we went into the German war.

Mr. REED. Well, that was an increase that had been made on account of the trouble on the Mexico border.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; that increase was due to the national-defense act in the first instance. The national-defense act provided for an Army, to be raised in five annual increments, of 236,000 enlisted men.

Mr. REED. Perhaps I did not make my statement as accurately as I should have done. Up to the time of the German war we did not have an Army of more than 80,000 men, except when it had been temporarily increased on account of the Mexican situation. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. REED. How much was it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. About 120,000 men.

Mr. REED. Then I have been in error in my figures. When was the Army increased to 120,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the authorization came in 1915 or on the appropriation bill of 1916. I can not remember the date.

Mr. REED. That was after the German war had begun. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought the Senator referred to the difficulties on the Mexican border.

Mr. REED. I am not speaking of when we entered the German war, but of the beginning of the German war itself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not remember the strength of the Army in 1914.

Mr. REED. My recollection is that prior to the time the German war broke out we never had in this country over 80,000 men in the Army, except, possibly, when there was a temporary increase due to contemplated difficulties with Mexico. I have not looked up the figures for a long time, and what I am saying now is merely from memory, but is not what I have stated substantially true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My recollection—I have not myself looked up the figures for some time—is that the authorized strength of the Regular Army prior to the German war was in the neighborhood of 88,000 men, exclusive of the Medical Service and the Quartermasters Corps. If those services were added, it would be in the neighborhood of 101,000 men.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, I think we never actually had enlisted many more than 90,000 men, but that was the authorization—in the neighborhood of 100,000.

Mr. REED. President Roosevelt actually decreased the Army at one time by order. The present bill, if the Senator's amendment is adopted as he has now offered it, would give us 276,000 enlisted men. Is that correct?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would give us 280,000.

Mr. REED. And how many officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There would be 16,993 officers.

Mr. REED. Does that include the Medical Corps?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It includes everything; and may I say—I have not said it to the Senate before—it also includes the Philippine Scouts for the first time and the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

Mr. REED. What is the number of the Philippine Scouts?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Their authorized strength is 12,000, but they have only about 8,000 men enlisted. The Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry has about 1,500 men.

Mr. REED. This bill multiplies the Army substantially by three. What is the reason for it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator ask me?

Mr. REED. Yes; I am asking what is the reason for the increase in the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The national security. The Army provided for is all we shall have, with the exception of the 42,000 men who are in the National Guard to-day.

Mr. REED. The National Guard to-day is not as strong as it was. Is not that true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The National Guard at the time of the Mexican border mobilization comprised about 120,000 men all told.

Mr. REED. What proposition does this bill contain looking toward the rehabilitation of the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill changes the status of the National Guard and takes it out from under what might be termed the militia clause of the Constitution and puts it under the Army clause of the Constitution. At the same time providing protection for the States, it puts the National Guard, officer and man, in the same status, with the same rights and privileges as the officer and man in the Regular Army has.

Mr. REED. That is, the Senator means it puts him in a status with his rights limited to those which the man in the Regular Army possesses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Which is a very much larger degree of right and privilege than the militia officer has to-day.

Mr. REED. I can not agree with the Senator as to that. The Senator does not mean to say that a member of the National Guard under the old system, when controlled by State laws, had the same liabilities and responsibilities that he now has under the pending bill, does he?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The liabilities and responsibilities, in a military sense, are not substantially changed by this bill, but his standing is changed most decidedly and to his benefit.

Mr. REED. One of the benefits is that he may be called into the service by the President at any moment. Is not that one of the benefits?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. REED. But that is a fact, is it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. REED. How is the National Guard soldier gotten into the service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He is called into the service to suppress insurrection, to repel invasion, and in time of war declared by Congress and proclaimed by the President he may be called into service to go anywhere, just as he is to-day.

Mr. REED. However, the law that made it possible to get him into the service in time of war was passed only recently.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. That is contemplated in the Constitution.

Mr. REED. There was a statute, which was passed about three years ago and with which the Senator from New York had something to do, which created the power to call the National Guard into service by order of the President. Is not that the fact?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps the Senator is referring to the provision in the national defense that, in the event of war being declared by Congress, the officers and men of the National Guard may be drafted?

Mr. REED. Yes; that is what I am referring to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was necessary, otherwise the officers and men of the National Guard could not have been sent first to France and afterwards to Germany.

Mr. REED. They could have enlisted for that service, of course. I am not dealing with that act; I am merely dealing with the proposition that the Senator made a moment ago, that this bill enlarges the rights and privileges of the National Guard. That it enlarges the duties and responsibilities of the National Guard would be a better term for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from New York does not mean that under the Constitution, even though war were declared, the President, without legislation by Congress, could have called the National Guard into the Federal service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. LENROOT. Without legislation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Without legislation.

Mr. LENROOT. Upon the declaration of war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir; but not to send them out of the country.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the Senator will find that there would have to be legislation to select any particular portion of the citizenship comprising the militia of this country to do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My understanding is that the guard, being a part of the militia, may be called out to suppress insurrection and to repel invasion; that is the obligation of a militiaman; but he can not be sent out of the country.

Mr. LENROOT. The National Guard is only a part of the militia under the Constitution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true; but a member of the National Guard is a militiaman just the same, and he can be called out to repel invasion and execute the laws and to suppress insurrection.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the legal question at this moment. I think the Senator from New York will find that there is some doubt about his position, and because of that doubt the law was enacted to change the status of the National Guard.

I hope that the Army as now provided for in this bill will be reduced, not by the slow process provided by this bill but that it will be reduced now to not to exceed 200,000 men. I can not understand what there is calling for an enormous Army in this country, and I particularly can not understand it at this time. We have in the country two million and a half trained men, and practically all of them could be depended upon in case an attack should be made upon the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator does not presume that they could be forced into any service except as volunteers unless other provision were made by Congress?

Mr. REED. I assume, in the first place, that there would not be much trouble about volunteering if this country were attacked; and I assume, in the second place, that if we wanted a draft law, a draft bill could be passed in the face of a real emergency, and it could be passed in about three days' time here in Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, such a law would take those who are not prepared as well as those who are?

Mr. REED. It would take whomever we named in the draft. The draft is not limited by any constitutional provision or by anything else except the will of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. I hardly think the Senator would want to go on record as saying that the United States may draft a certain class of men who have performed certain service because they have performed such service and because they have been patriotic and rendered service and may not ask those who heretofore have not performed any service also to undertake some of the burdens of war.

Mr. REED. I do not intend to be put in that position at all. The Senator spoke about the right and power to do a thing, and I answered him that Congress had the power. I have not any doubt that Congress has the power, if it wanted to exercise it, to select men of only 19 years of age or 20 years of age or any other age. I am not saying that that would be a prudent thing for Congress to do, but I am talking to the proposition that to-day there are in this country two and a half million trained men, for we put two and one-half million men in France, and they all must have had some training.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Missouri asked a few moments ago about the size of our Army prior to the war. I have the figures here, and I should like to put them into the RECORD.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. On June 30, 1913, our standing army was composed of 81,787 men; on June 30, 1914, of 87,781 men; on June 30, 1915, of 95,765 men; on June 30, 1916, of 97,013 men; on January 1, 1917, of 110,226 men; on March 31, seven days before the breaking out of the war, of 121,797 men; and on June 30, 1917, after the war had broken out, the number had increased to 238,455 men. I should add to all these numbers that there were about 5,000 Philippine Scouts on duty in the Philippine Islands; but, generally speaking, the standing army of the United States up until just a very short time before the war was a little less than 100,000 men.

Mr. REED. When did we have that trouble with Mexico?

Mr. McKELLAR. In 1916, as I recall, when we went over the border; but the Army at that time was in the neighborhood of 100,000 men.

Mr. REED. And was built up for that purpose.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a brief interruption?

Mr. REED. I will; yes.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has given the figures of our enlisted strength and the number of officers. If I got his figures correctly, there are to be 16,993 officers and 280,000 enlisted men. That means an officer for every 16 enlisted men in the whole Army. While I disagree with the Senator from Missouri as to the size of the Army, I think there are enough officers in this bill for an Army of 400,000, and I should be very glad to vote for an amendment increasing the enlisted strength of the Army, because there are enough officers in the bill for such an army.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, resuming at the point where I was when these interesting interruptions occurred, there are at least 2,500,000 trained men in the United States to-day. They are, for the most part, quite young men. I regard them as a great military asset, whether they are technically a part of the Army or not. I have no more doubt that they would come to the colors if our country should be menaced than I doubt the general loyalty of the American people, and I certainly have no doubt of that.

General military training has been defeated, and I think properly so. It seems to me that instead of having a large standing Army, we ought to build up the National Guard by generous appropriations and by liberal inducements to men to enter the guard.

I suppose that what I am saying is not very popular with the Regular Army officer or man. I could not say anything against the Regular Army officer or the Regular Army enlisted man, because they so well performed their duty in the hour of a great national and world emergency; but the sooner it is understood in this country that the people of the United States will not sustain a very large professional soldiery the better it will be for the country. The only real supplement there is to the Regular Army, unless you have enforced military training, is a well-organized and well-equipped National Guard, and the money that it is proposed to expend upon the professional soldier who stays in the camps in this country, and who has but few duties to perform in time of peace, would be better spent upon the National Guard. If we could supplement the military strength we have to-day, through the existence in the country of 2,500,000 or more trained men, by a constantly increasing body of trained men in the National Guard who volunteer for the service and who are held together by those ties that can exist in the guard and that do not exist in the Army, we would be doing something of a practical character.

I know that the disposition has been to belittle the National Guard; the disposition is to belittle the volunteer soldier; but I say that the Mexican difficulty demonstrated the fact that the National Guard could be mobilized and sent to the front almost as quickly as the Regulars, and the history of this war demonstrates the great efficiency of this organization, for there were 17 divisions of the National Guard in France on the firing line, or ready for the firing line, when there were only 7 divisions of Regulars there, and I do not believe that any Regular Army officer, whether he sits in the galleries smiling, or wherever he sits, will dare, over his signature, to challenge the gallantry and efficiency of the service rendered by the National Guard.

I know that every influence of the Regular Army has been brought to bear to discountenance the existence of a National Guard and to destroy the National Guard. I know that the Secretary of War violated the spirit, if not the letter, of the law when the National Guard organizations were broken up, dismembered, and to a very large extent scattered through other branches of the Army service, for it had been provided in the military bill that the National Guard organizations should remain intact wherever practicable, and those words "wherever practicable" were distorted to mean wherever the Army officers wanted to disregard the rule. So these organizations were broken up, and yet they went to the front, they did valiant service, and a service that is as creditable to them as the service rendered by the Regulars is creditable to the Regulars.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. How much of a National Guard would the Senator have? As great a number as this bill provides for the Regular Army?

Mr. REED. I should be very glad, indeed, to have a National Guard almost as large as could be reasonably organized. Of course, there must necessarily be some limit, but I would have a large Guard, and for this reason: You are training new men all the time. They are under their local State governments. They are under local influences. They keep up the military spirit among the people. They are volunteer organizations, and they are maintained at a very small expense compared with the expense of an equal number of men in the Regular Army.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator does not subscribe, then, to the theory so generally held that there are only two adequate defenses—the League of Nations and a good-sized standing Army?

Mr. REED. No; I do not subscribe to it. If you want to know where the real defense of this country is, it is in its men and in its resources. Of course, you must have trained men, and you must have an army of sufficient size to provide a large number of trained men, and you must have military schools. So far as I am concerned, I would vote for the establishment of a dozen military schools in the United States to-morrow, and I think we have overlooked a prime essential when we have failed to do that. When you create in this country a standing Army of 300,000 men, supplemented by a Navy personnel, such as is requested by the Secretary of the Navy, of 250,000 men, you have constantly under arms in this country over a half million men. That is an enormous expense in two ways: First, the direct charge upon the taxpayers of the country to maintain the Army and Navy; and, second, the economic loss due to the fact that these men are withdrawn from the creative industries and put into a noncreative business. If it is necessary to have an Army of this size, I want somebody to tell me why.

The reason ought to be assigned. The cause ought to be manifest. What is that reason and what is that cause? Does anybody fear an uprising in the United States among the people, a rebellion? I do not. There is no necessity for a great standing army to maintain order in this country. We may have some strikes and some labor disturbance, but we do not need a standing army of 300,000 men to preserve order on that account. We do not need anything approximating that number. You can build up militarism in this country until you produce a reaction. There is no trouble in this country warranting the creation of a vast Military Establishment on account of internal conditions.

Is there, then, anything in the external conditions demanding that at this time, when our people are paying the expenses of the war and are being taxed to an extent never before dreamed of, for the creation and maintenance of a vast Military Establishment in this country? If there is a foreign menace, where is that foreign menace? Is it in Austria? Austria has been dismembered. There is every probability that Austria will not within a century of time, if ever in the history of the world, arise from the ashes of her disaster a powerful State.

Is it in Germany? Germany has been disarmed. Conditions have been imposed upon her by the Allies of such a character that for many years to come Germany can not be a first-class military power, and France and England will undoubtedly see that those conditions are met by the German people. Besides, she has been made helpless in many respects for many years to come. She is without a war navy, and without ships of war she can not land a soldier on our coasts. Neither can she land a soldier on our coasts until she has a navy superior to ours, and vastly superior to ours. She must be powerful enough to drive our war Navy from the waters of the ocean before she dare intrust her men to transports to bring them across the sea. If Germany were to-day to undertake to invade the United States, to move an army across the ocean, she would be annihilated. Under present conditions she would undoubtedly be attacked from the rear. She can scarcely maintain her own tottering Government. What the conditions may be 10 or 15 or 20 years from now we can not even prophesy, but that it will require many years before Germany would ever constitute a menace of any kind to the United States seems to me too clear for argument.

Whence, then, are we to expect an attack? Will it be from France? There are two or three reasons why France will never attack the United States. First, if she did attack the United States, in all probability Germany would attack her, not from love of the United States but from motives of revenge.

Second, if she were to attack the United States, we have as good a fleet as she, if not better, and we are many times stronger than France, and it would be an impotent attack, and would result in the destruction or great injury of France. I do not want to talk about war with France, for I think it is the furthest removed from possibilities.

The third reason, which I ought to have mentioned first, is that the French people certainly entertain for the American people a decent regard, if not an affection, and there is no reason for France to attack the United States, and there is no danger from that source.

There remains the British Empire. Is there any possibility of the British Empire attacking the United States? Certainly not, if there is any truth in this philosophy that is being taught of amity and good will between the English-speaking peoples. For my own part I do not feel that that is a sufficient safeguard, because nations follow the line of their interest, and no nation follows the line of its interest with more certainty and precision and persistence than the British Empire.

I desire to discuss this matter with all candor. It is my opinion that the only nation in Europe whose interests are likely to some day clash with those of the United States is the British Empire. She is so spread over the earth, her commercial and maritime interests are so involved and so enormous, her ambition for more territory is so insatiate, and she is so close to us along our northern border that there may come a time when British interests and American interests will come into serious conflict. But while that is true, it does not follow that there is serious danger of a war with the British Empire.

Such a war would hardly be engaged in by the British Empire, for two reasons. I believe that the controlling people of the Empire, the English, would regard with horror a conflict between these two nations. I believe that that restraining influence and, I trust, some degree of affectionate regard is a very great insurance against any possibility of attack from the British Empire.

Surely it must be that the British Empire recognizes the fact that it was the presence of American soldiers at the crucial moment which turned the tide of battle. So I can not believe there is any particular danger from that source. If I believed there was a great and serious danger, I would be in favor of a large standing Army and a much larger Army of reserves than is provided for in this bill or in any proposed bill that I know of.

We are asked for an Army of 300,000 men and a quarter of a million men for the Navy; and whom are we going to fight with these men? Is it to be Japan? I have simply this to say in regard to Japan, that it would have been a much better safeguard for us if the islands in the north Pacific which were given to Japan had been withheld from her and we had taken them over ourselves, and thus prevented her from having coaling stations and harbors in the Pacific 2,000 miles nearer our coast. If we had used some common, plain sense when we wrote the German peace treaty, it would have been a better safeguard for us than this Army will be.

But are we in any danger from Japan? If we are, the way to meet it is by increasing our war fleet, by increasing our fortifications, and with that done there is no necessity for burdening the people of this country with an Army of 300,000 men in a time of profound peace.

To my mind, America has never been as safe from attack since the flag was first unfurled as it is to-day. Europe is prostrate; she has neither the resources in materials nor the resources in money to renew a great war. There may be some fighting there between nations which are struggling over territory, but a general war of invasion by European countries against this country at this time is absurd and unthinkable.

There is no man here who has given a reason or can give a reason for an Army of 300,000 men in a time of profound peace. There are a good many men who got into the Army who would like to stay there. I would like to see them get back to their homes and their work.

There is another reason why we are in no danger from Europe or from Asia. Before this war was fought there was an impression among European people and Asiatic people that the people of the United States were too proud to fight, or too cowardly to fight, or too inefficient to fight. There was an impression in certain places that the American people were a mere lot of merchants engaged in the business of chasing dollars, and that there was not in our country any real fighting material and strength. That is what William of Prussia counted upon. That is what made him insult the United States and take the chance of the United States entering the conflict. That is a mistake which no European power will make again in the next half century of time. They have discovered that the people of the United States, while preferring civilian employment and occupation, devoting themselves to commerce and to business, and doing so as a matter of preference, can fight and will fight, and the resources of this country can be gathered together in a very short time; so that any nation insulting us will find a very ugly antagonist.

I do not believe, sir, that there is any possible chance of this country becoming involved in any war of magnitude for a very considerable period of years. I do not refer to Mexico, because if we are ever obliged to deal with that country it can be handled very expeditiously, and that problem is easily solved.

Mr. President, I hope that the size of the Army will be cut down, and that something will be done for the National Guard, and that we shall proceed along that line. It may be impossible to accomplish it, but I say to the chairman of the committee that the people of the United States will not stand for a standing Army of over 300,000 men. He will find that is true, and increasingly true. As time goes on the feeling of excitement due to the war will be dissipated; the people will be ready to spend money to prepare armaments, fortifications, and schools, but they will not maintain an enormous standing Army, and 300,000 men are more than are demanded in this country, more than have ever been necessary in the past, and they are not necessary now.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I had concluded, but I shall be glad to answer any question the Senator may have to ask.

Mr. DIAL. Does not the Senator think an Army half the size of the Army proposed in the bill would answer all purposes?

Mr. REED. I do; unqualifiedly I do.

Mr. DIAL. I agree with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I imagine it will be rather difficult to get a quorum at this hour, and I assume that Senators will want to have notice and an opportunity to vote upon the amendment. Therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 15, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 14, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Father Soul, infinite in all Thy resources, let Thy spirit possess our hearts and abide with us, that our thoughts, words, and deeds may be to the betterment of mankind.

Grant that American patriotism may dominate the hearts of all true lovers of liberty—illustrated in our Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln; that common sense and reason may be the shibboleth of every patriot, that our Republic may be indeed a land of peace and plenty and thus reflect Thy glory. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRESENTATION OF ARMENIAN PETITION.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, about a quarter of 2 o'clock p. m. to-day 500 men of Armenian origin are going to assemble on the House steps of the Capitol for the purpose of presenting a petition to the Congress in connection with the situation in Armenia. All these men are American citizens; all of them fought in the American Army during the World War; and all of them have been selected as delegates for the purpose of coming to Washington in order to present this petition. They have expressed the hope that as many Members of the House as could conveniently do so should be present at the ceremonies, which will be very brief, and which, as I say, will be opposite the House steps of the Capitol at about a quarter of 2 o'clock p. m. to-day.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARIES IN PHILADELPHIA.

The SPEAKER. By special order of yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] was authorized to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the limited time, I would like to proceed without interruption.

I hold in my hands a newspaper published in the city of Philadelphia in which there appears a story entitled, "The fight is on in the third congressional district." It goes on to state that the campaign for the election of a Republican in Congress from the third district to succeed the Hon. J. Hampton Moore has now begun in earnest. It recites that the opposing candidates are former Sheriff Harry C. Ransley and Charles Delany, president of the Kensington National Bank. It further states that Mr. Ransley is chairman of the Republican city committee for Philadelphia County, a man who has always been a factor in Republican politics and a prominent and successful business man, who was born and raised and who always votes in the district, while his opponent, Mr. Delany, does not now and never did live in the district; and, of course, never voted therein. It adds that the formal announcement of Mr. Delany's candidacy followed a meeting of manufacturers held in one of the exclusive clubs of Philadelphia.

Previous to the publication of this article a full-page paid advertisement of Mr. Delany's candidacy appeared in every daily newspaper in Philadelphia, signed by a large number of manufacturers, a great majority of whom have no voting residence in this congressional district or even in Philadelphia.

Very recently there was another meeting of manufacturers where the demand was made that the manufacturers raise a campaign fund of $50,000; and when the question was asked as to how this enormous sum could be used the frank statement was made that this money must be used to purchase votes for Mr. Delany.

I am addressing this House in the exercise of my high prerogatives, not only as a Member of this body but as an American citizen, to protest against a very apparent effort on the part of special interests to purchase a seat in this honorable body; and I am moved to do so not only because of the outrageous preparations that are being made to debauch a great voting constituency but, having in mind the recent national scandals arising out of the election of a United States Senator in the State of Michigan, it becomes the absolute duty of every citizen who has any knowledge of a conspiracy which will likewise besmirch the fair name of Pennsylvania to raise his voice in protest. I only have to remind the House that the presiding judge at the Newberry trial pronounced it to be the law that, with the knowledge that a certain fixed amount has been determined as the lawful expenditure of a candidate who seeks a seat in either the upper or lower House of Congress, those who voluntarily add to the corruption fund bring themselves within the penal statutes on the charge of a conspiracy to debauch an election.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VARE. I regret I can not yield. I have only 10 minutes, and I do not want to further encroach on the House.

Those who will be called upon by the force of the demands of the manufacturers' clique know now, even if they never heretofore have been informed, that the United States statute has fixed the lawful expenditures for a candidate for Congress at the sum of $5,000 for both the primary and general election. This sum already has been expended for newspaper advertising. Therefore, with the knowledge that there is to be a fund of $50,000 raised, those who contribute to this debauchery become amenable to our criminal law and are conspirators in thought and deed. I am fully confident that with a Pennsylvanian at the head of the Department of Justice we have an officer who, notwithstanding the fact that his politics differ from mine, will, I am convinced, be eager to preserve the good name of Pennsylvania and be alert to prevent a great crime against the sanctity of the ballot. [Applause.] I am certain that Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, chief law officer of the United States, through his powerful agencies of the Department of Justice, will cause an investigation of this situation both before and after the primary election, which will be held May 18 next.

Under the Pennsylvania law every candidate for office and every committee formed for the purpose of advancing the candidacy of any man must file with the clerk of quarter sessions of the county an itemized statement of receipts and expenditures, made under oath, giving the names of each contributor and the amounts accredited to him. Therefore, those who contribute to such a vast fund, many times the amount that can lawfully be expended, will do so with the knowledge that the public records of Philadelphia County will forever perpetuate the amount of their contributions and they hereafter can not plead innocence either of fact or intention.

The public press of April 12 has proclaimed the fact that this exclusive committee of nonresident leather manufacturers and representatives of special interests has retained the services of a manager for Mr. Delany, who also does not live in the district. Of course, his services to Mr. Delany's cause have not been contributed because of his love for Mr. Delany, but like every political adventurer has been attracted to the side that is reputed to be spending large sums of money.

The voters of the third congressional district are almost entirely workmen, the men of the mills and the factories of that great beehive of industry. The men who are behind the candidacy of Mr. Delany, like Mr. Delany himself, have nothing in common with this constituency of workmen, but their desire is solely to return to this body a representative of capitalists who will be unembarrassed in his advocacy of their cause by any of the demands or the needs of the workmen of his district, with whom he has no acquaintance and with whom he never has associated.

From a political viewpoint, I have no fear about the result of the primary election for this district, for in a recent aggressive campaign for mayor of Philadelphia Judge John M. Patterson, candidate of the Republican organization, polled 20,245 votes, while our former colleague, Hon. J. Hampton Moore, polled 12,415 votes, the majority for Judge Patterson being 7,830 votes. I am, however, concerned in upholding the fair name of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the goodly city of Philadelphia in order that there may be no repetition of the scandal which besmirched the good name of the State of Michigan.

I demand, in the name of fair play and decency, that an uninfluenced expression of the public opinion reach the ballot box on May 18 next uncontaminated and unpolluted by the sordid wealth of the conspirators. I serve public notice upon them that their plans are known, their leaders are marked, and their contributions must become public property. I serve notice on the morocco king of Philadelphia, the largest employer of alien labor, who has urged the raising of a $50,000 corruption fund, that he and his associates are known and will have to answer. I further serve notice upon them that the expenditure of $50,000 or any sum over and above the statutory limitation makes them, and each of them, amenable to the criminal law, and I invoke in behalf of the people of that district the relentless and untiring vigilance of the Department of Justice. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], under a question of privilege, what his remarks have to do with the coming congressional election? He stated that he was going to speak on the congressional election. His entire remarks have been devoted to a primary contest within a certain political party.

Mr. VARE. I certainly regard that as quite important on the coming congressional election.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman's candidate should be nominated, of course it may be important.

Mr. VARE. I have no candidate.

Mr. WALSH. Then I can not quite see what his remarks have to do with the congressional election. The gentleman secured permission by unanimous consent to address the House, and when he was asked on what subject he said on the congressional election. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] asked whether it was on the subject of the general election or pertaining particularly to the gentleman's district, and he said it was on the approaching general election.

Mr. VARE. I will state again that I regard, and the Pennsylvania laws also regard, our primary elections and general elections of equal force.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. This whole confabulation between these two gentlemen is out of order.

The SPEAKER. It is if the point of order is raised.

MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill——

Mr. KAHN. And pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be three hours of general debate, one and a half hours to be consumed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and one and a half hours by himself.

The SPEAKER. Pending the request, the gentleman asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, half of the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13587, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, to-day in this country of ours there is industrial disturbance that causes the Members of Congress, and all the citizens of the Republic who have at heart the welfare of the people, considerable concern. But this is nothing new in our national life. I read occasionally some of the old debates in Congress, and recently ran across a speech of Daniel Webster, delivered in 1836, in which he said this:

> There are persons who constantly clamor. They complain of oppression and speculation and the pernicious influence of accumulated wealth. They cry out loudly against all banks and corporations, and all means by which small capitals become united in order to produce important and beneficial results. They carry out mad hostility against all established institutions. They would choke the fountain of industry and dry all streams. In a country where property is more evenly divided than anywhere else they rend the air shouting agrarian doctrines. In a country of unbounded liberty they clamor against oppression. In a country of perfect equality they would move heaven and earth against privilege and monopoly. In a country where the wages of labor are high beyond parallel, they would teach the laborer that he is but an oppressed slave.

If those words were uttered to-day they would probably be just as apt as when they were delivered in 1836. They show conclusively that history repeats itself constantly.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman invoke the address of Webster in 1836 because to-day the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] has stated that special interests are buying up the Republican nominations for Congress in the city of Philadelphia?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, there have been charges and countercharges about political corruption ever since the days of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, and I suppose they will continue as long as the Republic exists.

During all the years of our national life we have had more or less of an Army.

One hundred and forty-five years have elapsed from the date of the Battle of Lexington, in 1775, until this year of grace, 1920. During the 145 years since the beginning of the American Revolution in 1775 the United States has been engaged either in civil or foreign wars for almost 38 years, or 25 per cent of the time. We have had one year of such war for every three years of peace, considering the years of Indian warfare and minor disturbance as peace time. The length of the peace periods during those 145 years are as follows:

The War of the Revolution to war with France, 15 years 3 months; the war with France to war with Tripoli, 9 months; war with Tripoli to war with Great Britain, 7 years and 1 month; war with Great Britain to war with Algiers, Tunis, and Morocco, about 1 year; war with Algiers, Tunis, and Morocco to war with Mexico, about 30 years and 6 months; war with Mexico to Civil War, 12 years and 10 months; Civil War to war with Spain, 31 years and 8 months; Philippine insurrection to Cuban pacification, 4 years and 3 months; Cuban pacification to Nicaraguan expedition, 3 years and 5 months; Nicaraguan expedition to Vera Cruz expedition, 6 months; Vera Cruz expedition to Mexican punitive expedition, 1 year 3 months; Mexican punitive expedition to World War, 2 months, making a total of about 107 years of peace out of the 145.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In just a moment; then I shall be glad to yield to my friend from Illinois.

During the 145 years since 1775 the armed forces of the United States have been engaged in some sort of warfare for a little over a hundred years, or 69 per cent of the total time. That includes foreign wars, Indian wars, and minor domestic disturbances, as well as the Civil War. So we have had our Army occupied in one kind of warfare or another during our history for a period of two years of warfare to one year of peace.

Now I yield to the gentleman fom Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. The World War closed on the 11th of November, 1918, and our Army was supposed to have been demobilized. How many American soldiers and how many American officers are still doing service at Coblenz? And if the gentleman can and will tell, what part of the expense for the maintenance of this army at Coblenz is being paid by Germany, if any?

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there are about 17,455 American officers and enlisted men in Germany. That includes the bridgehead at Coblenz, and also the plebiscitary area in upper Silesia. Under the terms of the armistice Germany was to bear the expense of our troops in Germany. Not only that, but Germany was also to bear the expense of bringing the supplies to our troops in Germany. During the hearings on the pending bill I took occasion to ask Gen. Hines, chief of the transportation of our Army, whether he could furnish me any data as to what Germany has paid on account of the extraordinary expenses of this country in connection with maintaining our troops on the Rhine and elsewhere in Germany, and I can say to the gentleman that this very morning I received from the Secretary of War a letter bearing upon this subject, which letter I will ask the Clerk of the House to read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> WAR DEPARTMENT,
> Washington, April 9, 1920.
> Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
> Chairman Military Affairs Committee,
> House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR MR. KAHN: The Chief of Transportation Service has advised me that you requested during the hearings on the Army appropriation bill certain information relative to any amounts paid by the German Government under the terms of the armistice agreement relating to the maintenance of the army of occupation.
> Under the interpretation of the terms of the armistice agreement Germany is required to compensate the United States for all expenses incident to the maintenance of the daily life and activities of the troops of occupation. Germany is also required to reimburse the United States for all freight charges on the necessary supplies from the United States to European ports and thence to the German frontier.
> In order that your committee might have full and detailed information, a cable was sent Gen. Allen calling for a report of the status of payments made up to the present time, and under date of April 4, 1920, Gen. Allen replied as follows:
> "Reference W 199. German Government has paid in marks as follows: December, 1918, and January and February, 1919, 109,000,000; March, 1919, 19,000,000; April, 1919, 80,000,000; May, 1919, 100,000,000; February, 1920, 50,000,000; March, 1920, 75,000,000; total, 433,000,000. Total has been credited to appropriation pay of the Army. All has been used for partial payment troops. No payment has been made for transportation service in connection with troops. Transportation has been furnished in kind in Germany. Claims for damages paid directly by German Government after investigation by these headquarters."

In addition to the payments reported in the preceding paragraph, a deposit of $2,079,069.77 was made in August, 1919, to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States as "Miscellaneous receipts, payment by German Government of requisition drawn in partial settlement of the amount due under the terms of the armistice."

The cost of the occupation of the American Army for the first four months, from December 1, 1918, to March 31, 1919, has recently been refigured on the basis of settlement agreed to by the Interallied Armistice Commission at Spa, Belgium. This daily per capita cost for the period in question amounts to the following: Officers, $10.92028; soldiers, $4.24641; animal, $1.83896. The total average daily cost based on the strength of the command for the period in question amounts to $1,220,948. An officer has recently been sent to report to the commanding general American forces in Germany with a complete statement and supporting data upon which the above figures are based for the period mentioned and to assist in the preparation and submission of figures showing the cost of occupation for period subsequent to that time.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MADDEN. I notice that the Secretary of War reports that the payment has been made in marks. What I would like to know is how much it amounts to in dollars, so that we can understand it. Four hundred million marks may amount to $2,500, according to my recollection. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman that I made inquiry as to how many marks were equivalent to $1, and I find the marks have fallen so that about 50 marks were required to make $1. But I think there has been a rise lately and the mark is not as low as it was. But I think you can get an idea of what the expense is when I recall that the Secretary says that the cost is about $1,220,000 a day. Now, of course, the financial experts will have to figure out how many marks that will amount to.

Mr. MADDEN. Our troops have been in occupation of the Coblenz bridgehead and in Silesia for about 17 months. If the cost amounts to a million and some odd thousands a day, and we have been there 500 days or a little over, it would be equivalent to about $750,000,000, in payment of which we have received 437,000,000 marks, and I understood the gentleman to say that deposits had been made to the credit of the Treasury amounting to $2,000,000; and if we take the $2,000,000 as the basis for the German payment of a contract obligation of $750,000,000 we are not coming anywhere near getting payment for the service we are rendering. The American people are being taxed for that, are they?

Mr. KAHN. That goes without saying. Of course, this force in Germany is being maintained at the present time out of the Treasury of the United States very largely.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask this further question: Under the terms of the armistice there is no obligation on Germany to grant any indemnity to the United States. We make no claim for indemnity for losses, for territory, for payment of damages, or anything of that sort?

Mr. KAHN. We made no demand for indemnity in any form, and the Allies took us at our word and did not arrange for any indemnity.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me for a moment, I have just consulted the financial page of a recent paper and I find that the mark is now quoted at 1.98, or about 2 cents. It used to take about 5 marks to make a dollar.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. That is getting along very well.

Mr. KAHN. I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. MADDEN. How do our troops compare in number in German territory with the English troops at the Cologne bridgehead?

Mr. KAHN. I have read the speech of Winston Churchill, secretary of state for war of Great Britain, made in the House of Commons on February 23, 1920. He stated at that time that England had a total of 16,000 officers and men in the occupied territory of Germany; so that we have about 1,455 more officers and men in that area than England has.

Mr. MADDEN. The territory occupied by England, if I understand the terms of the armistice, is intended to be occupied by the English troops for a period of five years, while the territory occupied by the United States troops is to be occupied for a period of 10 years.

Mr. KAHN. Not in the armistice; under the terms of the treaty of peace which was rejected by the Senate recently.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; under the treaty.

Mr. KAHN. Under the terms of that treaty the United States is bound to maintain troops along the Rhine. The Cologne bridgehead is to be surrendered at the end of five years in case Germany lives up to her treaty obligations. The Coblenz bridgehead, where our troops are stationed, is intended to be evacuated in 10 years if Germany lives up to her obligations, and the Mayence bridgehead, where the French troops are, is to be evacuated in 15 years in case Germany carries out all the conditions which she has agreed to perform.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask the few questions that I am recognized for. Has the gentleman any information which he thinks would be of interest to the House and to the country tending to show why it is that, notwithstanding the fact that England under the treaty has been granted vast areas of territory, has been allotted indemnity under the reparation commission, has been supplied with German ships, territory, money payment, and all kinds of equipment——

Mr. KAHN. And other material.

Mr. MADDEN. And other material, with locomotives and trains of cars, and all equipment to enable it to function in time of peace, America has been supplied with nothing except a bill of expense; yet she is there with an Army greater than that of England and being paid for out of the American Treasury, while I undertake to say the army of occupation sent there by England is being paid for—every dollar of it—by the German Government? Has this committee any jurisdiction over that sort of situation?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not believe that the Committee on Military Affairs has any jurisdiction over this situation; but the facts are pretty much as the gentleman has stated them. We have more troops in the German area than the Government of Great Britain has if the statement made by Winston Churchill on the floor of the House of Commons is correct, and I am satisfied that the honorable gentleman was correct when he made that statement.

Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois regarding the great expense to this Government growing out of the presence in German territory of our troops is really a serious one. I do not know whether Germany will ever be able to meet the expenses of our occupation. As the letter of the Secretary of War indicated, they are growing enormously. A rough calculation made by the gentleman from Illinois is that they now owe us $750,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. About a million and a half dollars a day, is it not?

Mr. KAHN. A million and a quarter dollars a day. I doubt whether we will ever be able to recover the great amount of indebtedness from the German Government. I would be glad if the Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction over this matter, in order that we might try to accomplish the purpose of getting the pay for our soldiers who are in German territory or of withdrawing our troops from Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. The question is whether we are going to continue on forever in this altruistic expenditure of the public money or whether we are ever going to be able to relieve the burden of taxation from the backs of the American people.

Mr. KAHN. I wish I could answer that question. I am just as anxious as is the gentleman from Illinois to relieve that burden.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. KEARNS. I understand the gentleman to say it is costing the Treasury of the United States $1,220,000 per day.

Mr. KAHN. The Secretary of War, in a letter to me which was read a few moments ago, stated, as I recall the figures, that the daily expense for our troops in German territory is about $1,220,000 in round numbers.

Mr. KEARNS. And they have been there about 500 days. Now, I understand the gentleman further to say that the Military Affairs Committee of the House has not any way at all of preventing this. If we should include an amendment to this appropriation bill providing that no part of this money shall be expended to maintain troops along the Rhine, I was just wondering if that would not be effective.

Mr. KAHN. It has been held repeatedly that the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States, who is the President, has the right to send American troops wherever the rights of our Government demand that they be sent, and under those rulings I doubt whether such a limitation would be proper or effective.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield for this further question? Has it not always been held that any appropriations committee can direct how the money that they are appropriating shall be used?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. And if this Congress should fail to appropriate the money for that purpose the President could not maintain those troops there.

Mr. KAHN. In our foreign relations we have never tried to circumscribe the use of our troops.

Mr. KEARNS. Would not this be a good time to undertake to circumscribe it?

Mr. KAHN. I doubt the constitutionality of such an attempt. I want to say that the President has seen fit to send troops into Mexico twice, when we were not at war with Mexico, and Congress paid the bills. The President has seen fit to send troops into Nicaragua. He has sent troops into Haiti. He has sent troops into Santo Domingo, and President Roosevelt sent troops into Panama when the revolution broke out there. It has been done at various times since the organization of the Government, and Congress has always recognized the right of the Chief Executive, as Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, to send troops where the interests of our country demanded that they be sent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I caught the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] accurately, I do not think that the gentleman from California has made a specific answer to it. The gentleman from Illinois asked why it was that in this peace settlement Great Britain and other countries got all the benefits and America got only the liabilities. I think the gentleman will agree with me that the answer is that the President of the United States and the peace commissioners deliberately bargained away the rights of the American people in order to obtain their League of Nations. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I did say that we asked for no indemnities, we asked for no material, we asked for nothing at the peace council, and the other nations took us at our word.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask my colleague from California if it is not a fact that the power of the Committee on Military Affairs, and, in fact, the power of Congress, over the Army is in limiting the size of the appropriations for the number of men and officers of the Army? That is the power that we have under the Constitution. When we have exercised that power and provided for an Army, as we do in this bill, of 175,000 men, then, under the Constitution of the United States, the power of distributing those troops is in the hands of the Executive——

Mr. KAHN. As Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. And not in the power of Congress, and any limitation we might put on the appropriation bill would be ineffective. Is not that true?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas, who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is the gentleman in favor of withdrawing our troops in Germany at once, without consultation with the Allies?

Mr. KAHN. I am in favor of withdrawing the American troops from Europe at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Everybody is in favor of that, but, as indicated by the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Illinois, it matters not what the agreement is we have got with the Allies, are we to withdraw now?

Mr. KAHN. We are only held at the present time under the armistice agreements. What those agreements are I do not know, because the armistice, which was signed on November 11, 1918, was continued a number of times, and I am not familiar with the terms of the continuances.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then our rights which were bargained away, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] speaks of, in the peace treaty, is not true, because the peace treaty is not in effect.

Mr. KAHN. That is true. We are not bound by the peace treaty in any way, shape, or manner, because we are not a party to it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I never contended that we were.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. If I caught the statement correctly, the Secretary of War states that it is costing us a million and a quarter dollars a day to maintain our troops in Germany. How much appropriation does this bill carry?

Mr. KAHN. The total appropriation is about $377,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. Then, if I understand it, it will take the entire amount carried in this bill to defray the expenses of our troops in Europe for a year.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman says a million and a quarter dollars a day, and there are 365 days in the year. I would like to know how you are going to support the Army in this country.

Mr. KAHN. The administration is looking to Germany to pay that million and a quarter dollars a day.

Mr. GARNER. Is it in fact being paid by Germany?

Mr. KAHN. No; it is not in its entirety. They have made a few payments. As I stated—I imagine the gentleman was probably not in the Hall at the time—I fear Germany would never be able to pay this enormous sum, and that the burden was going to fall upon the shoulders of the American taxpayers in the final analysis.

Mr. GARNER. That will take $400,000,000 a year on the present basis.

Mr. KAHN. I imagine so.

Mr. GARNER. What does the gentleman say to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to place on this bill the proviso, substantially, that no part of the appropriation carried in this bill should be used for the purpose of paying soldiers outside of the United States or its possessions?

Mr. KAHN. I believe that the President would probably disregard such a provision, because attempts have been made in the past to limit appropriations along the line suggested by the gentleman from Texas, and it has always resulted in keeping our soldiers in the territory that they occupied, nevertheless.

Mr. GARNER. The President of the United States has no more power to expend money than has the gentleman from California. The Auditor for the War Department passes on the question as to the legality of the expenditure, and I undertake to say that if Congress places in the bill a provision that no part of the money appropriated shall be spent for troops outside of the territory of the United States, no auditor would approve a voucher for that purpose.

Mr. KAHN. I do not know; the gentleman from Texas has more confidence than I have.

Mr. GARNER. I believe that the law will be administered as written.

Mr. KAHN. The Commander in Chief of the Army has always maintained that he has a right to send troops where he thought the necessities of the United States require it.

Mr. GARNER. He might send the troops, but he would have no money to pay them.

Mr. KAHN. I think the auditor would allow the necessary funds to be withdrawn from the Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not recall hearing the gentleman state a comparison between the cost of our troops and those of the French. I heard the comparison made with those of England. If the gentleman knows, will he state the comparison with the French troops?

Mr. KAHN. I stated that there were about 16,000 English troops, but I did not pretend to say how much their cost was.

Mr. DONOVAN. And how many French troops?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know. I have heard it stated, in substance, that France had something like 64,000 troops at her bridgehead.

Mr. DONOVAN. And that is more than the United States has?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, very largely in excess of ours and of the English combined.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to say further, with all due deference to my friend from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], who is usually so correct and accurate, that I do not like to take issue with him, but every authority on constitutional law that I know of holds just absolutely the contrary of what he has just stated. In examining the question with reference to the treaty powers of the country, which came before us incidentally in the discussion a few days ago, I found that all the authorities state that while Congress can not make peace it could bring peace about by refusing to appropriate money to carry on the Army.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. On page 62 of the bill I find an appropriation of $10,000 for the Secretary of War to revise and codify the military laws of the United States. The Judge Advocate General's office informed me only a few days ago that they had finished and sent to the printer a codification of those laws and asked if I would help them to get it printed without further delay. I do not think that is necessary. Furthermore, the Committee on Revision of the Laws, which has worked on the bill to revise and codify the general laws of the United States, has completed its revision and codification of the military laws of the United States and the Public Printer is printing them.

They are all assembled and printed. They have been presented and compared with the data of the Judge Advocate General's office in the War Department and, as far as we can learn, have been found satisfactory. In view of the fact that the work has been done twice already and is in the Printing Office and that the presentation of it by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws is printed and that part of the bill ready to present to Congress and in view of the fact that the gentleman's committee has no authority of the subject and the Secretary has no authority and that there is not any law authorizing it, just why is the $10,000 going to be appropriated?

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman that a bill passed by this House and reported by the Committee on Military Affairs about three years ago carried an appropriation for the revision and codification of the military laws. That was done, I am informed, at the request of the Judge Advocate General of the Army. It became law. The war came on and we were informed that the work had not been continued. But the members of the committee felt that there should be at the earliest practical moment a codification of the military laws of the United States. Nobody seems to know just exactly what the military law is. I am very glad to hear that the gentleman has taken up the matter. I am very glad to know that he has completed the matter and that it has the approval of the Judge Advocate General's office, and I dare say, in view of that statement, the Committee on Military Affairs will ask that the provision in the bill be stricken out. If the gentleman can give us the assurance that it will be printed soon, we will thank him still more.

Mr. LITTLE. It is in print, and if the gentleman will come into my office I will be very glad to show it to him, O. K'd. by the gentleman from the Judge Advocate General's Department.

Mr. KAHN. I would say that the gentleman has done a splendid piece of work for his country if he has codified, as he says he has, the military laws of the United States.

Mr. LITTLE. And let me add that that department has done the same thing, and it is now in the Printing Office, and they are trying to get it printed.

Mr. KAHN. Perhaps it will be necessary to furnish the money to get a speedy printing of it. That is a matter, of course, which we can discuss when we take up that feature of the bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Our committee did this, and it is already printed. After that had been done and printed the Judge Advocate General's office informed me they had sent theirs to the printers and it is all in print, and they have compared the two, and they have no criticism to offer of ours, and I do not see why they need go on with it, but to that I have no objection if they desire to do so, though I think this $10,000 can be saved.

Mr. KAHN. It is essential that that work of codification be done without delay.

Mr. LITTLE. I am very glad the gentleman feels that way about it.

Mr. KAHN. Because it is my belief there is no Army officer, or no Member of this House or, I believe, of the Senate, who today knows all about the military law of this country.

Mr. LITTLE. I am quite familar with that unfortunate condition.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for an Army of enlisted men of 175,000; of officers, about 16,000. The Committee on Military Affairs came to the conclusion that appropriations for an Army of that size would meet the conditions for the next fiscal year. The recruiting has not been very rapid nor satisfactory.

The recruiting division of the Judge Advocate General's Department started out on an intensive drive for 84,000 recruits on January 16, 1920, and they expected to enlist them by March 31. The total number of men recruited at the various recruiting stations was about 20,000, less than 25 per cent of the total number it was hoped to bring into the service. It is true that a little over 3,000 men were recruited at the camps, but I presume most of them were reenlistments. So that it was the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs that we were entirely safe in appropriating for an average force of 175,000 enlisted men for the fiscal year 1921.

The great expense of the Army at the present time is due largely to the increased cost per capita of the Army personnel. When we went into the World War the pay of the enlisted man was $15 a month. Privates of the first class were paid $3 additional. Under the present law the private receives $30 a month and the first-class private receives $33 a month. So that the pay of the enlisted man has been doubled.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman there show to the House the exact cost, the average per man, officers and all?

Mr. KAHN. The War Department, in a letter sent to me some weeks ago, indicated that the present cost is about $1,600 per man per year. During the war it was over $2,000 per man. In the period before we entered the World War it was about $1,200 per man per year. It might be interesting to know some of the details of the rapid increase of the cost to the Government for the personnel of the Army.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, do those figures of $1,200 represent the average officers and men?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. The ration before the war and during the period that I have been on the Committee on Military Affairs had gradually risen from 18 cents a day in 1905 to 28 cents a day in 1917. At the present time the ration is 54¾ cents per day, or double the amount it was in the year immediately preceding our entrance into the war.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In a moment. The cost of the commissary articles in Washington and vicinity was as follows: Butter, January, 1915, 34 cents a pound; in 1920, 60 cents a pound. Bacon, in 1915, 20.9 cents a pound, and to-day, 47.9 cents a pound. Vinegar, which is used very largely in connection with the animals for the Army, cleaning the stalls and the mangers, 10½ cents a gallon in 1915 and 50 cents a gallon to-day. Rice, per pound, in 1915, 5 cents; to-day, 14 cents. Coffee in 1915, 30 cents, and to-day, 45 cents.

I shall ask unanimous consent to insert this full statement in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. KAHN. The matter of clothing and subsistence is also very important, as will be seen from the following statements:

Subsistence.

Cost of ration fiscal year 1916, $0.28104; present cost of ration, $0.5525; per cent increase, 99+.

There has been a steady increase in the cost of practically all foodstuffs since the cessation of hostilities. Sugar may be taken as an example. Should subsistence supplies increase much more in cost the amount estimated will be insufficient.

Hay: December, 1916, $15 to $17.50; May, 1917, $19 to $22; December, 1917, $26 to $28. Price per ton, Department of Commerce. Fiscal year, 1920, $32; average price paid. Estimates for 1921 based on $32. April 14, 1920, quoted Chicago, $40 per ton. Per cent increase over 1916, fiscal year 1920 prices, 82 per cent; Chicago quotations, 148 per cent.

Oats: July, 1914, $1.107; July, 1915, $1.587; July, 1916, $1.215; July, 1917, $2.29. Price, wholesale, per hundredweight, Department of Commerce. Fiscal year, 1920, $2.25 per hundredweight (prices paid). Estimates for 1921 based on $2.25. April 14, 1920, quoted Chicago, $3 per hundredweight. Per cent increase over 1916, fiscal year 1920 price, 85 per cent; Chicago quotations, 147 per cent.

Coal, soft: 1916, $2.51 per ton; present price, $4 per ton; f. o. b. mines. Per cent increase, 67 per cent.

Coal, hard: 1916, $5.27 per ton; present price, $7 per ton; f. o. b. mines. Per cent increase, 32 per cent.

Paper: Increase cost over 1913, 74 per cent.

The same is also true with transportation, as will be seen by the following statement:

TRANSPORTATION.

Cost, 1915, per capita	$134.57
Estimated cost, 1920, per capita	262.83
Water, rail, animal drawn	186.63
	262.83

The cost per capita for the fiscal year 1920 is of necessity estimated, due to the impossibility of obtaining data from all parts of the field and from forces in Germany, and also to the short time in which to collect these figures. It also requires considerable time to pick out of the costs the items due to war operations and which should not be used as comparative against peace costs. In arriving at the above costs all possible items chargeable to war conditions have been eliminated and figures shown are believed very close to actual costs. Several conditions are responsible for the increase in cost. For instance, increase in railroad tariffs, greatly increased costs of all commodities, such as fuel, supplies, repairs, wages, stevedoring, and particularly replacement materials. It is believed an average increase of at least 85 per cent in this cost has been reached over prewar conditions. This percentage, however, it is not believed will be sufficient to cover the balance of the fiscal year 1920 and 1921.

So that one does not have to stretch his imagination very far to see why this enormous increase has come upon the taxpayers of the country in the maintenance of our military forces.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUNBAR. This appropriation bill provides for practically 200,000 men in our Army, including officers?

Mr. KAHN. One hundred and ninety-one thousand.

Mr. DUNBAR. Practically 200,000 for the purpose of basing the calculation, roughly, which I am about to make. This bill carries an appropriation of $377,000,000, which is approximately $1,700 a year expense for every soldier and officer in our Army. Now, in view of that fact I was wondering if the letter from the Secretary of War announcing that our Army in Germany cost $1,250,000 a day was not an error. We have over there approximately 15,000——

Mr. KAHN. Seventeen thousand five hundred.

Mr. DUNBAR. Seventeen thousand five hundred men. That would make the cost per man per day something like $60, or $21,000 a year per man.

Mr. QUIN. Here is the amount exactly, and I think the Secretary of War is in error. It would be $70.14 a day, or $25,550 a year, for every officer and man. Surely that can not be correct, I suggest to my friend.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, I received the letter from the Secretary of War this morning and I have not had an opportunity to analyze it, but I have always found the Secretary a pretty accurate man. I do not know whether there is any mistake or not, but I shall be glad to take it up with the Secretary before long and see whether there is a correction to be made.

Mr. DUNBAR. I want to say to the gentleman there is evidently an error in this amount, for it is preposterous to suppose that the cost of maintaining a soldier in Germany would amount to $2,500 a year.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman that in estimating for the entire Army we are carrying at this time and probably will have to carry for quite a number of years a considerable sum of money for cleaning up the war work of the country. In this bill there is a total amount of $22,777,839.40 which can be attributed solely to our participation in the war. Yet they are expenses that have to be met by our Government and the taxpayers have to furnish the funds to pay them.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. KAHN. If I can.

Mr. DUNBAR. Germany is under obligation to reimburse the United States for our troops stationed in their country. Is that true?

Mr. KAHN. There is an agreement under the armistice; I believe that is the case. The Secretary so stated in his letter.

Mr. DUNBAR. But the gentleman is not absolutely certain?

Mr. KAHN. I take the Secretary's word.

Mr. DUNBAR. I know; but the Secretary also stated that the cost of maintaining troops over there was $1,000,000 and over a day, so possibly there is an error somewhere.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the gentleman knows that we have not ratified the treaty and therefore are not bound by any terms of the treaty; but we went into the occupied area immediately after the armistice was agreed to by the allied nations and ourselves in November, 1918, and have continued there under the terms of the armistice.

Mr. DUNBAR. But the gentleman believes it doubtful if Germany will ever be able to reimburse us, as we are all doubtful that Europe will be able to reimburse us for the $10,000,000,000 which we have advanced.

Mr. KAHN. Well, figuring from cause to effect, I should say that if Germany contemplates meeting her great obligations to the allied nations under the terms of the treaty she will not have any money left to pay the United States for retaining soldiers there to carry out the terms of a treaty to which we are not a party.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understood the gentleman from California, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, to say that under the provisions of the treaty the bridgehead occupied by the English was to be released in 5 years, and the one occupied by the American troops in 10 years, and the one occupied by the French in 15 years.

Mr. KAHN. That is under the terms of the treaty; the gentleman is right.

Mr. McKEOWN. Under that provision the gentleman does not mean to give the impression that the American soldiers alone would occupy the bridgehead they now occupy?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, they can be transferred to Cologne, and the English could be transferred to Coblenz.

Mr. McKEOWN. The 5 years and 10 years referred to are to be occupied by the allied soldiers?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly, and ourselves. We have never considered ourselves as an ally of the Allies. We have always referred to our troops as cobelligerents, and the treaty of peace has referred to the allied nations and associated powers, we being an associated power.

Mr. McKEOWN. And the control of the soldiers has been retained by the United States Government all this time?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes. The President sent his letter to Congress in response to a resolution that I had offered in the House in which he stated very fully and very clearly the position of American troops in Europe.

There are a number of legislative features in the bill, which I shall try to explain as we reach the pages on which they appear.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I certainly will.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As I understand, the consensus of opinion on the part of the Members of the House is that we could in no way interfere with the President's continuing those troops in Germany.

Mr. KAHN. I think that is the case.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The gentleman understands, then, that the President, on his mere motion, or any succeeding President, could continue the troops there indefinitely if he were so minded, thus leaving Congress absolutely helpless in the matter?

Mr. KAHN. Of course, they are there in accordance with the terms of the armistice and the extensions of the armistice of November 11, 1918. The precedents all go to show that the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the American forces has the right to send American troops where he considers American interests are involved; and, as I stated before, the Presidents in the past have sent our troops into countries with which we were not at war in order to protect American interests. I took occasion to look up the authorities when the Committee on Military Affairs had before it the resolution about returning American troops from Siberia, and I think there is no difference among the authorities that the Commander in Chief has the right to send American troops as I have indicated.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I quite agree with the gentleman on that proposition. And not only that, I think any limitation of that power would go to the very heart of the institutions of this country; so that, for good or ill, during the incumbency of the President the Army and the Navy are under his charge, to be used whenever and wherever he pleases to send them.

Mr. KAHN. I am entirely in accord with the gentleman's views of the matter.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. On some legislation that has been enacted into law. It does not pertain to this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes. They are concerning legislation that has been enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GREEN of Iowa having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4073. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City;

S. 4167. An act to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge approaches and extensions or additions thereto by the city of St. Louis, within the States of Illinois and Missouri; and

S. J. Res. 186. Joint resolution to extend the authority of the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think that the House of Representatives should be proud of the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs has followed a policy of economy and at the same time appropriated for an efficient establishment for our national defense so far as the Army is concerned. The War Department wanted over $900,000,000. Your committee has brought out $377,000,000, in round numbers, for an army of 175,000 men, with the officers, making it in all about 191,000. I have been against a big army. I have been against all the branches and arms of it that I thought would tend to bring about militarism in this country; but this measure, my friends, is one, I believe, that every man on this floor ought to support. The bill carries too many officers—and I will vote for an amendment to reduce the number of officers. The Army has already been provided for by this House, and this is the appropriation to maintain and support it for the next fiscal year. Republicans and Democrats alike on the committee agree on this matter, except some of us want more money for the National Guard, and it seems to me that in these times of extravagance and heavy burdens placed upon the taxpayers of the country, each and every Member of this House ought to feel that when the Military Committee brings out such language as this:

> The committee felt that at this time it is necessary to practice rigid economy. The country faces a deficit of several billions of dollars at the beginning of the next fiscal year.

That your committee, in bringing out such language as that in its report, and feeling in its heart the effect of that language and the reason for it being necessary to practice economy in legislation, ought to be the subject of congratulation on the part of both sides of this House.

I regret that I have to disagree with my administration, with the Secretary of War, in his efforts to establish this great army of 576,000 men and officers in peace times. I regret that I can not follow him in his desire for a big standing army, but I congratulate this committee and this House on curtailing the Army and bringing out, as I verily believe, a bill for a sufficient army to guarantee the security of our citizenship and property rights and the honor of our flag for the next fiscal year. [Applause.] Who is it that really understands the situation that doubts that 175,000 men are plenty and ample in peace times? We know that in some corners of this Republic and in certain newspapers there is a manifest propaganda for a great army. All kinds of bugaboos have been put up to fool the American people. But after all it must come down to the good, sound judgment, to the sincerity and practical sense, of the representatives of the people to establish and maintain an army compatible with the security of our Republic.

This Congress, in my judgment, has used its good sense in Army legislation. Irrespective of all outside influences, with the feeling of obligation resting individually upon each Congressman, the House of Representatives has done, I believe, the clean and proper thing for the American people. And whatever amendments may be necessary to put in this appropriation bill, on its face as a whole the amount is not too much, and I believe is proper, and that every man on this floor, regardless of how small an Army he may want, would be justified in his heart and his conscience in supporting this measure that your committee now has placed before you.

True, the other end of the Capitol has been engaged in a desperate effort, as some did at this end of it not long ago, to place compulsory military service in our Army bill, in the reorganization scheme, and force that upon the country. But that monstrosity has been, fortunately for the people and the taxpayers of our country, eliminated from consideration. And according to my belief this institution, the Regular Establishment of the Army, can never be a great burden nor factor of militarism, because it is inbred in the bones and blood of the American citizenry to oppose a great Army and all of the attendant circumstances which would bring about the instrumentalities of oppression.

As a circumstance justifying that statement, the enlistments in the Army can not make it above about the 175,000 men that this bill provides for. The American men will not run over each other to go in peace times and enlist in the Regular Establishment, because they realize that their country is in no danger, and the citizen wants to be out and following civil pursuits; he wants to be out in some active, productive pursuit, where he is worth something to his country as a citizen and as a productive unit. With that spirit in the American manhood, we will never have a volunteer Army in peace times which will be a great burden on the taxpayers of this country nor one that could be a menace to the liberties of our Republic. One hundred and seventy-five thousand men will not alarm anybody. I doubt whether under the rate of enlisting at the end of the fiscal year we shall have the 175,000 enlisted men. Of course, you will have all the officers. You need not be worried about the officers; they will be there. Our chief aim has been to hold the bill down from being an officers' bill. Of course, it would be possible, under some of the schemes advocated, to have one officer to about five men. If that were the case, you would have a great army of officers without men to command. That is the thing that your committee has endeavored to look after.

I believe that this House would be most vitally interested in a bill to have a reasonable Army with the proper and adequate number of officers, but not too many officers. I heartily believe in good, well-educated and trained and disciplined officers, but I want those officers to be in proportion to the size of the Army.

The young men who have been officers in this present war are back in civil pursuits now. They are filling the necessary places in the productive industry and in the society of our Republic. If danger threatens and war clouds come, those men, as well as all the graduates of West Point who are in civil life, will be ready and willing to listen to the call of their country and come and train the raw recruits necessary to make an adequate army to defend us against any foe.

There is one question that came before this House to-day that I would like to discuss for a moment. The letter from the Secretary of War indicates that the 17,455 men and officers that this Republic has on the bridgehead at Coblenz, in Germany, cost daily $1,120,600. That would be a daily cost for each officer and man of $70.14, or an average cost of $25,550 per officer and enlisted man for a year. I call on our chairman now to do it, and if he does not do it I will introduce myself a resolution here to ask the Secretary of War to furnish detailed information as to why it is necessary for such an enormous expense as that per man for our men occupying the territory over in Germany to-day. [Applause.]

The average cost per man in the Army in this country is $1,600 per annum. Upon what basis could the Secretary of War estimate a cost of $25,550 per man for a year for the forces that this Government has occupying neutral territory in Germany to-day? I think there must be an error in the statement which the Secretary of War submits in this letter. This letter was dated April 9. It was read before you, and I hold it in my hand. Surely it was some clerk in his office that made up this statement and not the Secretary himself. One million one hundred and twenty thousand six hundred and fifty-four dollars per day for 17,455 men and officers!

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has demonstrated to you that we are not collecting all that money from Germany, and I do not think that in the fix that the German Government is in to-day we should oppress it and call for the last penny each month. We must give them time. We must let that nation get on its feet. We shall collect every dollar of the money in due course of time. But the American Government must be reasonable. We must not go out and oppress our late enemy while he is down and helpless in money matters and make conditions of anarchy and Bolshevism in that country. However necessary it may be to maintain this army over there for some time to come—and we must do it under the armistice agreement—the cost of that army should be held down to what is right and reasonable. I can not conceive of how it would cost $70.14 daily for each man we have got there and put that cost on the enemy. I do not believe in abusing the enemy. We have crushed the enemy. We are endeavoring now to get business and restore trade relations with the enemy that we had before, and so why should this Government put up such an expense account as $1,120,000 a day against the poor, helpless enemy, when the maintenance cost per man of the Army in our own country to-day is only $1,600, while over there in Coblenz it is $25,550? Somebody must explain something to this Congress.

I can not understand why an army in Germany would cost $25,550 per year for each man and one in the United States, in this high-cost country that we have here, only $1,600 a year per man. We can not maintain it here for less. Nobody would expect us to maintain it here for less than we are paying now. Nobody would expect the Government to maintain the Army at a less expense per man, considering the additional cost of pay and of what they eat and the provender and the ammunition, which have all advanced, and I am afraid the high cost is with us for some time yet to come.

The Government has failed to practice economy. This Congress is endeavoring to bring about some economy. I believe this House is sincere in its efforts, and if the other branch over yonder would follow the same policy, and if the executive branch of this Government would get busy, we could cut down the expenses of this Government. [Applause.]

There is an estimate here from this very department that we are appropriating for—they wanted us to put up nearly a billion dollars for the Army. The American public as a rule lays all the extravagance at the door of Congress. I am just one humble Member of this House, and ever since the armistice was signed over yonder I have advocated on every hand the exercise of businesslike, sound judgment and economy in the administration of this Government. [Applause.] Some folks say it can not be done. Of course, it can not be done when all the executive departments of this Government are sending down great items and demanding that this Congress put them through. If this Congress fathers them and puts them through the country blames Congress. You know that back in every district they think that the individual Representative of the district is responsible for the waste and extravagance.

I wish the people could realize how legislation is brought about. I wish they could realize that these 107,000 employees in the District of Columbia are not handled by this Congress but are employed and handled by the executive branch of this Government, by these bureau chiefs and these Cabinet officers. And the Congress is getting the blame for every bit of it. We cut down the appropriations, endeavoring to get rid of useless clerks, and it seems like we are abused for doing that. The war is over. The armistice was signed away back yonder—November 11, 1918—and here it is crop-planting time in 1920 and still the war expense is running. We have had peace in everything except expenses; and I want to say that the Committee on Military Affairs had a very hard time getting our Army demobilized. We had to work for months and months endeavoring to get that Army down to what it is now. The Army is reduced now, and rightfully so, and it ought to stay down in peace times. If this House would back up its Committee on Military Affairs in endeavoring to hold the Army down in its size, the expenses of this Government, so far as the Army is concerned, would be reasonable and in proportion to the importance of this establishment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I yield; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Just what is the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. QUIN. This proposition before you is a reasonable one, only $377,664,000 for an Army of 175,000 men, and officers enough to make it $191,000 for the next fiscal year, the most reasonable proposition that has been brought to this House by any of the great committees. No man on this floor can complain at what has been done by the Military Affairs Committee of this House, and I want to say that both parties have been endeavoring to be economical and to hold down the Army to what the country can stand, and what at the same time the country would be safe in supporting and maintaining.

Some are endeavoring to reach out and put a consumption tax on the people of this country to pay for these things. They want to let the great profiteers, those who have made immense fortunes in this war, go free from taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Let me have five minutes more.

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. QUIN. They are endeavoring to put on the backs of the poor men and women and children of this country, through that sinister method of taxation called a consumption tax on sales, the burden of paying for the billions of bonds that have been floated to carry on this war. Personally I am for a bonus to the American soldiers who went over and fought this war, and I see propagandists busy now saying, "Yes, we will give the soldiers a bonus, but we want to put a tax on all the necessities of life, so that the poor people, the people who constitute the public, must pay when they buy any necessity of life."

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. QUIN. Yes; I yield, if the gentleman will be quick about it.

Mr. BAER. Do not the people, in fact, pay the excess-profits taxes about five times over now, and would it not be better if they could pass the act?

Mr. QUIN. Oh, no; I want to say to my friend that you Republicans can not fool the people of this country with any such idea as that. [Applause.] The poor people of this country know that when you get a big income tax you are getting it out of the pockets of the people who are able to pay the taxes. I admit and I regret that to some extent the profiteers are able to pass the excess-profits tax on to the great multitude of this country.

I hope we can pass legislation that will make it impossible for these greedy people who have profiteered on the people during this war to continue their profiteering and their oppression of the people, and avoiding that tax by passing it on in such a manner that the poor people still have to pay it. [Applause.] But a propaganda is going out from certain places in the United States, and is permeating the committee room over here that we call the Ways and Means Committee, to put this consumption tax on the articles that the people must buy. The Republicans are taking hold of that proposition, and I fear a few Democrats will be caught in that trap, to let these rich men—the great corporate interests of the country—escape from taxation and to saddle the whole burden on the man with the hoe and the man and woman in the factory, in the mine, and in the workshop, the clerks, people in all the avocations of life, all who spin and toil, who must bear the burden. And a little later on you will take that tax off of the rich. You will reduce the income tax, you will take off the excess-profits tax, and place it all on the backs of the consuming public of this country.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not time. I have only five minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. We will give you two minutes over here.

Mr. QUIN. All right, if you will give me two minutes there.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to get one thing clear in my mind. I understood the gentleman in his speech a few moments ago, in response to a question by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], to say that even the income tax and the excess-profits tax levied on the rich is finally passed on down to the consumer.

Mr. QUIN. I did not say that.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. QUIN. Certainly, you misunderstood me. I said that the income tax caught these wealthy fellows, and we are going to keep on catching them unless you take it away. They do have some ability to pass a great deal of the excess-profits tax on to the public, and I desire legislation that would prevent them from passing the buck to anybody. Why, it seems to me that the American Congress ought to wake up and realize what is confronting the people of this country. You should know what the folks are talking about. Do you believe that the American people will sit idly by while you go on placing great burdens upon the taxpaying masses of this country by legislation specially devised to allow the rich to go free, and while they gather in all the bonds of this Government that it has issued, and through your consumption tax allow the public to be robbed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. On behalf of the chairman of the committee, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman is extended three minutes.

Mr. QUIN. The American people can stand much. About a year ago when I landed back in the United States from a trip abroad I read in the newspapers that Congress had just assembled; that the Republicans all over the country had demanded an early session of the Congress for the purpose of reducing the high cost of living. I do not know whether that was a false alarm or not. [Laughter.] I will not demagogue on such a serious subject. Every man on both sides of this House, Democrat and Republican, who had the intellectuality of a snowbird, realized that the whole world was short on production and the demand exceeded the supply, that you could not by legislation and by artificial methods reduce the cost of the commodities of life, but must rely on supply and demand. However, my friends, the American people know that State legislatures can stop profiteering within the State. They know that the American Congress can, to a certain extent, legislate for commodities that come into interstate commerce and on all articles in the District of Columbia. But you have not up to this good hour put either one of those things into force. You content yourselves by blaming the Attorney General of the United States. I have no brief to defend Mr. Palmer. I admire him as a Congressman, as a citizen, and as Attorney General. I do not know whether he has done everything he could to stop the greed of the profiteers and I can not speak for him. I do not think the courts can remedy all this thing. I notice that some folks in the city expect the farmer to do his work for nothing. The first thing that they call on is that they want meat and flour for almost nothing. They want hog meat and beef at old-time prices, when the labor on the farm is getting excessive prices. Laborers on the farm are calling for $5 and $7 a day. That is so in the South, and I presume it is so all through the North and the West, and the farmers are paying $4 to $6 a day for men to cultivate the fields. And yet people in the city think that the farmer ought to get less for his products. I can not see on what process of reasoning they can arrive at that conclusion. In my judgment labor is worthy of its hire, whether it is the farmer, the blacksmith, the man in the sawmill, the man running the trains—I say that all labor is entitled to a just compensation for its service. And, on the other hand, the man should render full value received for the pay that he gets. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have two additional minutes, as I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. KNUTSON. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to say that he was in favor of a bonus to soldiers. Has he given any consideration to the question as to how that money is to be raised to pay that bonus?

Mr. QUIN. How much time do I get to answer that question? [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. How much time does the gentleman need?

Mr. QUIN. Give me three minutes and I will answer it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Yes; I have given consideration to it, and I will give you my reasons for it. We raised an Army to go abroad and fight with the Allies, about four and a half million American young men. You had back at home in this country men engaged in every activity. Our farmers at home received war prices and were more poorly paid than all other classes of labor during the war except the railroad men, and I have heard them criticized, but we ought to be fair to them. The engineers and the conductors and trainmen and shop workers——

Mr. KNUTSON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman is not discussing the bonus question. He is discussing the railroad question, and I want him to answer my question, as I am looking for information.

Mr. QUIN. I will answer it. All of these folks back home got high prices for their work; they slept in good, warm beds eight or nine hours every night; sat down to a table and ate three good meals a day. Now, you have given a bonus to all of the yeomanettes down here in the navy yard; you have given a bonus to every clerk in this Government, $240 a year; you have raised the salaries of everybody from the Farm Loan Committee clean on up except the salaries of Congressmen and Senators. You have raised everybody's salary. When these men over at the shipyards wanted more pay the executive department has gone over and raised their salary. You had salaries raised on every hand in this country. Thousands on thousands have profiteered in the necessities of life and made fortunes running into the millions.

Now, after the war is over, after these soldiers who have done their duty and after they went through the hardships, some of them dying in battle, some coming back gassed, wounded, and scarred for the rest of their lives, some of them deprived from making money like those back home—I am in favor of giving these boys a bonus and putting them on an equality with all the citizens that stayed at home and had a good time and slept in a warm bed every night. [Applause.] These soldier boys, who slept in the mud and who marched in the face of the enemy in the Argonne and were ready to die for their country—yes; I am going to vote to give them a bonus, and I think it should be raised from a tax on war profits; but if you will not raise it from that source, then add on more income taxes. The American people will not object. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY].

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DENT and Mr. KAHN to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 7, noes 70.

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13587, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 278 Members answered to their names, and he presented the list of absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will resume its session.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is my purpose in the time allotted to me to discuss certain outstanding features of the railroad strike. There seems to me to be two very evident facts in this situation. The first one is the fact that members of the old railroad brotherhoods apparently have a just complaint. The second one is that the red radicals have capitalized that complaint and are now directing the course of the strike as its active leaders.

I wish to discuss the first point in order to make my position clear. I happen to live in a little town which is a railroad center, a division point on the Erie, and I know these brotherhood men as intimately as I know anyone in the world. Many of them I have grown up with, and I want to say that those men whom I know and have seen all the years of my life are for the most part fine, substantial American citizens. [Applause.] And I do not suggest even that there is any lack of Americanism on the part of the great rank and file of the members of the brotherhoods who are now affected.

I want to give you two or three illustrations. I was riding on a passenger run that I have taken many times between my home town and Cleveland just a month or so ago. I talked with a trainman on that passenger run, and, as a matter of curiosity, I asked him what he was making. He told me that his pay is $4 a day. He is a fine, wholesome American, steady as a clock, working day in and day out. I know that he is right at heart. In these days that wage is impossible for a man with a family. Four or five years ago it was a good wage and members of the old brotherhoods had a distinct advantage, the result of which was a gradual drawing to their ranks of fine types of Americans. You know them if you have observed at all. These fine old men in the brotherhoods represent as fine a stock of American citizens as I know.

I have in mind two young men with whom I grew up. Their father is president of one of the banks in my home town. These boys have railroaded all their lives. They are engineers. There are no finer Americans than those two boys, and yet their pay is $5.70 a day. If these men were required to support a family it is self-evident that to-day such a wage is unjust, especially for a man who assumes the responsibility of running an engine, who takes into his hands the life and safety of countless lives and vast wealth. Furthermore, the most ignorant and least skilled laborers are being paid much more than the best and most important men as a general rule. When the skilled worker who has spent years in the service draws a pay of $65 or $70 in two weeks sees ignorant and unskilled laborers all around him drawing a hundred to a hundred and ten or fifteen dollars for the same period, it is not to be wondered at that he feels himself unjustly treated, especially when the struggle to support his family is so intense and difficult.

I think I can speak as the sincere friend of orderly organized labor. I am sure that my record in the time that I have been in this House will sustain me. Having said that, I wish to bring out the other fact, which is apparent that this just complaint has been capitalized by the revolutionary group.

Gentlemen, the fact is that to-day the most active leaders of this railroad strike—understand me to say leaders now—were formerly paid agents of the I. W. W. And this is the truth, gentlemen; I have it on accurate authority. Whether they are to-day on the pay roll of that sinister organization I can not say, but the fact is that they have been paid agents of the I. W. W., which seeks to destroy this country. One outstanding example is that in Chicago. This is an official message:

One Bedell, an I. W. W. of reputation, had displaced Grunan, leader of the unauthorized strike.

A new organization has been formed in Chicago, known as the Railroad Workers' Union, which is to be affiliated with the "One Big Union." The officers of this organization are: Carl Pierson, one Carlson, A. E. Reese, and one Kane. This new organization is making every possible effort to cause the men employed in the railroad shops to strike in sympathy with the present workers who are out on strike.

Literature is being printed in Chicago to be sent broadcast through the country for distribution among the strikers.

And you have to-day a group of fine Americans, good citizens, with a just cause that has given them a state of mind which makes them susceptible to the specious appeals of the radicals.

These radicals are as bitter in their enmity toward organized labor as they are toward the Government itself.

The first witness before the Lusk committee was Hugh Frayne, general organizer of the American Federation of Labor in charge of the New York district. He described the various revolutionary groups and named especially the anarchists, the I. W. W.—Industrial Workers of the World—the W. I. I. U—Workers' International Industrial Union—the Socialist Labor Party, and the Communist Party.

Quoting from an article by Vincent St. John, he gave the following striking statement:

As a revolutionary organization, the I. W. W. aims to use any and all tactics that will give the results sought with the least expenditure of time and energy. The tactics used are determined solely by the power of the organization to make good in their use. The question of "right" and "wrong" does not concern us. No terms made with an employer are final. All peace, so long as the wage system lasts, is but an armed truce.

His testimony gives from the printed words of these revolutionary organizations the proof that is uncontrovertible that they propose to destroy not only organized labor but the Government itself.

So you have to-day, gentlemen, what is in fact a challenge of the revolutionists toward all orderly society, and if this strike succeeds it means the death of orderly organized labor. It means, moreover, the death of American institutions. It is the most sinister, the most ominous threat that has faced this Nation in many a day.

What is the avowed program of the red radicals? You have but to study their own literature to know their objective. First of all, they propose to form one big union, and, of course, they expect to have themselves elected the directing officers of that union. Next, strikes and more strikes, and finally a general strike, and from that revolution. That is the threat you face to-day.

They have one avowed purpose: To destroy this Government, to confiscate all private property and eliminate private ownership, to prostitute the schools, to abolish the church and banish God, to invade the sanctity of the home, and to internationalize this great country that was born in the blood of noble patriots and dedicated to the principle of majority rule and liberty and equal opportunity.

Let me repeat, gentlemen, that in my honest opinion, as I know men and as I have seen these members of the brotherhoods all my life, I am confident that 9 out of 10 of them represent the finest type of citizenship, and it is only because of a consciousness they have of a just cause that they have become fertile ground for the activities of the revolutionists. They have become the unwitting tools of the red radicals who talk to them of their grievances and seek by means of "mass action" the overthrow and destruction of government and society.

The I. W. W. in its official organs repeatedly gives its slogan, "All peace so long as the wage system lasts is but an armed truce." That is the battle cry of the I. W. W. That gives the spirit which actuates them. Not justice—no—they do not demand justice; they say that "All peace so long as the wage system lasts is but an armed truce."

Finding some time ago that they could not put over their program according to the old method, they determined on a new policy, to "bore from within" in the old unions, to secure places of vantage, and to use that power for the purpose of revolution.

One very interesting fact is disclosed in the complete harmony existing between all these radical groups on the one hand and the Russian Bolshevist government on the other. They have all espoused the cause of Russia, all of them; and likewise Russia, through her spokesman, the communist party in America, has made common cause with all the radical groups in this country.

Do you think this is far-fetched? Do you believe that it is an extreme statement? Why, gentlemen, I will tell you what the president of the Central Labor Union in Akron told me a month or so ago—the president of the Central Labor Union, who is a good friend of mine and likewise a good American.

He told me a little over a year ago that that organization over which he now presides was controlled by the red radicals, and he ought to know. He told me also that they kicked them out. [Applause.] More power to them. He went further and told me what one of these revolutionists said to him. He wanted to find out what was running in this fellow's mind, and he asked him some questions as to his thought and purpose. This man said to him:

Some of these days there will be a shot ring out. That will be the signal. When that time comes there will be men springing from everywhere, and they will be armed. If my own father stands in my way at that time I will shoot him down.

This came from a revolutionist in the ranks of organized labor, who happens to be an American citizen, a home owner, and a man of family. Those are the threats which face organized labor and organized society.

We find various groups of these red radical organizations. The old I. W. W., which still exists and is more active than ever; the W. I. I. U., which is an offshoot of the I. W. W.; and then there is the left-wing Socialists and the Socialist Labor Party, as distinguished from the right-wing Socialists, who apparently believe in achieving their ends by lawful and orderly process. How many there are I do not know. But the left-wing Socialists and the Social Labor Party are revolutionary at heart and completely.

Then there is the communist party, which was organized only the 1st of last September. They claimed at that time some 60,000 members. They proclaim their allegiance, not to the Constitution of the United States, not to the Stars and Stripes, but to the international that sits at Moscow and to the red flag that speaks their gospel.

We have also the various groups of anarchists and anarchist-communists, the Union of Russian Workers, and so forth. They have assumed a bold and defiant attitude. They have one objective, gentlemen, which is not justice, which is not fair play; it is nothing more nor less than revolution.

We have the testimony of the attorney general of New York when he appeared before the Judiciary Committee of this House. He said that, according to the best evidence they were able to obtain, there are right now between 70 and 80 headquarters in New York City from which the poison of the revolutionists is sent out. He testified also that there are between 300,000 and 500,000 members of these red radical organizations in New York City alone—not men who wish to change our Government by orderly processes, but men who wish to destroy it and all that America represents.

I had opportunity to hear the story of a young Russian from a good friend of mine, a Member of this House. A friend of his had lately returned from Russia, where he had been during the latter days of the Czar's régime, during the period of Kerensky's brief official life, and latterly during the Bolshevist reign, until just three or four months ago when he left. His last stand was at Archangel, concerning which he tells the story of a young Bolshevist who was captured as a spy, and in his effort to escape this young Russian was shot and mortally wounded and was brought in. They attempted to do for him all that it was possible to do.

The American was interested in him, because he was apparently an intelligent type. He wanted to know why this man was a Bolshevist. He could not understand. His type did not suggest the ultra radical. He said to the young wounded officer, "Why are you a Bolshevist?" The young Russian's eyes blazed. He said, "My God, of all the names that I hate in this world, I hate that the worst." "Why, then, are you a Bolshevist?" "I can not help myself. They hold my old mother as a hostage, and if I fail she dies." Then he reached into his pocket and drew out some paper money and said, "Please get this to my mother if you can," giving him her address. "You may not be able to get her the money, but for God's sake, man, publish to the Bolshevists the fact that I died for them, so that my old mother may live."

That is the system that makes Bolshevism a temporary success in that sad land—holding as hostages the wives, the mothers, and the daughters of strategic men. And we see over there 2,000,000 armed men holding in subjection 180,000,000 people, forcing upon them a type and character of government which they do not want and can not live under in peace and happiness and prosperity.

That, gentlemen, is the objective of the revolutionary groups in this country, who have proclaimed time and time again their allegiance to the great Internationale that is represented now by the Bolshevist government in Russia. These men in our own country, just a small minority, wild-eyed radicals, who talk always and talk loudly and make themselves sound ten times greater, demand the destruction and overthrow of this Government and the substitution of a soviet system. Their audacious activity very often secures for them places of authority and leadership, which is their aim. Gentlemen, if you have doubt as to the correctness of these statements, I ask only that you study their literature and learn from their own words what their program is.

Gentlemen, ever since last June the Attorney General of the United States has been asking for a law to deal with these agents of revolution. He appeared before a committee of the Senate last June and asked for a law to reach the enemies of this Government, those who would destroy it by force. He has repeatedly asked for it, and upon invitation of the Senate he prepared a proposed bill which I had the honor to introduce in this House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Did he not modify his views on that before the committee of the House?

Mr. DAVEY. He did not.

Mr. MADDEN. He did.

Mr. DAVEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He has stood consistently and always for this same measure. I know, because I have been in constant touch with him, and I know from his testimony; and if the gentleman will read the letter that he sent to the Committee on Rules he will see that he stood for this same measure from the beginning.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not agree at all with the gentleman, and I still assert that he changed his views. He modified them very materially. He does not seem to know what he wants.

Mr. DAVEY. The gentleman is entitled to his opinion, but I know that the Attorney General has stood steadfast for this same bill.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Is it not true that the Attorney General changed his view from what was reported to be his view, but that he himself has been consistent? He is reported to have taken a certain stand, but his first authoritative utterance was his letter to the committee if I understand the matter aright.

Mr. DAVEY. Yes; and that letter stated very positively that he stood for the same bill that he had recommended originally to the Senate.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] virtually contradicts the gentleman from Ohio. What evidence has the gentleman from Illinois that the Attorney General has changed his position?

Mr. MADDEN. His own statement, his own letter.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will be glad if the gentleman from Illinois would put it in the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. I am entitled to my interpretation of his letter, the same as the gentleman is to his.

Mr. DAVEY. I would be glad, with the consent of the House, to have that letter inserted at this point. May I have unanimous consent on that?

The CHAIRMAN. What was the gentleman's request?

Mr. DAVEY. That the letter of the Attorney General to the Committee on Rules be inserted at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman already has unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Following is the letter referred to:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1920.

Hon. PHILIP P. CAMPBELL,
Chairman Committee on Rules, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: I find that public business of pressing importance will make it impossible for me to attend the hearing before your committee to-morrow morning. I would be glad if you will print this letter in the hearings as a statement of my views with respect to the legislation which you are considering. I have read with great care both the Sterling bill, passed by the Senate, and the Graham bill, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and feel impelled to say that neither of these bills accords with my views as to what the legislation ought to be. In response to a Senate resolution I prepared several months ago and transmitted to the Senate the following as a draft of a law which, in my view, meets all the requirements of the situation:

"A bill defining sedition, the promoting thereof, providing punishment therefor, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled: Sedition: Whoever, with the intent to levy war against the United States, or to cause the change, overthrow, or destruction of the Government or of any of the laws or authority thereof, or to cause the overthrow or destruction of all forms of law or organized government, or to oppose, prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or the free performance by the United States Government or any one of its officers, agents, or employees of its or his public duty, commits, or attempts or threatens to commit, any act of force against any person or any property, or any act of terrorism, hate, revenge, or injury against the person or property of any officer, agent, or employee of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of sedition, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding 20 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 2. Promoting sedition: Whoever makes, displays, writes, prints, or circulates, or knowingly aids or abets the making, displaying, writing, printing, or circulating of, any sign, word, speech, picture, design, argument, or teaching which advises, advocates, teaches, or justifies any act of sedition as hereinbefore defined, or any act which tends to incite sedition as hereinbefore defined, or organizes or assists or joins in the organization of, or becomes or remains a member of, or affiliated with, any society or organization, whether the same be formally organized or not, which has for its object, in whole or in part, the advising, advocating, teaching, or justifying of any act of sedition as hereinbefore defined, or the inciting of sedition as hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed guilty of promoting sedition, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment of not exceeding 10 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 3. Aliens to be deported: Any alien who shall be convicted under any of the provisions of this act shall, at the expiration of his sentence, be taken into custody under the warrant of the Secretary of Labor and deported in the manner provided by the immigration laws of the United States then in force, and said alien shall forever thereafter be debarred from again entering the United States or any Territory or possession thereof.

"SEC. 4. Denaturalization and subsequent deportation: The conviction under any of the provisions of this act of any naturalized citizen shall be deemed sufficient to authorize the cancellation of his or her certificate of naturalization in the manner provided by section 15 of the naturalization act of June 29, 1906. It shall be the duty of the United States attorney in the district where said naturalized citizen is held in custody or resides to institute and conduct such proceedings immediately upon the entry of final judgment of conviction. Upon the cancellation of the certificate of naturalization the alien shall become subject to the provisions of section 3 of this act.

"SEC. 5. The Department of Justice shall furnish the Secretary of Labor such data as will enable him at the proper time to effect the deportation of those made subject thereto by the provisions of this act."

I understand this bill has been introduced in the House by Representative DAVEY, of Ohio (H. R. 10650). Of course, the form which legislation shall take is for the Congress, exclusively. The bill which I have quoted was prepared by me only because requested so to do by a Senate committee. It is unnecessary for me to add that the Department of Justice stands ready to enforce whatever legislation the Congress shall see fit to pass.

Yours, truly,

A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Attorney General.

Mr. DAVEY. And here is the pathetic part of it all, gentlemen: Right now in this crisis the American people, including Republicans, look to that same Attorney General to uphold the law and protect the peace and the safety of the Nation, and I know that in your hearts you believe that he will make good.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. We hope so.

Mr. DAVEY. You know that he will. You look to him. You ask him to protect America in a crisis; you ask him to do the difficult thing, the thing that takes courage to do; and then you stab him in the back with petty politics. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Were it possible for a courageous public official to do his duty and receive the plaudits of men on the other political side, how much more chance would we have to get good public service! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, as to the condition of the present law. It is said that the present laws are adequate. That, of course, is a question subject to a difference of opinion. The Attorney General says—and his statement is borne out apparently by the facts—that these present laws will not reach the situation; that in the case of both the present penal sections an actual overt act must have taken place. It is impossible under the condition of the present laws to do one solitary thing until the conflagration has broken out.

Let me speak symbolically and illustrate, if I may, the condition of the present laws as they affect the revolutionary enemies of this Government. The revolutionist can take up his torch and with it he can take a bundle of oil-soaked waste; he can beckon his followers from everywhere to take up likewise their torches and their oil-soaked waste. They can march down the street boldly and defiantly, telling you in advance what they propose to do. They can lay that oil-soaked waste at the foot of your Government. They can set it on fire, and not until the conflagration has broken out can you lay the hand of the law upon them. That is a fact. I speak symbolically.

Mr. BAER. Are you speaking figuratively there?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. BAER. You must be speaking figuratively, because two or more men who conspire in any way, even if they do not commit an overt act, can be put in jail and shipped out of the country according to our present laws.

Mr. DAVEY. Which laws?

Mr. BAER. According to the criminal code.

Mr. DAVEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, because that is not a fact. The courts have held that before conspiracy can be proven the overt act must have occurred.

Mr. BAER. That is in the case of one single man, all alone, who starts something. It is not in the case of two or more who conspire, because if a person writes a letter to another person and starts that letter on its way, saying, "We are going to start some of this waste down in Washington," you can put them in jail; and if you can not put them in jail under the criminal code that we already have, you can do it under the espionage act, that we passed in time of war; and I think that Mr. Palmer could deport every one of these people who advocate the overthrow of government by force and violence right now.

Mr. DAVEY. Of course, I realize that the easiest thing and the most natural thing in the world is to "pass the buck" to Mr. Palmer. You have no law even now under war legislation that will reach the apostles, the leaders, of revolution.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DAVEY. No; I regret I can not yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I have an interview with Mr. Palmer now. This is in connection with what I have said.

Mr. DAVEY. Well, I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Palmer is reported to have said in an interview in a New York newspaper day before yesterday:

> The Government will not run away from responsibility. There is plenty of law on the statute books to protect the people, and the law will be enforced.

Mr. DAVEY. The law to which the Attorney General referred is undoubtedly the Lever Act, and you propose to repeal that, and no doubt it will be repealed, and when that is gone, what have you got? Not a thing to protect the Nation against its avowed enemies. Section 5534 reads as follows:

> SEC. 5334. Every person who incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be punished by imprisonment not more than 10 years, or by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both of such punishments; and shall, moreover, be incapable of holding any office under the United States.

The courts have held that before that section can apply an overt act must have taken place. You have nothing to reach your Berkmanns and your Goldmans. They can proceed up and down this country violently preaching, and working for their objective, and you can not touch them.

Section 5336 reads as follows:

> SEC. 5336. If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to sieze, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, each of them shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a period not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

This section was passed during the Civil War and the courts have held that it applies to conditions or acts of actual rebellion.

Furthermore, that section requires proof of conspiracy. You may be satisfied in your own mind that a conspiracy exists, but, gentlemen, it is the hardest thing in the world to prove, and every lawyer must know that that is so. I am not a lawyer. I had the opportunity to sit as judge in the local police court while I had the honor to be mayor of my home town, and I remember the case of an Italian who had shot and killed his near relative. I picked up this Italian. He confessed everything to me. He told me how he did it and why he did it. He said he would do it over again. Yet when that man came to trial it was impossible to convict him of first-degree murder, because they could not provide one little connecting link in the testimony. In the same way you face a very difficult and sometimes impossible problem in proving conspiracy. If you miss one connecting link, the charge of conspiracy falls flat.

Gentlemen, the only law that we now have is one which applies to the aliens, and then only as to deportation. That is an unfortunate fact, because not every enemy of this Government is an alien. Some of them are naturalized citizens, and occasionally you will find a native born.

Right here I want to bring out one of the saddest things in the history of the last few months of our Government. That is the action of one Louis F. Post in the Department of Labor. He serves in a Democratic administration, in a Democratic department, but what I am going to say is not an indictment of the Democratic Party, and I hope that no thought of politics will be injected into this. If it were an indictment of my party, I would mighty soon get out of it, but it is not. We have down there in the Department of Labor a man whose sympathies evidently are with the enemies of our Government. [Applause.] Just a little while ago this same man Post, after the warrant for the deportation of Ludwig Martens had been issued, withdrew this warrant and held up the deportation. Under our laws he has the power to do that. Furthermore, although Martens is the avowed enemy of our country, the avowed representative of Bolshevik Russia, and comes here to spread his damnable doctrines, yet this man Post allowed Martens to go free without bail on the recognizance of his attorney, ex-Senator Hardwick, and he assured Mr. Hardwick that he would take no action without consulting him.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Are we at war with Russia?

Mr. DAVEY. Socially and economically; yes.

Mr. BAER. Commercially; no.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does not the gentleman think it would be a wise thing to remove Mr. Post from his position that he has treated in that manner?

Mr. DAVEY. You start something, gentlemen, and I will be with you on it. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Why do not you start it?

Mr. DAVEY. I do not control the processes of this House. If I were on the Republican side, I would start it mighty quick.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What course of procedure would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. DAVEY. If I could do nothing else, I would impeach him.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman introduce the resolution?

Mr. DAVEY. I am perfectly willing. [Applause.] Another thing, gentlemen. This same man Post has ruled that membership in the I. W. W. is not sufficient evidence for deportation, and there are hundreds of alien enemies of our Government in this country to-day who are here simply because Post has stood between them and deportation. The hand of the Attorney General has been made impotent by that friend of the revolutionists and that enemy of our Government, Louis F. Post.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Gladly.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I agree with the gentleman that Post should be removed; but I want to inquire if he is not an appointive officer, and if it is not in the power of some one else to take action in that case?

Mr. DAVEY. My friend, what is the difference? If some one else fails to act, shall we be excused for failure to do our duty?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am in favor of action. I agree with the gentleman; but I call his attention to the fact that the action should come from some place else.

Mr. DAVEY. My time is going on. One thing more——

Mr. CARSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. CARSS. I would like to ask the gentleman if Mr. Post made a wrong interpretation of the law, why did not Mr. Palmer appeal from his decision?

Mr. DAVEY. To whom? The law gives that department final jurisdiction.

Mr. CARSS. He might have taken it up with the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Was Mr. Post responsible for the 393 being deported from New York at the present time, while 933 have been released?

Mr. DAVEY. Gentlemen, I think I can say with authority that the Attorney General of the United States has tried valiantly to do his duty, but he has been blocked by Mr Post, in the Department of Labor. One thing more. I have it on good authority, gentlemen, that if this man Post had not stood in the way of the Attorney General there would not have been now in this country certain men who are leading this illegal railroad strike. Some of the active leaders of this strike were those who were supposed to be deported, but whose deportation was blocked by this same man in the Department of Labor.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman inform us whether his attack on Mr. Post is inspired by the Attorney General, or is it with the Attorney General's knowledge?

Mr. DAVEY. Not with the Attorney General's knowledge. My attack on Mr. Post comes from my own heart, because I detest the policy he has pursued and I detest his destructive influence. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman has left the impression that he speaks by the authority of the Attorney General, and I wanted to find out if that is so.

Mr. DAVEY. I am no man's echo.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But the gentleman said that he spoke by authority.

Mr. DAVEY. By authority as to the facts.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Authority of the Attorney General? The gentleman left us under that impression, but if that is not correct it is an improper impression.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is not there record evidence of the facts brought against these individuals on file in the Department of Labor?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And can not they be brought out?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Has the gentleman seen the records? The gentleman says that he knows the facts. If the gentleman has, he is worthy of belief and we are willing to take what he says about it.

Mr. DAVEY. The gentleman doubts my word, and I suggest that the answer to the gentleman's question is an investigation.

Mr. SIMS. I ask if the gentleman has himself seen the records?

Mr. DAVEY. I would hardly be prepared to discuss the source of my information.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman is trying the case in a court of appeals without having the record before him.

Mr. DAVEY. The gentleman seems determined to inject into this question a doubt. I am sure the American people will not agree with that suggestion. I believe that every thinking man who has followed the course of this man Post during his recent incumbency condemns him absolutely. The facts are available. You can get them.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know anything about it, but I would like to know the facts, and they should be in an official form so that anybody could see them. If Mr. Post has done what the gentleman says he has, he ought to be removed. The gentleman could impeach the judges of the Supreme Court if he did it without the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. DAVEY. The law which is now needed, and seriously needed, is one which makes it a crime to use or advocate force and violence for the overthrow of this Government. The apostle of this red doctrine, who makes it his business to spread the poison, who incites and fires the gullible dupes of red revolution, is the most guilty and the most dangerous. You have no Federal law to reach him, this teacher of crime and barbarous destruction.

We hear much about the old alien and sedition law of 1798, which, they recite with much satisfaction, put the Federalist Party out of business. That law made criticism of Government and Government officials a crime. It was radically different from the law which we are now demanding. No reasonable man now even wishes for a law against criticism. As a matter of fact, criticism is the powerful force that keeps a democracy pure.

Criticism is not what the red radicals want; criticism is too American. They want the utmost license to preach and finally put into practice the doctrine of force and violence, to destroy and plunder, to wreck the foundation and superstructure of civilization.

The proposed law, in which I am earnestly interested, does not and will not prevent proper or even violent criticism. It is aimed at those who would destroy and who daily preach their damnable doctrine.

Some tell us that we have gotten along for over a hundred years in this country without such a law. Well, what of it? Mankind got along for thousands of years without the air brake. A new condition—great railroad trains—made the air brake an utter necessity. So with many other things. It is the weakest sort of argument to say we have never had such a thing and did not need it in the past. It is significant that most of these who oppose any law on this subject demand that nothing be done to curb the agents of revolution. "Let them talk," they say. Unfortunately most of those who urge complete license for this gang of revolutionists show too much sympathy for them to suit me. It makes me suspicious of their real purpose.

They tell us there are only a few wild radicals and there is nothing serious about it. The facts are that there are many of these avowed enemies of government; that they are persistently active; and that they are eagerly working toward their sworn objective, the overthrow of this Government. A man must be sympathetic toward them or deliberately blind who will not consider the evidence that is so overwhelming.

They tell us these revolutionists can not destroy America. Well, maybe so, probably so, but why take the chance? It does not take many armed men to capture and hold a great city. Law-abiding citizens do not arm. The Bolshevists themselves warn their followers that 50,000 White Guards in Finland held in subjection 3,000,000 people. The red radicals cry out to their followers: "Arm yourselves, prepare for the revolution, make ready for the rule of the proletariat." Are you willing to wait until they actually start the revolution before you wake up and protect your country from those who deliberately seek its destruction?

We are advised to compromise with them, to pat them on the back, and give them part of what they want. The only compromise that is possible is surrender. They say so themselves. "All peace is but an armed truce." You can not compromise with a rattlesnake. You can kill it or run away from it. You can not both inhabit the same spot. They tell us to meet argument with argument. That would be fine if it were confined to argument. You can not argue with a burglar or a highwayman. You can not argue with a murderer. You could not argue with the Kaiser. When a man or group of men set out to rob you or murder you or conquer you, argument is out of order and wholly useless.

Some decry this proposed law as repressive legislation. As a matter of fact, nearly all law is repressive. The laws against murder, against robbery, against immorality, against slander, against libel, against gambling, against speeding—all these and many more are repressive laws. They are necessary, however, and are sanctioned by society. The welfare of society as a whole justifies any law that is necessary to protect society.

Speed laws are an absolute necessity, and yet I might argue that speed laws are repressive; that they invade any individual liberty. Certainly they do, and yet the well-being of society makes them wholly necessary. You could not even afford to repeal the speed laws because they are sometimes abused. Any law, however right its purpose, can be abused. It is one of the weaknesses of human administration. If the peace and protection of society demand the enactment of a law, that is sufficient justification. If we had no lawbreakers, no enemies of society, we would need no laws. Human necessity brings laws into being. New conditions make new laws. If there had never been a murder, there would be no law against murder. If there were no group seeking the destruction of government, you would need no law to protect government and people.

We hear loud cries about free speech and free press. No one believes in these sacred things more than I. Freedom, or, rather, the continuity of freedom, must have free speech and free press, but not wild and unbridled license. We have no such thing in this country as absolute free speech and free press. Witness the laws against slander and libel. These are repressive laws also, but very necessary and wholesome. Many such laws protect society and are sanctioned by society. Sometimes they do not fully protect and sometimes they may be abused, but they are necessary and must remain the protecting arms of civilization.

Of course, we will all admit that in this country, at least, it is wrong to attempt the destruction of government; that it is wrong to murder and wrong to rob. Suppose you had a school maintained for the sole purpose of training murderers and robbers. Suppose it taught the necessity, the advantage, and the art of murder and robbery. Suppose it rapidly gained recruits and continued to train men to commit crime. Would you tolerate it? Not unless you were blind and stupid.

Well, we have just such a school, with many branches, many headquarters, and many followers. It teaches the necessity, the advantage, and the art of destroying our Government. It is an avowed and active enemy of this country and our institutions. It would invade the sanctity of the home, wreck the schools, abolish the church, and banish God and destroy the Government which protects and defends these bulwarks of civilization.

This detestable thing springs from strange and alien hearts. It is animated from alien sources. It is alien in conception and purpose. Many of its agents here are alien. Apparently much of the gold that supports it and drives it is blood-stained gold from alien lands. It is foreign to America in every sense. It is not of America, but it seeks to destroy America.

We welcome the oppressed from every land. We welcome those who seek opportunity. We welcome all who love liberty. High over the gateway of every port of entry there is written this same "Welcome" in large, bold letters. We bid them come among us and take all they can rightfully get of our abundant prosperity; take full part, after a period of probation, in the government of this fair land; partake in fullest measure all the blessings of our institutions.

We bid them partake, but not destroy; accept our hospitality, but not desecrate the house.

Would you think I am an alien hater? No; it can not be. My good old father was an immigrant, who became one of the finest Americans I have ever known. He was born in a land and at a time when public schools were not known. He did not know his A B C's until he was 21, but he yearned for an education and started with a little dictionary and a copy of the New Testament to acquire the fundamentals. By the slow and painful process of self-teaching, he picked out one word and then another. He showed me one time that same copy of the New Testament on which was a brown spot where a drop of milk had fallen as he studied while he milked. Then came the impelling desire to come to America, this great land of freedom and opportunity. And as a young man of about 27 he landed at Castle Garden. Here in America he continued his studies, working by day and attending school at night, going on into Latin and Greek and finally acquiring an education that would do credit to the average college graduate.

But, above all, he learned to love America. At the earliest opportunity he became a full citizen. He told me once of that sacred time when he raised his right hand and took the oath of allegiance. His eyes filled with tears at the inspiring thought. He learned every word of the Declaration of Independence and every word of the Constitution. He learned every word of America and the Star-Spangled Banner, and until old age laid her heavy hand upon him he could sing them with a zeal and fervor that was wonderful to see. From the cradle up I have seen him every time he passed Old Glory lift his hat in veneration.

No; I can not be an alien hater. It is only to protect this country that he loves and taught me to love that I want a proper law that will strike a vigorous and effective blow at the ungracious and determined enemies of our great Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, at a time like this, when our Nation is facing a great crisis, it is very easy to misconstrue what a Member of Congress might have to say. Some mention has been made here to-day of the great railroad strike, which already has brought a great deal of misery, want, and suffering to the American people. At the very outset I desire to say that I deplore this strike. It never ought to have been called, and there is no question in my mind but that the strike was instigated by a certain radical element in the northwest part of our country. Too much praise can not be given to the officials of the five railroad brotherhoods for denouncing this strike and pleading with the men of the various railway unions to go back to work. [Applause.] I believe that their attitude in this matter has shown to the American people that they are true, loyal, patriotic American citizens. However, I think some misunderstanding exists throughout the length and breadth of our land relative to the wages of the railroad employees. We must bear in mind that this present strike is not one of the passenger trainmen or of the freight trainmen. This strike originated in what is known as the yard service, among the switchmen. Six months ago I issued a warning that the patience of the railroad men was about at an end, and again during the consideration of the conference report in the Esch-Cummins bill I made a plea for an increase in wages for these workingmen.

What are the actual conditions relative to the wages of the yardmen, the switchmen, who work upon the American railways? One of the Members of Congress, in talking to me on this question a short time ago, said: "I know an engineer that runs between Washington and Philadelphia who makes $175 every two weeks."

That may be so. There are a few of those preferred runs, where the engineer, who is the highest paid man in the railroad service, receives such a wage. It should be borne in mind that no matter whether it be in the passenger, the freight, or the yard service, the locomotive engineer is the highest paid man on the crew. There may be runs that pay as much as this man said, between here and Philadelphia and between Philadelphia and New York, but they are preferred runs, and there are but few of the railroad engineers that make that much money. What is the schedule of wages for the switchmen, the yardmen, now on strike throughout our country? As I said a moment ago, the engineer is the highest paid man in the service. What does the engineer in the yard service make? He makes 70 cents an hour. Figure it up yourself, at eight hours a day, and you find that it amounts to $5.60. What are the wages of a conductor in the yard service? He makes $5.45 and the switchman makes $5.11 a day. The switch tender makes $4 and the fireman $4.16 per day. I want to say that they are paying common labor all over this country more wages than they are paying skilled railroad employees at this time.

Let us take the case of the switchman who makes $5.11 a day, who works, we will say, 30 days a month. He makes in that event only about $150. Suppose he takes two days' rest during the month, which he ought to have, for no man ought to have to work 30 days out of every month. If he takes the two days of rest, then his monthly wage is cut down to about $140. You all know as well as I do that no American can live decently to-day in a respectable neighborhood unless he pays from $35 to $40 a month rent. Let us say that he has a family of four—three children and a wife. If he pays $40 a month rent for a house, he then has left $100 to carry that family over for the month. I have some sympathy with their demand for an increase in wages. I wanted to make this explanation because I know that there is a misunderstanding relative to the wages of the railroad employees. This schedule of wages which I have just given to the House was fixed in General Order No. 27 by the wage-adjusting board of the Railroad Administration during Federal control and there has been no change in same since the roads were returned to the private owners, March 1, 1920.

But, as I said in the beginning, I deplore this strike. There is no question in my mind but what it was started by radicals, but by reason of unsatisfactory conditions, by the poor wages that the railroad men are receiving, it only needed a spark to touch the powder keg, and it went like a house afire. But I with you men hope and pray that something can be done in the near future that will bring a speedy end to this strike, which is bringing so much misery and disaster to this country. The gentleman from Ohio made the statement that he thought the "one big union" was back of this movement. I received a telegram only yesterday from 3,500 switchmen in my home city of Youngstown, Ohio, denying that the "one big union" was back of this strike; that they wanted to remain loyal to their organizations, and they were ready to meet the representatives of the railroad managers any time they could get an audience with them. [Applause.] I have too much confidence in the patriotism of the American railway employees to believe that they will be led or influenced by the I. W. W.'s of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I have some feeling on this question. For 17 years before I came to Congress I associated with the railroad men, working with them as a locomotive fireman and engineer on the Pennsylvania Railroad. And while I have no authority to speak for the railroad brotherhoods I desire to say that from the time I commenced work as a railroad employee, up to this day, I have been proud of the fact that my name is recorded as being a member in good standing in one of the brotherhood organizations. And I also believe that if the President of the United States had taken the interest that he should have taken in this matter and used the power granted him in the Cummins-Esch bill, the power to appoint a labor board, which was passed by the House and Senate more than six weeks ago—if he had appointed this board at once so that the wage questions of railroad employees could have been considered, I say if the President had done this then this strike could have been averted, and we would not have had the wheels of transportation tied up in our country to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.] But, no; the President of the United States had to wait until the crisis came before he appointed this board, which gave him the power by law to settle these labor disputes as far as railway employees are concerned. Then again there is another thing I want to touch on just a moment——

Mr. CARSS. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. COOPER. I have only 10 minutes. If I have time later, I will be glad to yield. It has been prominently mentioned in the papers that the Plumb Plan League is back of this strike. I do not believe that. I do not believe that the Plumb Plan League had anything to do with this strike, but I do believe that this official organ of the Plumb Plan League, printed and published here in Washington, managed by a former Member of Congress who has been drawing $7,500 a year from the Government of the United States at least part of the time he was managing this paper called "Labor"—I do believe that this paper has done more to poison the minds and hearts of the railroad men than anything else that has been done in this country in the last year. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. KAHN. I yield those six minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio is extended for six minutes.

Mr. COOPER. The name of this publication is "Labor." You have all read it. For weeks this paper has been picturing the American Congress as the enemy of railroad employees and the special friend of the railway owners and big interests. This paper makes a bitter attack upon every Member of Congress who voted for the Cummins-Esch bill; and no less a person than Mr. Plumb, the author of the Plumb plan, is now campaigning across the country advocating the defeat of every Member of this body who would not submit to his way of thinking and support the Plumb plan for the operation of our transportation systems. But I thank God that regardless of the threats of Mr. Plumb and the official organ of the league, that 250 Members of this House had the courage of their honest convictions and cast their vote in a way which they believed would be for the best interests of all the American people. I trust the day will never come when the American Congress will yield to the threats of any class, whether it be labor or capital. Now, I know what I am going to get from the Plumb Plan League because I am making this statement here to-day, but I have never smothered my convictions on any great question in order to stay in public life, and I am going to express myself as to what I think about this paper. [Applause.] I have here a copy of this paper. You see headline after headline which reads, "Defeat every Member of Congress who voted for the railroad bill." No matter how friendly he may have been to labor in the past, if he voted for the railroad bill he is an enemy of labor and the tool of Wall Street.

This paper is being sent into the districts of Congressmen who have always been friendly to labor during their service in this House, Members who have supported labor's cause every time legislation has been considered which was for their benefit. I say that this paper is now going into the districts of these men and asking for their defeat for reelection, because they had the courage to vote their convictions on the railroad bill.

Then they even go so far as to say—if not in direct words, by inference—that we got our price, that we were paid by Wall Street to vote for this railroad bill. They are attacking the labor provisions of the railroad bill. There is not a thing in the labor section but what gives labor the same rights and privileges that it has had in the past. [Applause.] There is no antistrike clause in the law, and they know there is not. If a question of dispute goes to the Railway Labor Board they agree in regard to the question of wages or conditions, there is nothing compulsory in their findings. The railroad employees can either accept or reject the decision of the board, and there is no provision in the law that will stop the railroad employees from going on strike if they so desire. They condemn us because we refused to vote for recommitting the conference report. They have said it would have given an opportunity to strike out the antistrike section and other obnoxious features. There was not a thing in the motion to recommit which would have given them an opportunity to do that any more than it would have given them an opportunity to put in an antistrike provision. It was a straight motion to recommit, and the gentleman from Kentucky, who made the motion to recommit, and 22 others who voted for the motion to recommit, all voted against the Anderson amendment, which prohibited the antistrike provision in the railroad bill. [Applause.]

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], Democratic floor leader, spoke in favor of the motion to recommit, and from his own words you can understand his reasons for doing so. He said:

> In my judgment the arbitrary, the dictatorial, and defiant attitude of Mr. Gompers and a few other labor leaders has lost to the opposition of this report at least a dozen or more gentlemen who otherwise would have voted against it.
> I did not vote for the Anderson amendment in the Esch bill because it was an arbitrary, one-sided, labor-leader-made, futile amendment. I prefer the labor proposition in the report to that.
> I would go much further than the labor-dispute provisions in the report if I had my way about it. I must confess that I can not understand how and why the labor leaders object or can object to the proposition in the report. It is as harmless as it can possibly be. It is not binding on any. It takes away no right, not even any of the assumed rights of labor or of the labor leaders.

These men have a clear sheet as far as the Plumb plan advocates are concerned, but the Members of this House who have been loyal to labor and have supported them and spoken for them here on the floor of this House, they are now condemned as grafters and as the tools of Wall Street and as bowing to the big interests because they voted for the railroad bill.

They say that we guaranteed 5½ per cent on watered stock. Why, there is not a thing in that bill that guarantees one penny to the railroads except for the first six months, and during that period the law guarantees to them the same return that the Government guaranteed during governmental control. After that the law establishes a rule of rate making which permits the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix a rate which will give to the railroads a return of 5½ per cent. On what? On the value of their property as the value is fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, not by the railroad company.

And if the Interstate Commerce Commission follows out the law in the rule of rate making as it is written in the Cummins-Esch bill it will be impossible for the railroad owners to receive any revenue on watered stocks. A few days ago the representatives of the railroad-security owners appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission and argued that the commission, in fixing the rates, should take the book value of the roads as a basis. The law says that the commission shall take into consideration that part of the railroad property that is used for transportation purposes as a basis for fixing rates. And the advocates of the Plumb plan know that the law has this provision, for on the same day that the representatives of the railroad-security owners appeared before the commission Mr. Donald R. Richberg, representing the Plumb Plan League and speaking in place of Mr. Plumb, appeared before the commission and argued that the Cummins-Esch law would not permit a return of revenue to the railroads on watered stock. It is strange, indeed, that a representative of the Plumb Plan League should make this statement before the commission when every issue of their paper states that the Cummins-Esch bill guarantees 5½ per cent on watered stock.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I have only another minute. There is another matter to which I want to call the attention of the House. It is a disagreeable task for me to do, but I feel moved to do it.

The Plumb Plan League paper has been running a series of cartoons which picture Members of Congress as bowing to Wall Street, as getting their price, as the enemies of labor, tying the laboring man to the railroad tracks and letting a train come along and crush him.

I am very sorry, indeed, that one of the Members of this body has seen fit to use his talent in this way. He seems to take great pride in the fact that he is the author of these cartoons. Above every one of these cartoons that have been published in the official organ of the Plumb Plan League you will find this notice: "Drawn for Labor by Congressman J. M. BAER." Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from North Dakota that if I believed as he does, that the 250 Members of this body who voted for the Cummins-Esch bill, and President Wilson, who signed it, are as corrupt and as unclean as he represents them to be in the cartoons he is drawing for the Plumb plan organ—I say, if I believed as he does, I would resign my seat to-day, as I would not want to contaminate myself in such company. [Loud and long applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I presume I can not get personal privilege in committee, can I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can probably get time under the five-minute rule. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECRETARY OF WAR.

CONTINGENCIES OF THE ARMY.

For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., or in the Army at large, but impossible to be anticipated or classified; to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, including the payment of a per diem allowance not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence, to employees of the War Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts, $150,000: Provided, That the restrictions herein above recited concerning personal services and the amount allowable for per diem allowance shall not apply to so much of the funds herein appropriated as may be required to carry out the purpose of existing laws relating to the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims: Provided further, That not to exceed $100,000 of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the payment of salaries of civilian employees connected with the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims: And provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act shall be used for the payment of any salary in excess of $12,000 per annum to any civilian employee in the War Department.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the portion of this section commencing with the word "Provided," in line 16, and ending with the word "claims," in line 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order. The purpose of the provision is to save money for the Government. The amount that was asked for by the War Department for the contingencies of the Army for this coming fiscal year was $700,000. The committee has reduced that amount in the bill to $150,000. Fifty thousand dollars is to be expended for contingencies in the Army, $50,000 is to be expended by the Bureau of the Director of Sales, and $50,000 is to be expended by the various adjustment boards that are trying to clean up the contracts growing out of the war. This proviso will allow that money to be expended practically in the manner I have indicated and will prevent the use of other funds from other sections of the bill for paying civilian salaries in these two civilian branches of the War Department.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to save some money to the Government by making this point of order, and I desire very briefly to state how. The gentleman from California has stated one of the purposes for which this money is desired. I will endeavor to point out another purpose. It is for the purpose, first, of absolutely nullifying a portion of this section, which says:

Including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C.

And it is for the further purpose of permitting them to expend without any restriction any amount of money they may see fit for per diem expenses. It is for the further purpose, as stated by the gentleman, of paying the war board for settling war claims. And I wish to call the attention of the House particularly to the composition of this war-claims board. They have got 30 or 40 men to whom they are paying salaries all the way from $4,500 to $17,000 a year, some of whom have admitted, and admitted before one of the committees of this House, that they never earned $3,000 a year in their lives before they got this employment. The man who is the vice chairman of this board for the settlement of these claims, who is getting $1,000 a month, admitted that he never earned $3,000 in his life before he got this position. So I say that I am making this point of order for the purpose of saving money to the United States and not permitting it to be squandered, as it is being squandered, in this department.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of learning from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, as to this appropriation of $150,000, with reference to whether anything was carried in other appropriation bills for the same amount. What was carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think anything was carried for the contingencies of the Army. This item of contingencies in the Army has been carried in the military appropriation bills for many years. Of course, during the war, or immediately after the war, I should say, the War Department undertook to establish two civilian bureaus in the Army for the purpose of settling up war contracts and for the purpose of selling surplus military supplies. That is the only new proposition contained in this item, and I do not believe it is appropriated for in any other bill.

Mr. GARD. I have a recollection that in the bill I refer to there was carried an appropriation of $50,000. Of course, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has more accurate information of that than I have.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not remember just exactly the amount, but my impression is that it was $250,000. I wish to call attention to the fact that this appropriation bill up to 1917 never carried more than $50,000 for contingent expenses.

Mr. GARD. What I am led to observe in making this inquiry is that here and there in appropriation bills there seems to be a very ingenious method of dovetailing in and out, so that an additional appropriation is granted in one bill and granted in another bill, and the language is varied a little so as to give another bill jurisdiction. My recollecton is—and I am supported by the gentleman—that practically the same item of $50,000 is carried in another bill, and if it be so—and I submit it for the information of the gentleman from California—is it necessary to carry this $150,000 now in this bill?

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that for many years the members of the Committee on Military Affairs have found fault with the attitude of some of the officials in the War Department who go from one committee to another trying to get appropriations for the same thing. I think it is a pernicious custom and it ought to be dispensed with without delay. But the Committee on Military Affairs in the last Congress was asked to appropriate $900,000 for these civilian organizations connected with the War Department and that are trying to close up war work.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly; I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. DENT. Just for a suggestion. I feel perfectly sure, although I have not read the bill recently, that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill does not carry any item for contingencies of the Army. If it is carried in any bill at all, it was always in a deficiency bill coming after the Army appropriation bill. But the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill does carry a provision for the payment of employees in the District of Columbia. But this is a special employment due to the outgrowth of the war.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly. I am quite sure that this item is not carried in any other bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is carried for contingent expenses of the War Department, for all the bureaus, in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, the sum of $250,000.

Mr. GARD. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. That is not contingencies for the Army. The legislative, executive, and judicial bill carries the pay for the clerks in the War Department and other employees in the War Department here in Washington.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And also for the per diem expenses and subsistence allowances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. But the Committee on Military Affairs appropriates for the employees of the War Department under the General Staff, and the legislative, executive, and judicial bill never has carried any appropriations for that purpose. These civilian employees who are now finishing up the war work are operating under the General Staff of the Army.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I simply want to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana, who so ably and industriously represents the Committee on Appropriations whenever the Army appropriation bill comes out, if he will surrender to the Committee on Military Affairs that adjunct to the Army affairs which the Committee on Appropriations still retains, there would be no danger of duplication of items. They would then all be passed upon by ourselves at one table.

Mr. GARD. I want to eliminate if I can duplications wherever they are apparent.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is the hope of the Committee on Military Affairs, but our friends on the Committee on Appropriations, having a quasi jurisdiction over certain matters military by the back door for appropriations of a kind that we can not control, come in here and claim that there is duplication.

Mr. GARD. Without referring to the matter in controversy between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs, I claim the right to ask for information about these matters.

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman performs a good service to the House by asking these questions.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I desire to say in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] in reference to the action of the Committee on Appropriations, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is for the specific purpose of making appropriations to pay the clerical expenses of the War Department and all other departments except the Department of Agriculture in the District of Columbia. Appropriations for these purposes are gotten through the legislative, executive, and judicial bill through the front door. What they fail to get there they attempt to get through the back door of the Committee on Military Affairs. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state further what the jurisdiction of his committee is? Under the so-called fortifications appropriation bill you propose to provide equipment for the armed forces. There is the back door.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I criticize just as much as the gentleman from Vermont does the nefarious practice of permitting these various bureaus, when failing to get what they want before one of these committees, going immediately somewhere else and getting what they want. You will find three or four other items in this bill where, in violation of the law prescribed in the legislative bill, and in defiance of it, they have sought and obtained through this Committee on Military Affairs appropriations that were denied them because they could not make before the Committee on Appropriations a showing that they were entitled to receive them. And that is not all. There is a bill now pending, the naval appropriation bill, which passed this House a few days ago and went over on the other side, and in the committee over there they have added $450,000 for clerical work to help keep up this establishment in the city of Washington that is about as necessary as a cat with five tails. I am deprecating and will continue to oppose, as far as it is possible for me to do it, this constant overlapping and duplication that is resulting in the waste of millions of money to the United States every year.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. This example simply confirms the necessity for a budget system, does it not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely; and there ought to be some system whereby the appropriation for clerical forces and all the other expenses of these various bureaus should be obtained through one committee. If it is not done so, how are you to keep track of what these bureaus are costing the Government? There is no possible way of finding out or ascertaining or keeping tab on the expenditures of these various bureaus unless there is some centralized body that has supervision over their entire appropriations and their expenditures.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not the gentleman from Indiana think that it would safeguard the situation somewhat when people come before the Committee on Appropriations asking for money for military purposes if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or some member thereof would take the matter up with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and ascertain whether or not it was a proper claim?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that is correct, and there ought to be that correlation instead of this seeming jealousy about jurisdiction. Likewise it might be said that before the Committee on Military Affairs undertook to put an appropriation through for clerical force in their Army bill they ought to come and consult with the Committee on Appropriations, which has jurisdiction over appropriations for clerical force.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this last statement that the gentleman from Indiana has made about the clerical force is gratuitous. The Committee on Military Affairs has never assumed to appropriate for any clerks or messengers or laborers except those connected with the General Staff of the Army. I have been on the Committee on Military Affairs for about 15 years, and that committee has always had jurisdiction over those clerks and employees. It does not assume jurisdiction over any other clerks except that it has also had jurisdiction over the clerks that are attached to the Military Establishment at division or department headquarters of the Army throughout the country.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. We have appropriated for those clerks. But over the clerks in the War Department here we have never assumed jurisdiction.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You say you are making no appropriations for clerical force. I invite your attention to page 7, to the item appropriating $800,000 for clerical force.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman seems to have missed altogether what I said. We do appropriate for the clerical force connected with the General Staff and the various departments and branches of the Army scattered throughout the country, and we have always had jurisdiction over that matter.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is evidently mistaken as to what I called his attention to, because in addition to the appropriation you make generally for your clerical force, you are appropriating $800,000 for the Adjutant General's office that you do not generally appropriate for.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is mistaken. That $800,000 is in the nature of a reappropriation, remaining over from the $3,500,000 appropriated last year for the purpose of making proper lists of the soldiers who participated in the World War and turning over those lists to the various States of the Union at the request of the adjutants general of those States.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to call attention, in view of the statement made by the gentleman, to the fact that The Adjutant General, in coming before the legislative committee for this very purpose, asked for only $2,000,000. The legislative bill gives him $1,800,000. Now you are giving him $800,000 more, or $2,600,000, or $600,000 more than he ever made any specification for.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman had come to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and told him about this request, we might have reached some understanding or agreement; but the fact remains that a year ago we put into the military appropriation bill an item for $3,500,000. There was a general demand throughout the country, from practically all the States, that lists of the soldiers from those States be furnished to the adjutants general of those States, in order that they might have a record of what their sons had accomplished in this war. That item was carried in the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. The Adjutant General appeared before our committee and stated that he had not completed his work, that it would require some little time to finish it. He did not ask for an additional appropriation. He simply asked that the balance remaining from the former appropriation be reappropriated. When we asked how much that balance would be, he said there would be about $800,000 remaining of the fund of $3,500,000 on the 1st of July next.

Now, there is no desire on the part of members of the Committee on Military Affairs to assume jurisdiction over matters that do not belong to them. Only a few days ago one of the Army officers came to the Committee on Military Affairs and spoke of aeroplanes for the fortifications. I stated that I believed that was a matter that ought to be taken up with the Appropriations Committee. I wonder if any member of the Appropriations Committee ever told an Army officer that some military item submitted to that committee ought to be taken up with the Committee on Military Affairs?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the first proviso has been stricken out, and the second proviso commences with the language "Provided further."

Mr. KAHN. I move that that be amended by striking out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KAHN: Page 2, line 23, after the word "Provided," strike out the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. On page 3, in line 1, I move to strike out the word "And."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KAHN: Page 3, line 1, after the colon, strike out the word "And."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it seems that the amendment is not necessary. It follows along in proper sequence, as I view it, because when you have stricken out the first proviso then you have the words "Provided further," and then, on line 1, page 3, you have "And provided further."

Mr. KAHN. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the first proviso was stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. GARD. I understand that. I said it seemed to me that the word "and" ought to remain in here. But that is very immaterial.

The point about which I wish to ask is that for those of us who are not of the elect, who are of the uninitiated in the line of appropriation bills, it is difficult to understand from the language in lines 2 to 4 just who down in the War Department are getting salaries in excess of $12,000 per annum.

It says here in lines 1 to 4:

That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act shall be used for the payment of any salary in excess of $12,000 per annum to any civilian employee in the War Department.

Can the gentleman advise us how many of these civilian employees there are?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know how many there are, but I will tell the gentleman the history of that. Somewhat over a year ago the Secretary of War appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs and told us that it was necessary to have a civilian employee of acknowledged ability who was familiar with the mercantile world to become Director of Sales; he said that in order to get the right kind of an employee a salary of $25,000 a year would have to be paid. He brought to the Military Affairs Committee the gentleman whom he had selected for the position, Mr. Hare, of Philadelphia.

The members of the committee felt that it would be rather anomalous to have a civilian employee in the War Department functioning therein who was paid twice the salary of the Secretary of War; and as the salary of the Secretary of War is $12,000 a year, it was deemed advisable to put in a proviso that no civilian employee in the War Department should get more than the Secretary of War receives.

Mr. GARD. That prescribes the salary to be paid to Mr. Hare?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask that the gentleman be given two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from California be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Does that apply to the gentleman to whom the chairman of the committee has referred, Mr. Hare?

Mr. KAHN. No; Mr. Hare resigned.

Mr. GARD. What I particularly want to know from the chairman of the committee, or any other member of the committee, was how many of these $12,000 men there are?

Mr. KAHN. There was only one that I knew of. Mr. Hare evidently was not satisfied that $12,000 was sufficient, and he resigned. Mr. Morse has taken his place and is now the Director of Sales.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the statement on page 10 of the hearings before our committee, where he will find the names of the various officers, and he will find that several of them are drawing $50 a day—lawyers—and one, I think, perhaps as high as $75 a day. Those are the gentlemen we are driving at.

Mr. KAHN. They are the gentlemen who are connected with the boards for the closing up of the war contracts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the $3,500,000, reappropriated in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, approved July 11, 1919, for the completion, preservation, and transportation of the records pertaining to the draft under the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, including the employment of the necessary clerical and other help for duty in the office of The Adjutant General of the Army in connection with the arrangement, operation, and maintenance of the files of those records and for the employment of clerical help required to furnish to the adjutants general of the several States statements of service of all persons from those States who entered the military service during the war with Germany, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1921, for all expenses, including the employment of clerical and other help in the office of The Adjutant General of the Army, necessary for the completion and preservation of the selective-service records and the completion of the work of furnishing statements of service to adjutants general of States: Provided, That this appropriation shall be disbursed by such officer as may be designated by the Secretary of War for the purpose.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to this clause.

The CHAIRMAN. To what portion of the paragraph?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To all of that portion that provides for the employment of clerks in the Adjutant General's Office for the purpose of preparing statements of service of the persons in the different States who entered the military service in the war with Germany.

The CHAIRMAN. Commencing on line 8, page 7, after the word "record," down to and including the word "Germany," on line 12?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this entire item was carried in the appropriation bill a year ago.

The clerical force for carrying out this work was provided for in that law. This is simply a continuation of the unexpended balance of that appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Even if it was in the bill of a year ago, that would not make it in order now.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair inquire so as to understand the point of the gentleman from Indiana. The point of the gentleman is not that it is not authorized by law but as being within the jurisdiction of the committee. The point is that it being for clerical help, it should fall under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and be a part of the legislative bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. On that point the Chair would like to hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this entire matter was brought to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs a year ago. Many Members of the House at that time were exceedingly anxious to have these records furnished for their respective States. The committee included the item which provided, among other things, for the hiring of the necessary clerks to do the work. I submit that this is simply a continuation of that work which was authorized in the last Army bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Has the Committee on Appropriations taken care of this matter by making an appropriation heretofore?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and I wish to call the attention of the committee to the situation. It is not the purpose or desire of anyone connected with the Committee on Appropriations to cripple this work. Let me call attention to the fact that the estimates of the War Department only asked for $1,345,000 for this service, and we appropriated $1,850,000 for the service. The Adjutant General at that time said that it was problematical, but he estimated that it would take $2,094,000, and we gave him $1,850,000. So if this item was germane and should be allowed, you are giving The Adjutant General $600,000 beyond his fondest dreams. In the opinion of The Adjutant General's office, they believe they can get through with the amount already appropriated. I think it is bad policy, even if it was proper, to give them an appropriation that they do not need to do the work specified.

Mr. McKENZIE. In what bill was that item?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In the legislative bill just passed. The gentleman from California, if he had been present at the time the bill was considered, would have discovered, and if he will read it now he will see that out of the lump-sum appropriation of $2,500,000 for the War Department $1,850,000 of that sum was for The Adjutant General's office for this specific purpose.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman know that the Committee on Military Affairs in the last year's bill had already appropriated $3,500,000 for that work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Let me call the gentleman's attention to what The Adjutant General said about that. He said:

> The estimates for the office were revised by a War Department board convened for the purpose of considering the financial needs of the various bureaus of the department. That board allotted to this office $1,345,000 for the additional roll on the assumption that $750,000 of the $3,500,000 appropriated for the care and custody of the selective-service records and for the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutants general of States would be made available for the payment of salaries of the additional roll during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. This sum will not be available for that purpose.

That is the reason he gave to us, and that is the reason for the Appropriation Committee giving him $1,800,000 for this service. If we had had any idea that he was anticipating going to the Military Committee for this same purpose, our action would have been different.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman another question—if the point of order is sustained, whether the entire amount carried in this appropriation bill will then be made available to be used on the questionnaires that are down there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is a part of this service.

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, no; they are two different propositions.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There are two services—one was the service to be rendered the War Risk Bureau and to the finance department of the War Department furnishing data for the purpose of straightening out the accounts of the soldier boys. The other was for the purpose of furnishing the lists to the various adjutants general throughout the United States. For these two services The Adjutant General said it would take $2,094,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will read the appropriation, he will see that it is for two purposes: First, to take care of the military record of the soldiers, which is a very proper thing to do, and to furnish copies to the adjutants general of the various States. The second proposition was to furnish clerks to take care of the questionnaires that were sent here by the train load to be taken care of by the Federal Government.

What I want to know from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is whether or not, if his point of order is sustained, and nothing further done, the entire amount that is left in this appropriation will be available to be expended by employing clerks to take care of the questionnaires, and whether the appropriation will thereby be increased for doing the other work.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no mistake about that, I make the point of order to the portion of this measure that the gentleman has called my attention to, with reference to the questionnaire, which is as clearly out of order as the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ascertain to what language the gentleman extends his point of order. Does the point of order extend to the remainder of the paragraph?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Commencing with the word "and" in line 8, and extending to the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is the idea.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that if he makes the point of order beginning with line 8 on page 7, why not, in the interest of good legislation, make the point of order likewise against the language beginning on lines 22 and 23—against the entire paragraph, in fact; because if you leave the language on lines 22 and 23, and so forth, down to the record on line 8, it does not mean anything—it is not sense.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only fear that I have in my mind is that the two or three things mentioned before possibly might have been in order, but I will admit that if this is taken out there is not much left of it.

Mr. GARD. What I am trying to say is that there is no necessity for the appropriation of an unexpended balance of $3,500,000, because it does not apply to anything, if the gentleman's point of order is sustained.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana, and to the gentleman from California, that the average Member of this House has no special interest at all in the controversy between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs, but it does occur to me that the result of this situation is going to be to deprive the people of the country of that which they are looking forward to, viz, the preservation of the records of the soldiers of the Great War, both in the Government at Washington and in the States of the Union, so that hereafter in years to come these records may be available. We ought not to be crippled by a controversy between these committees.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me while I read a letter from the Secretary of War on this subject?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. The letter is as follows:

> WAR DEPARTMENT,
> Washington, March 26, 1920.
> Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
> Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
> House of Representatives.
>
> MY DEAR MR. KAHN: I beg leave to invite your attention to a matter that I believe should be considered in connection with the pending Army appropriation bill. I refer to the appropriation of $3,500,000 for the purpose of caring for the draft records and the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutants general of States.
> I respectfully request that the unexpended balance of that appropriation be made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, as otherwise it will be impossible to complete the statements of service for the adjutants general of the States, or to conduct satisfactorily the work connected with the draft records.
> The Adjutant General will, if you so desire, appear before your committee and explain in detail his needs in this connection.
> Trusting that you will give this matter your favorable consideration and that The Adjutant General will be permitted to appear before your committee, when he will furnish you with the details you may desire, I am,
> Cordially, yours, NEWTON D. BAKER,
> Secretary of War.

In accordance with the request of the Secretary, The Adjutant General did appear before the committee and testified that it was absolutely necessary, in order to have these records, that this unexpended balance be appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is any of this money to be used for constructing fireproof buildings?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. WALSH. Are the records to be still kept in these fire traps where they were first stored when they were brought here to Washington?

Mr. KAHN. I understand that the records are kept in the brick buildings at Washington Barracks, near the Potomac.

Mr. WALSH. Then they have been moved from these various buildings where they were scattered.

Mr. KAHN. I understand so. I understand that they are in those brick buildings down there. One of the reasons given for wanting to create an engineer school at Camp A. A. Humphreys was because those buildings at Washington Barracks were utilized for these records.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is manifest that the Committee on Military Affairs took original jurisdiction of this provision and apparently with the assent, if not the definite consent, of the Committee on Appropriations. At least that committee made no protest. We initiated the legislation and carried it heretofore. How can you reenter, having once withheld your jurisdiction? Suppose we play both ends against the middle here, and each, thinking the other is going to take care of it, did nothing, what state is legislation to be in? If jurisdiction once assumed is not continued to the finish, we would find ourselves in a state of chaos. I would like to suggest to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations, having waived its jurisdiction, it is estopped from reentering upon it when action has begun.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The logic of the gentleman from Vermont is all right as far as it goes, but it does not go far. If the point of order were not raised against this item in a former military-affairs bill, it does not give a right, as a precedent, for a repetition of it. The point of order is just as germane at any subsequent violation of the rule as it would have been originally. I want to say, in answer to the gentleman from California, that there is no purpose, and I wish to impress this upon the gentleman, of the Appropriations Committee to interfere in the least in getting out these records and the statement to the Military Committee by the Secretary of War is in direct conflict with the necessities of this department as shown by The Adjutant General himself when he came before our committee and complained that the War Department was not giving him enough of this money, and when he only asked the total of $2,094,000 we gave him the amount we felt he could use for the fiscal year, $1,850,000, which is within less than $250,000 of the amount he said he needed to complete the entire work. So in answer to the gentleman from Texas this bureau is not going to be crippled at all, but we are opening the door by this proposal for an extra expenditure of $850,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. But the legislative bill has not yet become a law?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is in the conference committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he does not believe, in the interest of orderly procedure and proper jurisdiction of the committee, that the thing to do is to put this appropriation where it belongs, on the military appropriation bill, and strike it out in conference from the legislative bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that would be impossible, for the conference has been had and the report agreed to and signed.

Mr. McKENZIE. But it has not yet been brought in.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It has not been brought in; no. It is a question of jurisdiction. However, I am not technical about the question of jurisdiction, but it is for clerical service in the District of Columbia, and that jurisdiction belongs to the legislative committee.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understood the gentleman to reply to the Chairman that the point of order was that it was not within the jurisdiction of this committee, and I was wondering if he meant to make the point of order or rather that it was legislation upon this appropriation bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, it is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and it is not proper legislation.

Mr. McKEOWN. I was wondering if the gentleman could raise the point of order on the paragraph after the bill is in that it is not within the jurisdiction——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The propositions involved in the point of order are very simple, and when resolved down to fundamentals raises the question as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs as to two items. Those two items are one for clerical help for a certain specified purpose, and the other item for clerical and other help for a certain specified purpose. Within the District of Columbia matters affecting employees of all the various departments of the Government are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is evident there now remains in this bill, as far as I understand the ruling of the Chair, unless the Chair has ruled that the entire paragraph goes out——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman extended the point of order, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Ohio, against the language in line 8, commencing with the word "and," and that strikes out under the rule the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. GARD. In moving to strike out the last word, what I desired was to call to the attention of the gentleman from Indiana that on that point of order he is seeking to accomplish some saving, I have no doubt. It accomplishes nothing, because it still continues to appropriate an unexpended balance of $3,500,000. Now, the argument advanced by the gentleman from Indiana was that the Committee on Appropriations in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill had carried, I believe, $1,850,000 for the same purpose, so that if that be true, why is it necessary to carry the unexpended balance of $3,500,000? It seems to me that that is a bad way to appropriate, anyhow, an unexpended balance that is of an unknown quantity, and inasmuch as this part has been stricken out on the point of order, it seems to me, in the interest of good legislation, that something should be done with the other, because it certainly should not be the rule to appropriate unexpended balances without any purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Indiana if he does not believe he would be justified in withholding the point of order, commencing in line 12 with the word "is," where it reads, "is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1921 for all expenses," and so forth?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not see that that would help any. I think the proper thing to do would be for the chairman to move to strike out the rest of it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to take the responsibility at this time of stopping the work of preparing these lists, and I therefore will not move to strike out the other language.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all the remaining portion of this clause, commencing on line 19, page 6. I move to strike out the remainder of the paragraph. That will cover it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 6, line 19, strike out all of lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and on page 7 all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, up to and including the word "records."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not, after having heard the explanation of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that if this motion prevails and this paragraph is stricken out, he believes there is sufficient appropriation in the legislative bill to carry on this work?

Mr. KAHN. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I do not know. I simply know that the Secretary of War wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in which he said that in order to carry on this work it was necessary to have the unexpended balance of $3,500,000 reappropriated.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to vote for a duplication of this work. There seems to be some uncertainty about it. I know the States are very much interested in having these records completed. At least, I know that my State is. I was wondering, after what has been said and the uncertainty that surrounds it, whether or not it would be well for the chairman of the committee to ask that this paragraph go over until to-morrow until the matter can be more thoroughly investigated?

Mr. KAHN. I will say furthermore that the letter of the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is dated March 26, only a few days ago.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the chairman of the committee know that the attention of the Secretary of War was called to this item in the legislative bill?

Mr. KAHN. I imagine the War Department gets a copy of every appropriation bill hot off the press. I have no objection to submitting a unanimous-consent request that the matter be allowed to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not want to vote for it twice. I want to vote for it once.

Mr. KAHN. I am just stating to my friend from Oklahoma that on the 26th of March, long after the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill had passed this House, the Secretary of War wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, saying that the appropriation of the unexpended balance was necessary.

Mr. HASTINGS. And that letter indicates that the Secretary of War was not advised of this other appropriation?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think it does indicate anything of the kind. But I am willing, for the sake of saving time, to ask unanimous consent that this entire matter be allowed to go over until to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is pending. Does the gentleman ask that the matter be carried over under its present status?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will wait for a minute. Clearly the Secretary of War was not advised of this situation. Evidently The Adjutant General knows more about his necessities than the Secretary of War seems to know. The Adjutant General, according to his testimony—I am not giving you my word for it—said $2,094,970 was the amount that would be necessary to complete this work. The War Department had only allotted to him $1,345,000 for it. The legislative committee gave him five hundred thousand and some odd dollars more than the War Department had set apart for it, upon his statement, making it, instead of $2,094,000, as he said he thought would be necessary, $850,000. It is problematical how much it will take to do this work, but we are within $250,000 of all that is necessary to do it at the outside.

Mr. HASTINGS. That was to do this same work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Exactly.

Mr. KAHN. I do not know whether it was to do this same work or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has preferred a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]—and I have no desire to assume jurisdiction for the Committee on Military Affairs to which it is not entitled—that The Adjutant General appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs on the 26th of March, subsequent to the time when he appeared before the Committee on Appropriations on this very item.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And upon the assumption, no doubt, that he would not get the amount that we appropriated for him when it finally passed the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. KAHN. I ask that my unanimous-consent request be stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from California. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that further consideration of this paragraph be continued over and made in order to-morrow when consideration is resumed in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the wish of the gentleman from California to have it go over; but I merely offer this suggestion, that the Chair, having sustained a point of order to part of this, in order to make a completed statement of the balance remaining it would be necessary to include after the word "records," on line 8, the words "is hereby appropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1921," so that that should be included. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was to strike it out.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the point of order is sustained it absolutely leaves this clause meaningless anyhow.

Mr. KAHN. The amendment which the gentleman from Indiana has offered may not be adopted if we find that this unexpended balance is necessary for the continuance and the completion of the work.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. When The Adjutant General was before the Committee on Military Affairs what did he have to say with reference to the necessity for this extra sum here? He testified before that committee, did he not;

Mr. KAHN. Exactly; and he went into details about the great value of these records and the great necessity for getting the unexpended balance to continue the work.

Mr. BRIGGS. Did he say that he would need that unexpended balance in addition to the amount that was carried in the deficiency bill?

Mr. KAHN. He did not say anything about any amount carried in the deficiency bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You bet he did not.

Mr. KAHN. Or in the legislative bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GARD. Inasmuch as it is a good point to begin on to-morrow, I make the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. Possibly we can finish reading a few more pages. I do not think there will be any material objection to them. Let us read until a quarter past 5.

Mr. GARD. I will withhold, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. KAHN. I would like to go on for a few moments longer. I would like to finish the bill, in fact, by Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. DENT. I think we can finish the bill by Friday. There is no opposition or fight on the bill from this side of the House. I would like to know about how much longer this afternoon the gentleman wants to continue?

Mr. KAHN. I should like to continue until a quarter past 5—15 minutes longer.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be in order after the next paragraph is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and binding of professional books treating of military and scientific subjects for library, for use of school, and for temporary use in coast defense, $2,360: Provided, That section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve it, Mr. Chairman,

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. This item is necessary for some of these bureaus in order that they may secure newspapers and periodicals from foreign countries and our own country—publications that are purely technical. They publish articles of considerable value to the bureau in question. The publications require that subscriptions must be paid for in advance. They will not accept subscriptions to be paid after the year is over, and so this language is inserted and has been carried in the bill for many years, as to certain departments, in order that the bureaus may have the advantage of those special technical newspapers and periodicals which carry the articles that pertain to that particular service. It has been done as to some of the provisions of the bill for a number of years, notably in the Ordnance and other scientific and technical bureaus. They want to get the benefit of these particular publications.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Did not that first come to particular attention when the Post Office Department ruled, under some act or under the authority of some act, that newspapers could not send through the mails their publications except when they are paid for in advance?

Mr. KAHN. I think so. I want to call to the attention of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] the fact that legislation of this kind has been carried in the bill since 1908.

Mr. WALSH. Now, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the department subscribe for periodicals only of foreign publication?

Mr. KAHN. No. They also subscribe for publications that discuss technical questions in which the bureau is interested in this country, but the rule here is that subscriptions must be paid for a year in advance.

Mr. WALSH. Has that rule been in force since 1908?

Mr. KAHN. The law has been carried that long. Probably it is because it was called to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs, and upon that statement the provision was inserted in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, this is a very minor appropriation, Mr. Chairman, and in view of the explanation of the gentleman from California I will not press the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

SIGNAL SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

Telegraph and telephone systems: Purchase, equipment, operation, and repair of military, telegraph, telephone, radio, cable, and signaling systems; signal equipments and stores, field glasses, telescopes, heliographs, signal lanterns, flags, and other necessary instruments; wind vanes, barometers, anemometers, thermometers, and other meteorological instruments; photographic and cinematographic work performed for the Army by the Signal Corps; motor cycles, motor-driven and other vehicles for technical and official purposes in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of communication or signaling systems, and supplies for their operation and maintenance; professional and scientific books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, and maps for use in the office of the Chief Signal Officer; telephone apparatus, including rental and payment for commercial, exchange, message, trunk-line, long-distance, and leased-line telephone service at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, excepting local telephone service for the various bureaus of the War Department in the District of Columbia, and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War; electric time service; the rental of commercial telegraph lines and equipment and their operation at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, but not including payment for individual telegraph messages transmitted over commercial lines; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts, cantonments, camps, and stations of the Army; fire control and direction apparatus and matériel for Field Artillery; salaries of civilian employees, including those necessary as instructors at vocational schools; supplies, general repairs, reserve supplies, and other expenses connected with the collecting and transmitting of information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise; experimentation and research for the purpose of developing improvements in apparatus and methods of signaling, including machines, instruments, and other equipment for laboratory and repair purposes; tuition, laboratory fees, etc., for Signal Corps officers detailed to civilian technical schools for the purpose of pursuing technical courses of instruction along Signal Corps lines; lease, construction, alteration, and repair of such buildings required for storing or guarding Signal Corps supplies, equipment, and personnel when not otherwise provided for, including the land therefor, the introduction of water, electric light and power, sewerage, grading, roads and walks, and other equipment required, $4,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have asked the Official Reporters for a copy of the stenographic notes of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], but as I have not received them yet, and as it is getting to be a late hour, I want to rise to say a few words with regard to the remarks he made. So far as the remarks he made about me personally are concerned, I want to say that I shall continue to cartoon as I have in the past, and I wish I had as much ability to express my ideas in pictures as the gentleman from Ohio has with his oratory. I can simply say that this publication, the Plumb Plan League paper, called Labor, is an official organ of the brotherhoods of which Mr. COOPER is a member. I am not a member of it, and I do not stand up here in behalf of labor. But if I wanted to go into some details in regard to the railroad bill, which would take about an hour, I believe I could justify my own opinion that that bill was not entirely beneficial to the great mass of the people, to labor or the farmers either.

In Chicago recently, according to newspaper reports, the president of the American Bankers' Association got up in a great convention and said he was proud of the bill because they had written five or six provisions into that measure. Now, as the bankers are the looters of the railroads, and not the railroad owners themselves, I believe it would be logical and consistent for me to show that because the bankers of this country had succeeded in writing five or six provisions into the bill it was a bill practically drawn by a soviet of brokers in Wall Street.

The newspaper dispatch I referred to was in the Washington Star under the following date line:

COMMENDS RAILROAD BILL—BANKERS' HEAD CALLS IT STABILIZER OF CERTAIN CONDITIONS.

CHICAGO, March 2.

The Esch-Cummins railroad bill is the most constructive legislation Congress has enacted in many years, Richard S. Hawes, president of the American Bankers' Association, declares in a statement here.

Six of seven recommendations drawn up by a special railroad committee of the association were incorporated in the bill, Mr. Hawes said.

"The bill will serve as a stabilizer of certain national conditions," Mr. Hawes said, "and it will insure a continuance of the present prosperous conditions. The principle of arbitration provided is at least equitable to all concerned. Let the labor features be given a full and fair trial. Both sides should welcome an unbiased try out."

I could quote another document proving that the railroad bill was partly written by financial interests, but I shall not discuss this matter further unless I am again attacked.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAER. No; I will not yield. I have only five minutes. But I am not trying to prove what I have just suggested, and I do not intend to unless some one makes an attack on me and I have to come in here on the floor and defend my statements in any paper in which my work is published. But the Members of this House were not entirely familiar with that bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield for a question, to explain this cartoon, in view of what he has just said?

Mr. BAER. That is just exactly what I have just explained.

Mr. FOSTER. This one where you say, "Wanted for Congress, a man who votes for the people and not for the soviet of Wall Street."

Mr. BAER. I have just explained that when five or six provisions of that bill are written by bankers who are the looters of the railroads, the men who voted for that bill, unconsciously, perhaps, did vote for the interests of Wall Street.

Mr. FOSTER. My question is this: Did you get paid for libeling 250 Members of this House in that cartoon?

Mr. BAER. No; I did not get any pay for it. I expressed my views on the railroad bill in that cartoon without any pay for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this your view about your fellow Members of Congress, who are as honest as you are?

Mr. BAER. I have no time to yield further.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a lot of questions I would like to ask you on that.

Mr. BAER. The antistrike clause of the bill which I attacked in Labor was not the clause that was in the bill as it originally passed the House, but was language written in by a Member of another body that I can not mention on this floor, and that was a vicious measure. It is evident that it meant the slavery of laboring men in this country. Here they wanted public ownership of laborers to compel them to work, and still they were hollering against the Government controlling the railroads. That was the very reason I attacked this provision that was written in another body, not by this House. The Anderson amendment was a splendid amendment, but that other provision was written in in another body, and it meant the slavery of the laboring men of this country, and I have the right, as a cartoonist and as an individual American citizen and as a Member of Congress, to attack a vicious measure that is contrary to the very fundamentals of our American Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to say that the cartoon I referred to in my question to the gentleman from North Dakota is in Labor, dated March 20, and not prior to the House passing the bill, but subsequent to that date. The cartoon says, "Wanted, for Congress, a man who votes for the people and not for the soviet of Wall Street." That is under date of March 20.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I will gladly yield.

Mr. BAER. I went on the proposition that this measure had passed according to my views, and that was what the American bankers said—they had written five or six provisions into the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; gladly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If this be a representative Government, is it extraordinary that once in a while the bankers might get a law through Congress not harmful to them?

Mr. BAER. That is all right.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say that I came here as a Member of this Congress with a large labor constituency, and I think my record at home will show that I was not considered unfriendly to labor. After the present railroad bill was passed I asked the American Federation of Labor for their classification of my votes on labor bills. I found that there were 13 bills that the Federation had been interested in and that I had voted for all they were in favor of, as they classify it, except one, and that was my final vote for the railroad bill. I mention this to show that I do not believe I can justly be accused of being unfriendly to labor.

When the final vote arrived a motion to recommit by substituting the Anderson amendment for the labor clause then in the bill would have carried by a majority of 50 had the opportunity been presented for the vote. That is not only my judgment, but the judgment of the legislative agent of one of the railroad brotherhoods. It was generally understood by those friendly to labor that such a motion would be made up to within five minutes of the time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who had not voted for the Anderson amendment originally, made the motion to recommit, which precluded the vote for the Anderson amendment. This condition gave us no opportunity to vote for the substitution of the Anderson amendment. I then voted for the bill, realizing that it was necessary to protect the railroads on their return to private ownership. Without protection, the weaker roads in my district would have been thrown into the hands of receivers with a result that the coal mines would have their output materially reduced and the miners would be without employment. When we vote, as friends of labor, for this bill we turn around only to find a gentleman of the House cartooning the House of Representatives as a "soviet of Wall Street." This is both unfair and untrue. In my judgment, a gentleman who does that and intends it—I will not say what is in my mind, because I am not positive as to the rules of the House in such a case—but I resent it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAER. Go ahead.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman says, "Go ahead." What I had in mind to say was that, if the gentleman from North Dakota objects to his company in the House, there is a way to part company without the retirement from the House of the 250 Members who supported the railroad bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I have a point of order reserved and in view of the fact that I may need some assistance in having it properly considered, I will not press the point of order now.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman who has recently spoken is very unfair, and I will not go into a consideration of the railroad bill, because it would take an hour. I think the men who voted for the bill voted conscientiously, but it was passed under circumstances that did not enable them to know all that was in the bill. I am not questioning the good faith of any Member of the House, only I say that a great number of Members of the House did not know what was in the bill. I claim that the constitutional lawyers of the country do not know what is in the bill, because in that bill you can have an injunction on labor to-day. I am not arguing in regard to that. What I want to say is that as a cartoonist or a Member of Congress I have the right to express my views in pictures as well as somebody has to get up on the floor and make a speech.

The cause of the present unrest and strikes in this country is not caused by the Plumb plan paper. It is caused by repressive legislation, not only that has been passed by Congress but bills introduced and put in here suppressing free speech, free assemblage, and other repressive legislation. I want to put in the RECORD in connection with my remarks, as I have the right of extension, a statement printed in yesterday's Herald, drawn up by some members of the American Federation of Labor, and they speak officially for that organization as well as for the brotherhoods. These men go on to say that it is the reactionary legislation that has caused the present agitation. Bolshevism is always brought about by Bourbonism. In every country where they have tried to pass such repressive measures as Mr. Palmer's espionage bill a similar result has been caused. It is similar in every respect to the Czar's bill, to the Kaiser's bill, to the Bourbon bill, to the Stuarts' bill, and to what was done in Russia. What did it bring about? It brought about a serious condition like that in Germany to-day. I have a right to talk against this legislation and I have a right to picture it, and I challenge anybody in this House to say that I have not the right to express my views in that manner.

In connection with what I have said I insert the following:

STRIKES DUE TO REACTIONARY LAWS, LABOR'S OFFICIAL VIEW.

The Washington Herald herewith presents labor's official views on the unauthorized nation-wide railroad strike. The article was written by a trade-union official after he had conferred with international labor chiefs on the subject, and the opinions presented are the opinions of men high in the councils of the American Federation of Labor and the railroad brotherhoods. The article follows:

"The stampeded strikes of individual railroad employees can be laid to the reactionary legislation by Congress and the 'government-by-injunction' tactics of representatives of our Government.

"The strikes also are a stinging rebuke to those men in Congress who have persistently, flagrantly, and maliciously denounced in scathing terms organized labor and labor officials.

SAYS A. F. OF L. PREVENTED NATION-WIDE STRIKES.

"It is safe to say that were it not for the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions the country would be in the turmoil and stress of a gigantic strike that would paralyze industry and cause famine in food and other necessaries of life.

"There would have been no bolshevik government in Russia if there had been in that country as strong and virile an organization as the American Federation of Labor. There can be no complete paralysis of industry and commerce in this country because the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions will prevent it. There can be no so-called revolution in the United States so long as there is an American Federation of Labor. But the tactics of the labor baiters in Congress have embittered the people of this country until their regard for the law is becoming a secondary consideration.

"Since May, 1919, when the present Congress began its session, it has been surfeited with obnoxious bills, the intent of which are to reaffirm in peace times all the new vicious legislation adopted with the tacit consent of the people during the war.

REGRETS ATTEMPT TO HAMPER LABOR AND THE PEOPLE.

"Bills have been introduced taking away the initiative of men to better their conditions, the right of free speech, free press, and free assembly granted by the Constitution, and sumptuary laws have been proposed that would tie labor and the farmers into such a condition of servitude they would be unable to engage in the most necessary agitation seeking the betterment of their conditions.

"Not an idea was conceived in the hostile minds of Members of Congress that would retard and hamper not only labor but the people, that has not been written into a bill and presented for consideration.

"While the people of the country were suffering from the effects of the Great War and the economic equilibrium was shattered as never before in the history of the country, not a constructive measure was enacted by Congress for their relief.

"The high cost of living entered into every home. Children were denied proper sustenance because of the inability of the breadwinners of the household to earn sufficient wages to support themselves and their dependents. Cries for relief were incessant. They came from every quarter of the United States, and no class was more patient than the railroad employees. The appeals were ignored.

HOLD "TREACHERY OF CONGRESS" EXCITED WORKERS.

"This situation has caused the individual strikes that are disturbing the country to-day. But those men are fighting for the right to live as Americans should live, and notwithstanding their membership in trade unions, they have stampeded from their employment in what is called an unauthorized strike. It is unauthorized because the trade-union movement of the country believes in orderly procedure in the settling of grievances, but it can not be called an unjust strike, as those men were excited through the treachery of Members of Congress who have neglected the interests of the people.

"Congress is to blame for the situation. There is no doubt about it. Its antistrike legislation, its efforts to establish involuntary servitude of the employees of the railroad companies as well as others, and the falsehoods uttered so frequently embittered the people of this country. But the American Federation of Labor, which has been so maliciously maligned, can be depended upon to save this country from the terrible situation that has developed through the acts of Congress.

PEOPLE SHOULD PRAISE TRADE-UNION IDEA.

"Every rule of discipline in the railroad brotherhoods and their lodges is being enforced to the extreme. The strikers have been notified they will be expelled from their organizations unless they return to work. Every piece of machinery in the labor organization, every influence it can bring to bear, is being used to induce the strikers to return to work.

"This will be accomplished in a few days, as men are already returning to their employment.

"The people of the country should rise up in praise of the trade-union movement. They should make it their one aim in the next election to defeat every candidate who has aided in sowing the seeds of unrest among the workers.

"There was no greater influence during the war for a united people than the trade-union movement. It was a potential factor in killing pacifism when it was becoming a serious menace.

"But no sooner was the armistice declared than the denunciation of organized labor began. President Gompers was declared to have been disloyal during the war. Every act of his that had been approved by the rulers and parliaments of allied countries and our own Government was ridiculed and said to have been of no moment. Such denunciation by Members of Congress was sent out through the country in an effort to prejudice the people against the trade-union movement and its normal activities.

HIT PROFITEERS FOR SWELLING PROFITS.

"While the attack was being made on labor the profiteers went on their way rejoicing. As long as labor was denounced as being the cause of the profiteering the profiteers kept swelling prices without fear. These are the causes of the strikes of the railroad men, who had performed such prodigious tasks during the war. No group of men in the United States are more loyal, but the hammering away at them, the charge that they are receiving enormous wages, when they are saving and skimping at every turn and are still unable to make ends meet, has aroused them so they can not be held responsible for their acts.

"The trouble will settle down, peace will be restored, but the bitterness of feeling will remain. It is therefore necessary for all citizens of the United States who believe we should have a representative Congress, one which will legislate in the interest of the people and not for a privileged few, to give their aid to defeat those responsible for the present terrible conditions.

"The men who are on strike quit as individuals. No law could be enacted that would prevent such a class of strikes unless it prohibited an individual from quitting his employment whenever he saw fit. It is a most striking example of what unrest will do.

WANT "UNBEARABLE CONDITIONS" IMPROVED.

"Let Congress forget politics, forget personal aggrandizement, and enact legislation that will be of benefit to our people. Send every profiteer to jail. Repeal all reactionary legislation that prohibits citizens of our country from enjoying the inherent rights granted them by the Constitution.

"The people, to be successful, must not be burdened with any sumptuary laws that will take away their liberties. It were better that Congress should be done away with altogether than to have it create such rebellion in the minds and hearts of the people.

"The remedy, therefore, is that Congress and the interests that have been attacking labor should change their policy of seeking to enact such laws as make the life of the workers unbearable and join with the American Federation of Labor to alleviate the present unbearable conditions and unrest among the army of workers of our country. This can not be done unless the American Federation of Labor is supported by those who are now seeking to disrupt it."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order that there is no quorum present, in the interest of peace on the Republican side.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13587, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas for an indefinite period, on account of sickness.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill, for printing under the rule.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12581) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between the said States.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, that the Senate had further insisted upon amendment 53, had asked a further conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate Committees as indicated below:

S. 4167. An act to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge approaches and extensions or additions thereto by the city of St. Louis, within the States of Illinois and Missouri; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. J. Res. 186. Joint resolution to extend the authority of the county of Luzerne, State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the North Branch of the Susquehanna River from the city of Wilkes-Barre, county of Luzerne, Pa., to the borough of Dorranceton, county of Luzerne, Pa.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 795. An act for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1005. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa; and

S. 1222. An act for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the Army appropriation bill, or who may hereafter speak on that bill, have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, why does not the gentleman extend it to all Members of the House?

Mr. KAHN. Only those gentlemen who have spoken on the bill have asked that I make this request. I have no objection to changing the request so that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject on which I addressed the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 15, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of waterway or ship canal along the most practicable route between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario of sufficient capacity to admit the largest vessels now in use on the Great Lakes, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ELLSWORTH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9228) to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 826), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MADDEN, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13576) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to the Postmaster General without charge therefor a certain building or buildings now located at Watertown, N. Y., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 827), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9028) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Nez Perce National Forest, Idaho, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 833), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3522) for the relief of Lemuel Stokes, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 828), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12890) referring the claim of the State of Rhode Island for expenses during the War with Spain to the Court of Claims for adjudication, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 829), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. McKINIRY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11945) for the relief of W. C. Stewart, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 830), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12005) for the relief of Henry P. Corbin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 831), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 178) authorizing an exchange of lands by A. A. Bruce, of La Veta, Colo., reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 832), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13539) granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Woesner; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLAR: A bill (H. R. 13606) granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Paul, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 13607) amending section 2 of the act of June 14, 1918, providing for a determination of heirship in cases of deceased members of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, conferring jurisdiction upon district courts to partition lands belonging to full-blood heirs of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. TAGUE: A resolution (H. Res. 520) regarding the Irish citizens confined in the prisons in England; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 13608) granting an increase of pension to Henry Haines; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13609) granting an increase of pension to Frank Dye; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALE: A bill (H. R. 13610) granting a pension to Cynthia A. Prince; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13611) granting a pension to Preston Phinney; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 13612) for the relief of the heirs of R. M. Bryson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. EVANS of Montana: A bill (H. R. 13613) for the relief of Ferman Montreal; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRIGSBY: A bill (H. R. 13614) validating homestead entry of Mike Campbell for certain public land in Alaska; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KETTNER: A bill (H. R. 13615) granting an increase of pension to Hannah Barney; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 13616) granting a pension to William M. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: A bill (H. R. 13617) to extend the provisions of the retirement law for the Lighthouse Service to include Joseph P. Groux, former keeper of Chefuncte River Range Light Station, La.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 15, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee day by day that we may be recommissioned for the task Thou hast put into our hands. We dare not meet the responsibilities of this high office trusting alone in human wisdom or human strength—too many sacred and important interests are at stake. We turn our faces constantly toward God and ask Thee to guide us in the discharge of our duties. Bless the labor of this day in this Senate. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

NITRATE OF SODA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users a supply of nitrate of soda, which was to strike out all after "authorized," in line 4, and to insert "to sell for cash at the prevailing market price, at the time of the sale thereof, to such distributors or users thereof, in the United States, as shall request the same, and in such quantity to each, not less than 1 ton nor more than 100 tons to any purchaser, as he shall see fit, not to exceed in the aggregate 100,000 tons of nitrate of soda, now held as a reserve supply of the War Department, the proceeds of such sale to be repaid to the proper item of the current appropriations originally made for such purposes: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall report to Congress not later than December 6, 1920, the names of all purchasers of said nitrate of soda, together with the prices for which sold."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment of the House. The War Department advises me that this will be the most expeditious way in which to keep the accounts.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall have to ask that the matter go over for to-day, because I have some information from one of the departments very much opposed to the measure in its present form.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let it go over, then, for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, it will be passed over until to-morrow.

RAILROAD STRIKES.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Denver papers announce that the Denver railroad yardmen at a mass meeting a few days ago, after a full consideration of the appeal made to them to join in the strike movement now generally prevalent, unanimously decided not to do so. The action of this organization is so commendable, so just, and so conservative that I think it is worth a special note of appreciation on the floor of the Senate and entitles it to a public expression of our thanks.

I therefore take this opportunity to say that this example should commend itself to law-abiding, conservative American workmen throughout the country, whether organized or not. It indicates a strong leaven of order, of justice, of public spirit among the organizations which, in my judgment, must inevitably make itself felt and which, I trust, will ultimately prevail everywhere.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Battle Creek, Mich., praying for the repeal of certain provisions of the so-called Lever Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Shiawassee Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Owosso, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called Kenyon-Vestal bill to promote Americanization, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Buxton North Co., of Nogales, Ariz., praying that more troops be sent to the Mexican border on account of the pending revolution in Sonora, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kingman, Ariz., praying for universal military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR.

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 4002) to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4001) to provide for the election of the members of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4225) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Streit; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4226) to authorize national banking associations to establish and maintain branches; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 4227) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Hanes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 4228) for the relief of Stanley Mitchell; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment proposing that hereafter birch timber may be exported from Alaska, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE BUILDING SITUATION.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 350), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas the general construction of houses, manufacturing establishments, and buildings necessary for the development of the Nation's resources, the production of essential materials, and the amelioration of present housing conditions was curtailed by Federal action during the war and is now seriously hampered by an unprecedented demand for consumables and luxuries which has diverted capital, labor, and materials into nonproductive or nonessential fields: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, consisting of three members of the majority party and two members of the minority party, appointed by the President of the Senate, is hereby authorized to inquire into and report to the Senate on or before December 1, 1920:

(a) The existing situation in relation to the general construction of houses, manufacturing establishments, and buildings; and the effect thereof upon other industries and upon the public welfare; and

(b) Such measures as it may deem necessary to stimulate and encourage such construction work, to encourage popular investment rather than spending, to foster private initiative in building, and to insure cooperation between labor and persons or corporations engaged in transportation, banking, or other business necessary to the development of such construction.

Such committee is hereby authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Congress, at Washington or at any other place in the United States, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ experts deemed necessary by such committee, a clerk, and a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before such committee, such stenographer's service to be rendered at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page; the expenses involved in carrying out the provisions of this resolution to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 19, 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 21, 23, 25, and 28 and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That whenever the office of a postmaster becomes vacant through death, resignation, or removal, the Postmaster General shall designate some person to act as postmaster until a regular appointment can be made by the President, and the Postmaster General shall notify the Auditor for the Post Office Department of the change. The postmaster so appointed shall be responsible under his bond for the safekeeping of the public property of the post office and the performance of the duties thereof until a regular postmaster has been duly appointed and qualified and has taken possession of the office. Whenever a vacancy occurs from any cause, the appointment of a regular postmaster shall be made without unnecessary delay"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the word "materially"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$1,415,000" named in said amendment, insert the following: "$1,250,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For transportation of foreign mails by steamship, aircraft or otherwise, including increases hereinafter provided, $4,700,000: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of this sum shall be expended for carrying foreign mail by aircraft."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "of which $500,000 shall be available immediately"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read: "SEC. 4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read: "SEC. 6"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) The commission shall investigate all present and prospective methods and systems of handling, dispatching, transporting, and delivering the mails, and the facilities therefor; and especially all methods and systems which relate to the handling, delivery, and dispatching of the mails in the large cities of the United States.

"On or before March 1, 1921, the commission shall make a report to Congress containing a summary of its findings and such recommendations for legislation as it may believe to be proper"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(d) For the purposes of this section, the commission shall have power to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and to administer oaths."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the second paragraph of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, at his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to loan to any State of the Union, when so requested by the highway department of the State, such tractors as are retained and not distributed under the act approved March 15, 1920, for use in the highway construction by the highway department of such State: Provided, That all expenses for repairs and upkeep of tractors so loaned and the expenses of loading and freight shall be paid by the State, both in transfer to the State and the return to the Army."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "Sec. 8"; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. C. W. BECKHAM,
CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HALVOR STEENERSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from Michigan what was done with respect to the question of the bonus which was given to employees?

Mr. TOWNSEND. We carried over the appropriation for last year in which a bonus was specially provided for, but neither House made any provision for additional compensation at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. I am a little confused about the matter. There was some provision, either in this bill or in the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill, to grant the bonus for the ensuing year that the employees are receiving during the current year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is correct, and it is in the bill now. It was in the bill when passed by both Houses.

Mr. POMERENE. That is what I wanted to be reassured about.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was not a matter in disagreement.

I desire to state that we passed this bill, as the Senate will remember, and sent it to conference. In the conference the House conferees proposed an amendment whereby a building located at the Watertown Arsenal that belongs to the Government could be moved to a piece of ground here, which Congress was providing means for purchasing in this bill. When that item went to the House in the conference report one of the Members of the House was not pleased with what the Senate had done relative to airplanes, although the bill, as passed by the House, made no provision for any airplane service. Therefore he raised the point of order against this building proposition, and it was, in fact, legislation which had not been enacted by either House, and the bill had to go back to conference. It went back, and the offending item was eliminated. The conferees have now reached a complete agreement on this report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

NATIONAL SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to say one word about an item which was not included in the Post Office appropriation bill by either House, but a matter which has received the attention of the country to as great an extent as any other purely domestic matter which is before the Congress or the country. I refer to the question of highway legislation. We did not include any provision in the Post Office appropriation bill; in fact, it was not seriously urged that we should increase the appropriation or pass any legislation extending Federal aid.

I have, however, introduced a bill, which has been called to your attention generally, I think, known as the national highway bill. It has received the indorsement of good roads organizations from all over the country. The National Grange and boards of commerce generally favor it. Ordinarily I should press it for consideration at this session of Congress.

When we had the last measure up making appropriations for Federal aid I then stated that I would consent to that proposition, because it was an encouragement to road building and the only proposition then before the Senate, but I then said on this floor that I did not regard it as a wise and proper course for the United States to follow in expending money in highway construction and maintenance.

I believed then and I believe now that the Federal Government can be properly interested only in the construction of interstate roads, of roads that benefit commerce, that contribute to the general welfare and to the common defense. There never was a time when roads were more in need than they are at present. The present great emergency that is disturbing the country—strikes on the railroads—could be obviated if we had through systems of highways, and the threatening peril of railroad strikes would be largely robbed of its terrors.

The bill which I have introduced provides for a national system of highways composed of two roads at least in each State, one running east and west and one north and south, connecting with roads in adjacent States or adjacent countries, these roads to be built and maintained by the Federal Government.

It provides for a national highway commission, which will take over all of the powers that are now being exercised by the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture. It is to be the business of this commission to lay out, construct, and maintain these national highways.

I repeat, no one will question the need of these highways, and especially the present need. There is sufficient encouragement throughout the country to warrant embarkation upon this proposition to-day, but I considered the condition of the Treasury, knowing that it was under great strain, knowing that it would require men who a year ago we were exercised about for fear that they would not find employment after the war, but who to-day are needed by the agricultural interests of the country very greatly. Therefore, I thought it was not wise to ask that a large number of men be taken out of regular employment and placed upon road work.

This, I repeat, together with the condition of the Treasury, induced me to postpone pressing the national highway bill for consideration at this time. I have not felt that it was wise to appropriate any more money at this time for Federal aid. Over $100,000,000 are available, less probably than $13,000,000 of which have been utilized by the States. The existing appropriations for Federal aid will run until the end of 1921, and after that they will continue for two years. So there is money enough to continue the work which has already been laid out.

But, Mr. President, I am not at all pleased with the way the Federal money has been expended in highway construction work.

The money, for instance, is apportioned, as Senators know, among the States according to population, territory, and mileage of roads. The States put up an amount equal to that appropriated by the Federal Government. The fact is that a great many of the States apportion their Federal-aid money among their counties in the same ratio that the Federal Government apportions it among the States, with the result that we find little patches of road built here and there all over a State, beginning nowhere, leading nowhere, having no system in view, and being washed away in many instances by the first flood that comes after they have been completed. Sixty per cent of the Federal aid already expended has been devoted to temporary roads. I maintain that present methods of expending Federal aid are wasteful and inexcusable.

Therefore I have felt that one of two things must occur: Before I will ever vote another dollar in that direction we must amend the Federal-aid law so that the money shall be expended upon a system of State highways connecting with adjoining systems in other States and maintained permanently, so that the investment may be of some value to the country, or else, at the proper time, I am going to insist as strongly as I can—and that is what I am doing now—that we have a national system, laid out by the Federal Government and built and maintained by it, for the good of the whole country. It will be an inspiration to the States to build State systems connecting with the Federal plan which will contribute to the highest welfare of the States.

So, Mr. President, I am going to call the committee together next week some time, I hope, to consider not the appropriation of a large amount of money at this session of Congress, but to create a commission and transfer to it the powers of the Highway Commission of the Agricultural Department, and instruct it to proceed to carry out the provisions of Federal-aid laws as they now exist and at the same time map the country for the national system of roads to be constructed hereafter.

There are before the committee a bill introduced by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and another bill introduced by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] having reference to Federal aid. The former bill refers especially to roads in public-land States. Certainly a different condition exists there from that which exists in the other States, and that condition ought to be given consideration. I propose, with the concurrence of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to proceed to the consideration of this question, and possibly to hold such hearings as may be deemed advisable for the purpose of presenting to the Congress or to the Senate a concrete statement of the conditions as they exist, with a view that the great and pressing need for better highways and a better system of highways may be considered at the earliest possible date consistent with the condition of the Treasury. If you want to promote general prosperity, protect against railroad strikes, and promote the general welfare you will favor such a system as I propose.

I make this statement, Mr. President, because I feel that it is due the country to know the facts. I take it, Mr. President, that you, as well as myself, are receiving urgent communications on this subject greatly favoring it. I have therefore made it as clear as I could as to what course the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads will take in reference to the matter.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After 4 hours and 10 minutes in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 16, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 15, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, to whom our hearts are as open books, to whom therefore our thoughts and all our ways are known, look with compassion upon us, pardon our shortcomings, our weakness, and our sins.

Illumine our minds. Quicken our conscience by the holy spirit of truth. Strengthen us by the power of Thy might to do the duties public and private Thou hast laid upon us, so that we may guide our frail barks over the tempestuous sea of life to that haven of rest which Thou hast prepared for the faithful. In the name of Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of what is known as the Comer cotton rider to the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article prepared by myself relating to the excess-profits tax and the high cost of living and a suggested remedy therefor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the excess-profits tax and the high cost of living. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any attack in these remarks upon the Attorney General of the United States?

Mr. ACKERMAN. No; not at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4438, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked for on the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 4438. An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this is one amendment, I understand?

Mr. FESS. Just one amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I think it ought to be considered by the committee, and I object to its going to conference.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would suspend a moment, as I desire to file a conference report to have printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield for that purpose?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana submits to be printed under the rule a conference report on the bill, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12610. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. I notice there has been a habit of some Members to reserve points of order against conference reports. I would like to know from the Chair if it is necessary for some

Member of the House to rise in his place when a conference report is made, to be printed under the rule, and say that he reserves all points of order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The proper time to make the point of order is when the report is read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Chair will permit a word, doing that is premature.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that, but I was seeing whether it is going to be necessary to take up that much time of the House and that much space of the RECORD when it can be done when the report comes up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. It can be done after the reading of the report.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, right on that, there has been a disagreement on that proposition once before. The present Speaker rules that the proper time to make the point of order is after the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair rules that way.

Mr. GARNER. Let us see whether I understand the Speaker——

Mr. WALSH. The Speaker, I suppose, also means and before the statement is submitted if the reading of the report is dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair——

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the Speaker in order to have the ruling clear. Is it not a fact that the proper time for the point of order to be made is after the reading of the report, and, if the reading of the report is dispensed with, before the statement is read?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair would like to reflect on that as to whether, if the statement was read in lieu of the report, the proper time would be before or after the statement was read.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Speaker will find the precedents establish it as before the statement is read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not certain about that.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire the Speaker to put my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13587, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13587), which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, there was a point of order reserved by myself when the committee rose last evening, and under the reservation I would like to ask the gentleman from California for information with reference to the language of this paragraph, which covers an appropriation of some $4,000,000 for the Signal Corps relating to the leasing of lands.

Mr. KAHN. I am glad the gentleman asks that question.

The Signal Corps is operating along the entiré length of the Mexican border, from the Pacific Ocean to the Atlantic Ocean. They have signal stations along that entire border. At times they have to move them. It is not always possible to use Government land where they can install their paraphernalia, and so they are called upon at times to rent a little tract of land for the installation of their radio machinery. The amount expended, I am told, for that purpose is very small, $30 a year possibly, and yet it is necessary to have the permission in the appropriation so that when the money has to be used speedily they can have authority for conducting their work without hindrance or delay. It is largely in connection with matters of that kind that the language is necessary. And I want to say to the gentleman that the bills in the last two or three years have carried similar language.

Mr. WALSH. I recall that. Of course, that was during the war, when it was necessary. But, as I understand this, it is only for small tracts of land for small buildings and for short periods of time?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And the gentleman is confident that no large structures or buildings would be leased for any term of years under this language?

Mr. KAHN. I am quite sure there is no intention to use any of the money for the leasing of any large tracts of land or structures for the coming year. I am quite positive of that.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a statement. Yesterday a letter was read from the Secretary of War regarding the cost of maintaining our troops in German territory. The Secretary called my attention this morning, when I went to see him, to the fact that at the time we sent our forces into German territory we placed about 100,000 men there, and that number continued in that territory from December 1, 1918, to March, 1919. During that period the expense was, as he stated, $1,220,000 a day. But in March our troops began to return from the German area, and to-day we have, as was stated yesterday, about 17,455 officers and men there. Therefore the daily expense has materially decreased. It is about $175,000 a day at the present time. But I want to say that the possibility of being recouped out of the German treasury for the expenses we are compelled to bear by reason of our presence in Germany is said to be very remote. I have received the following from the Secretary of War upon this subject:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 15, 1920.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. KAHN: I have noticed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 14, 1920, the debate occasioned by my letter to you of April 9, 1920, giving the cost of occupation of the American Army in Germany for the first four months of its occupation; that is, from December 1, 1918, to March 31, 1919. The letter appears on page 5661 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 14, 1920, and states, in part, as follows:

"The cost of the occupation of the American Army for the first four months from December 1, 1918, to March 31, 1919, has recently been refigured on the basis of settlement agreed to by the interallied armistice commission at Spa, Belgium. This daily per capita cost for the period in question amounts to the following: Officers, $10.92028; soldiers, $4.24641; animals, $1.83896. The total average daily cost, based on the strength of the command for the period in question, amounts to $1,220,948."

This amount is so clearly limited to the cost of the American army of occupation for the first four months that the subsequent debate, in which it was alleged that the cost of our present army of 17,000 men was at the rate of $1,220,948 a day, is very puzzling to me. The members of the Military Committee, at least, know that the original army of occupation was the Third American Army, under command of Maj. Gen. Dickman. This army consisted, in round numbers, of 250,000 officers and men, the actual strength for the months for which the cost has been calculated for you being:

	Officers.	Troops.
December, 1918	8,951	218,255
January, 1919	10,605	250,042
February, 1919	10,426	251,583
March, 1919	10,566	244,771

I do not know that it is possible for me to add anything to my original statement to you that the cost in question was confined to the four months mentioned in the letter, but if it will add anything to the discussion I may simply state that the cost of maintenance of a force of 17,000 men is not the same as the cost of maintenance of an army of 250,000 men.

Very truly, yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

I believe when the committee adjourned a motion was pending, made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], to strike out the language on pages 6 and 7, relating to the preparation of the lists of the men who were in our Army during the World War for the benefit of the States of the Union and the handing over of those lists to the adjutant generals of the various States. I have looked into that matter this morning at the War Department, and I have found that there is no relationship whatever between the appropriation carried in the bill and the appropriation that the gentleman from Indiana spoke of as having been inserted in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. I take it, therefore, that the gentleman from Indiana will not press his motion to strike out.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to speak on this subject?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will defer, then.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair make this statement: Under the action of yesterday the gentleman from Indiana would have the right, having unanimous consent to return to this paragraph, to call it up at such time as he chose. If he chooses now to consider it, the matter is before the committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will defer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], a member of the committee.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, we have proceeded beyond that place. Is it not now proper for the chairman of the committee to ask to return to this paragraph and take it up?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I asked unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been granted.

Mr. KAHN. I ask to return at this time to that paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, relative to the paragraph on page 6, relating to the completion and preservation of the selective service records and the preparation of statements of service for adjutant generals of States, I had a conversation this morning with The Adjutant General over the phone, and he tells me emphatically that there is no duplication of this appropriation with the item that appears in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Gen. Harris informs me, Mr. Chairman, that he fully explained the item in the legislative bill in the Senate hearings, on pages 166 to 170. In appearing before the Senate committee on this item he asked for 1,000 clerks for the regular permanent establishment. He asked for 1,290 additional or temporary clerks for the purpose of taking care of the records of the demobilized Army; that is, furnishing information to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, to the Zone Finance Section, and to the Auditor for the War Department, and that those two items are the items included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; that he asked $2,000,000 for this purpose, and the committee allowed him $1,800,000; and that nothing carried in the legislative bill has any relation whatever to the completion and preservation of the selective service records; and that therefore the item in that bill is not in conflict with the item in the present Army appropriation bill. He further stated that without this appropriation or without the authorization to use the unexpended balance heretofore appropriated of $3,500,000, it will be absolutely impossible for The Adjutant General's office to complete and preserve the selective service records.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have no occasion to dispute what The Adjutant General has said to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]. I have every reason to believe he said to them what they claim. But I wish again to call the attention of this committee to the statement The Adjutant General made before the subcommittee on the legislative bill as compared with the statement he is now making to the gentlemen of the Military Affairs Committee. The Adjutant General is now telling the members of the Military Affairs Committee that the appropriation that was made in the legislative bill had no reference whatever to the work of getting out this data for the adjutant generals of the several States.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to exactly what The Adjutant General said on that proposition, so that you may know what his attitude was then as compared with his attitude now. This is what he said:

> The estimates for the office were revised by a War Department board convened for the purpose of considering the financial needs of the various bureaus of the department. That board allotted to this office $1,345,000 for the additional roll on the assumption that $750,000 of the $3,500,000 appropriated for the care and custody of the selective-service records and for the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutant generals of States would be made available for the payment of salaries of the additional roll during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. This sum will not be available for that purpose. But for this erroneous assumption it is presumed that the $2,094,970 needed by the office would have been approved by the board, as the sum of $1,345,000 tentatively allotted, and the $750,000 before referred to, is $2,094,970, the amount necessary to properly conduct the business of the office.

This sum will not be available for that purpose, so that he appealed to us to increase the amount that this allotment board had awarded to his office from $1,345,000 to $2,094,000. After hearing his evidence and after admitting that he could not tell to a nicety just how much money it would take to complete these records, we concluded to take and place in our bill, out of the lump-sum appropriation for the War Department, $1,850,000 for the exclusive use of The Adjutant General, and put language in the bill so that he would get it, against the advice of Gen. Lord and the Secretary of War, who did not want any restriction put on the amount and wanted us to let them distribute it as they saw fit. Knowing that if we did not put any restriction on it so that The Adjutant General would get the amount he desired, he would not get it, we put that restrictive language in. You will see, therefore, that The Adjutant General's own words before the legislative committee absolutely prove the incorrectness of the position that he is occupying now.

This is the position you are placing the legislative committee in if this language were to remain in this bill. The vital portion of it can not remain, because it has gone out on a point of order; but if it were to remain in, this would be the position: The Committee on Appropriations has appropriated practically $600,000 to do this work that he is now asking this committee to give him $750,000 additional to do. It would be a duplication of appropriation, and I think I may say to you that I am voicing the sentiment of the members of the subcommittee when I say that if we had had any idea that The Adjutant General was going to go before the Committee on Military Affairs and ask for an additional appropriation for this purpose, for which we made the appropriation, the appropriation allotted to this office should be at least $550,000 less than it is.

And here is the further predicament we are in: The legislative committee and the Committee on Appropriations on the other side of the Capitol have had their conference, and their report has been filed on the other side, as I found out this morning when it was too late to recall the conference report from further consideration of this proposition; and, finding it to be filed on that side, I filed the report here this morning; so that there would be a duplication of this appropriation of at least $600,000. As I stated yesterday, and wish to reiterate now, it is not the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations or anyone connected with it to cripple this work in the least, but you need not fear that this work will not be completed and that it will not be completed in time.

I wish to call attention now—and I think it is edifying, at least, to the force now in The Adjutant General's office——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana yield a moment while I read a paragraph of the testimony of Gen. Harris? Then he can explain it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; but make it as short as possible.

Mr. McKENZIE. On page 170 of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate on the legislative bill, under the heading of "Temporary employees," Gen. Harris said:

> I should like to call attention again to the mistake that was made in the Secretary's estimate of the amount that would be required for The Adjutant General's office. In recommending the apportionment of $4,000,000, the estimate of the Secretary of War, the board assumed that there would be a surplus of $750,000 from my special appropriation of $3,500,000, and that amount was deducted from my estimate, and they recommended that the Secretary allot $1,345,000 to The Adjutant General's office. Adding $750,000 to the amount that they recommended would make exactly the amount of my estimate.
> Senator GRONNA. You will really need $2,000,000?
> Gen. HARRIS. I really need $2,000,000, and I am sure I can not do the work under $2,000,000.

Now, I want the gentleman from Indiana, if he can, to explain whether or not they made up that deficiency, and if that is not carried in the appropriation that we are making here to-day?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We made it up. The only difference is that instead of appropriating $750,000 that he asked for, we appropriated nearly $600,000, thinking that he could get along with that amount of money.

Now, his testimony before that committee is substantially what it was before our committee. He said there that it would take $2,094,000 to do this work, and if you will take the $1,850,000 we have given him and add the $800,000 that it is proposed to give him in this bill, you are giving him, not $2,094,000, but you are giving him $2,600,000. There is the position you are occupying, and it strikes me that there can be a very material reduction in the clerical force of The Adjutant General's department. Here we are 18 months after this war is closed. Before we entered this war there were in The Adjutant General's office practically 550 clerks. To-day, or upon the 8th of this month, there were 3,778 clerks there. It strikes me that if there could be practice of a little economy here and there throughout that department, and with the practice of a little bit more of efficiency in that department as well as in all the other departments, this work could be done within the appropriation that was made by the legislative committee, and if it can not be done, the gentleman is not without recourse. It just simply shows the absolute futility of this Congress or any branch of this Government trying to keep tab on the appropriations that are made to these various bureaus as long as they are permitted to have access to half a dozen different committees, or three or more different committees, for the purpose of getting the appropriations desired for the same identical service.

Now, I have, as I have stated, every desire to facilitate and see completed this work in The Adjutant General's office. It was neglected for 20 years after the Civil War, and it made it very hard to obtain the information when it was at length taken up; but it can be completed now, and within the appropriation, in my opinion. That is all I desire to say on this proposition, but it is due this House, and it is especially due to the Committee on Appropriations, that the gentlemen of this House should know the reasoning not only of The Adjutant General before the committee, but the reason why the amount allotted to him by the War Department itself was increased from $1,345,000 to $1,850,000.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire to debate this item?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. KAHN. I desire to close the debate on this item.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. If the gentlemen of the committee will bear with me for just a moment and go through the hearings we had before our committee, they will recall that we had Gen. Harris before us and questioned him for several days. We were interested in what would be done with the amount of money carried in the bill that the gentleman is talking about, which would do the same work that would be done under this item. They are asking here that you shall expend the unexpended balance of $3,500,000 left from an allotment of war funds. I called on Gen. Harris a while ago to know what that unexpended balance was of the $3,500,000. No one on the committee seemed to know. I asked Gen. Harris over the phone a moment ago, and he told me that it was between $700,000 and $800,000. He did not give me the exact figures of this unexpended balance.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will allow me, he gave the Military Committee the amount.

Mr. SISSON. All right; but I am now calling the attention of the committee to this peculiar way of appropriating money. I think Gen. Harris is a very accomplished Army officer. I do not think he always presents to us the strongest side of his own case; but I think he is a patient, honest, and splendid Army officer, and is doing this job and doing it well. Out of this fund he proposes to do three things. If you will read the testimony, page after page of it in the hearings before the Appropriations Committee, you will find with how much care and detail the subcommittee went into the whole matter.

First, he wants to pay, out of this unexpended balance, together with what we gave him in the legislative bill, for preparing the records of the Regular Army; then, second, the demobilized army; and then, third, under the act of Congress to supply the records for the States. Now, after careful consideration he does not contend that he needs more than $2,000,000. The Senate and the House agreed on $1,850,000, or within $150,000 of what he said he needed. There is not a member of our committee who would hesitate for one minute to give Gen. Harris every dollar that he needs to make these records. But we meet again in December, and if you give him $1,850,000, or within $150,000 of all he asks, we will take care of the remainder of it in a deficiency bill if he absolutely needs it. If you Republicans want to practice some economy, if you want to vote to save something like $700,000 or $800,000, here is your opportunity to do it.

What I fear is that if you give the $700,000 or $800,000, this unexpended balance, you are going to have that money expended in addition to the amount that both committees in the House and Senate are desirous of appropriating for this purpose. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate was for years the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is partial to the Army, and you need not be uneasy about Senator WARREN ever receding upon a matter where he thinks the Army would be done any injustice. Yet he agreed on the $1,850,000 as being an amount of money reasonably necessary to do this work which The Adjutant General desires to have done.

Now, here is the trouble: This item ought not to go into this bill at all, but it got in in this way: The Provost Marshal General had, as I recollect, something like $8,000,000 carried in this Army bill. At the close of the war there was some $6,000,000 or $7,000,000—the amount is immaterial, but quite a sum—and of that amount of money, under the war power that the department has, there was allotted to The Adjutant General for this purpose $3,500,000, the amount specified in this bill. Now they seek to continue that item of appropriation after the war is over. What this Appropriation Committee thought and what your subcommittee of that committee thought was that there would be no item carried in this bill. We were endeavoring to give The Adjutant General every dollar that we thought he needed. But how can one committee, how can this House, how can the people know what any department is spending, when one committee goes and gives what it thinks is necessary, and then a department of the Government goes around the committee that has jurisdiction of the matter to another committee, gets that committee to overrule the first committee and has this House put in the peculiar attitude of having voted at one time to give all the money necessary to do this work, and then the same identical Congress through another committee adds $700,000 or $800,000 more, and that without rhyme or reason? Your subcommittee realized not only that the people of the country demand, but that it is the right of every soldier to have these records accurately made and kept, and I would not deny to The Adjutant General a penny which he requires for this purpose. On the contrary, it is a duty that we owe to the soldiers to keep their records with accuracy, even with painful accuracy, so that in years to come that record will be one that every man can rely upon, that his family after he has passed away may rely upon. So your subcommittee felt they were most liberal in granting this appropriation. The full Committee on Appropriations took this matter specially into consideration, because the subcommittee, in reporting to the full committee, gave the full committee all the facts within its possession, and the full committee indorsed what we had done, and this House indorsed what we did in the Committee of the Whole and in the House by the passage of that bill.

Therefore I think it is bad legislation, I think it makes for extravagance for you now to carry this item in this bill when the other committee, that had the jurisdiction of all the clerks within the District of Columbia, gave everything they thought was necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, The Adjutant General gets money for the clerks in his department from three different sources. His regular pay roll, which includes the clerk hire for The Adjutant General's office, is carried in the legislative bill, and provides for those clerks. Then he asked for a lump-sum additional appropriation for other clerks who are doing necessary clerical service on matters appertaining to the war. He has told the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and he has told me that none of those clerks are intended to expend a single minute of time in connection with the work of making up these military rolls which are so important to the soldiers, the Government, and the States.

Almost every day I receive letters saying that the adjutant general of this State or of that State hopes that the money will be appropriated for the continuation of this important work. Now, the matter came to the Committee on Military Affairs in rather a peculiar manner. There was an appropriation made, I believe by the Military Affairs Committee, of something like $8,000,000 for making up these records by the Provost Marshal General. When the office of the Provost Marshal General was discontinued, its work naturally went to The Adjutant General of the Army, who has the custody of all the records of the Army and has always been their custodian.

I take it for granted that if the amount carried in this bill is not allowed, the work of making up the rolls will be very seriously interfered with. Nay, more, I believe it will be stopped entirely. I do not think at this time it is wise to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Indiana and strike out all the other provisions of this paragraph that carry the appropriations.

I am just as anxious as is the gentleman from Indiana or the gentleman from Mississippi to cut down the expenses of the Government. I am just as anxious as any Member of this House to prevent duplication of appropriations.

The trouble has been in the past that the great Appropriations Committee of the House, which votes enormous sums of money, and which at times acts upon measures over which other committees have jurisdiction, has never invited the chairmen of those other committees or the members of those committees to coordinate the work of the various committees. I have suggested time and again to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that one of the best things he could do would be to get the chairmen of other committees together and coordinate the work on appropriations with these other chairmen. I speak not only of the present chairman but others in the past.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman will recall that last year when matters relating to the military bill were before the Committee on Appropriations, when estimates were made for defense, the chairman did confer with the gentleman from California, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, as he did with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, calling them in, and having hearings together.

Mr. KAHN. I frankly and freely admit that the gentleman from Iowa is the first chairman of any appropriation committee that has called in other chairmen on those matters.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does not the gentleman think it would have been reciprocal if the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs had called in some members of the Appropriations Committee before they made this appropriation for clerical service?

Mr. KAHN. The members of the Committee on Military Affairs did not know that The Adjutant General had appeared before the Appropriations Committee and asked for money for clerical hire for completing the military rolls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—17 ayes and 42 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON-ALASKA MILITARY CABLE AND TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

For defraying the cost of such extensions, betterments, operation, and maintenance of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system, as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1922, from the receipts of the Washington-Alaska Military Cable and Telegraph System which have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the extent of such extensions and betterments and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, $140,000.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Here is another case of duplication of work. This Alaska system pays for itself. The amount appropriated is not as large as the amount received from private individuals and business concerns who use that system. But in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs it developed that we appropriate for 10 Army radio stations along the coast of Alaska. The Navy appropriates for 10 naval stations along the coast of Alaska. So there are 20 stations along that coast. Whether they coordinate the business or whether they work together the committee was unable to find out.

But additional appropriations were asked for in this item in order to establish an additional Army station in Alaska. The committee before voting for another station determined to let the matter go over for the present in order that we may confer with the Committee on Naval Affairs and with officials of the Navy Department and see whether this Army station is really necessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, the recent budget bill that passed this House would have any tendency to prevent the duplication which seems to disturb his mind now?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What would be its purpose if it could not accomplish so simple a thing as that?

Mr. KAHN. This has been the experience of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs: It generally takes the committee working from 10 or half past 10 in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening with an hour for lunch several months to finish the hearings on the Army appropriation bill. I take it for granted that the Committee on Naval Affairs also expends a like amount of time on their bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. I take it for granted that other committees also expend a great deal of time on their bills, but I do not believe, frankly, that any one committee of this House can go into the numerous items of appropriations and get at the facts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then am I right in the conclusion that the gentleman's position is that the budget bill will not be effective to prevent duplication?

Mr. KAHN. The budget bill only provides for the method. It has to be followed by additional legislation. What the additional legislation will be I do not know, but it will be an important matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am speaking of the bird in the hand and not in the bush. I am talking of the present bill.

Mr. KAHN. The bill that passed the House had practically the unanimous vote of the Members of the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I appreciate that, but I ask the gentleman, in view of his ripe experience, whether it will be effective to cure us of this embarrassment?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know; I say it in all frankness; but I hope so.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. In regard to the item for the Alaskan cable the War Department appeared before the Committee on Appropriations for a deficiency to repair the cable; about 100 miles had given out. What is the condition now?

Mr. KAHN. I am told that those repairs have been made. There are a few cables which connect the coast of Alaska with the mainland of the United States. That cable was in a very poor condition, and, as the gentleman states, the Committee on Appropriations furnished money for new cables, which have been contracted for or have been delivered.

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is that the item went out on a point of order on the floor of the House and was not put back in the Senate and therefore did not carry the money.

Mr. KAHN. I asked about that matter when this item was before the Committee on Military Affairs and was informed that the cables had been procured.

The Clerk read as follows:

AIR SERVICE.

For creating, maintaining, and operating at established flying schools and balloon schools courses of instruction for aviation officers, students, and enlisted men, including cost of equipment and supplies necessary for instruction, purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments, and materials for theoretical and practical instruction; for maintenance, repair, storage, and operation of airships, war balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments, gas plants, hangars, and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft; and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith; for the purchase of supplies for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs in connection with aerial photography; improvement, equipment, maintenance, lease, and operation of aviation stations, balloon schools, plants for testing and experimental work; procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, telephones, telegraphs, and sewerage, including maintenance, operation, and repair of such utilities; for the acquisition of land or interest in land by purchase, lease, or condemnation where necessary to explore for, procure, or reserve helium gas, and also for the purchase, manufacture, construction, maintenance, and operation of plants for the production thereof and experimentation therewith; salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as may be necessary, and payment of their traveling and other necessary expenses as authorized by existing law; experimental investigation and purchase and development of new types of aircraft, accessories thereto, and aviation engines, including patents and other rights thereto, and plans, drawings, and specifications thereof; for the purchase, manufacture, and construction of airships, balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments, gas plants, hangars, and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith; for the purchase, manufacture, and issue of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purposes; for all necessary expenses connected with the sale or disposal of surplus or obsolete aeronautical equipment, and the rental of buildings, and other facilities for the handling or storage of such equipment; for the services of such consulting engineers at experimental stations of the Air Service as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, including necessary traveling expenses; purchase of special apparatus and appliances, repairs, and replacements of same used in connection with special scientific medical research in the Air Service, $27,255,000: Provided, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad, may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder, when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post, and approved by the Director of Air Service: Provided further, That claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $150,000; for printing and binding, including supplies, equipment, and repairs for Air Service printing plants at stations outside of the District of Columbia, at which printing may be authorized in accordance with law; for publications, station libraries, special furniture, supplies, and equipment for offices, shops, and laboratories; for special services, including the salvaging of wrecked planes: Provided further, That section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation: And provided further, That hereafter the Army Air Service shall control all aerial operations from land bases, and that naval aviation shall have control of all aerial operations attached to a fleet.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language on page 13, lines 23 and 24—

For printing and binding, including supplies, equipment, and repairs for Air Service printing plants at stations outside of the District of Columbia, at which printing may be authorized in accordance with law,

That apparently conflicts with section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919, which conferred jurisdiction upon the Joint Committee on Printing. I wondered if the gentleman would be willing to accept an amendment in line 23, before the words "Air Service," to insert the word "such" and to then strike out, in line

24, the words "which printing" and substitute the word "and," so that it would read:

For such Air Service printing plants at stations outside of the District of Columbia as may be authorized in accordance with the law.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order before there is any amendment, to the language on page 12, in lines 12, 13, and 14—

Salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as may be necessary.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will reserve it.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman wants to make it, I simply will tell the gentleman that Gen. Mitchell, of the Air Service, informed me to-day that if that goes out on a point of order the Air Service will not have a single civilian employee in the District and will have to close down.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the following language:

Salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia.

That is in lines 13 and 14, on page 12. I make the point of order for the reason that it is legislation with reference to the employment of civilians in the District of Columbia, of which the Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a moment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the gentleman prefer to permit the language that is left to read as follows?—

Salaries and wages of civilian employees outside of the District of Columbia.

If he strikes out the words "the District of Columbia," there might be language substituted which would make it in order; or does he wish to strike all provision for salaries and wages of civilian employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. All I am desiring to do is to strike out the words—

Salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then there would be no sense in what is left in the paragraph.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not my fault.

Mr. KAHN. Gen. Mitchell, of the Air Service, informed me it would absolutely stop all work of the Air Service.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In the District of Columbia?

Mr. KAHN. No; all over the country.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, let me have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment to call his attention to the fact that the only language that would be subject to the point of order are the words in line 13, "in the District of Columbia."

Mr. KAHN. I think so.

Mr. FIELDS. If I were the gentleman I would insist that that is all that is subject to the point of order, so that it would not interfere with civilian employment outside of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROSE). The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I call the Chair's attention to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] that the only words subject to the point of order are those in line 13, "in the District of Columbia," and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will modify his point of order to that extent.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, I submit to the Chair that the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction over appropriations for the pay of civilian employees outside of the District of Columbia, and part of this appropriation would probably apply to the employment of civilian labor outside of the District of Columbia. I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order is not well put, but that the only part of the language to which the point of order would apply are the words in line 13, "in the District of Columbia."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that if the gentleman wants to amend the proposition, he can do so. That is not my province. The members of the Committee on Military Affairs may amend the matter after the point of order is sustained to the language:

Salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia.

I suggest that they can insert—

Salaries and wages elsewhere than in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KAHN. Salaries and wages of civilian employees elsewhere than in the District of Columbia. Is the point of order sustained, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KAHN. Then I offer to amend, on page 12, line 12, by inserting after the word "therewith" the following:

Salaries and wages of civilian employees elsewhere than in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KAHN: Page 12, line 12, after the word "therewith" insert "salaries and wages of civilian employees elsewhere than in the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment to strike out the words "elsewhere than in" and insert the word "outside."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH to the amendment offered by Mr. KAHN: Strike out the words "elsewhere than in" and insert in lieu thereof the word "outside," so that it will read "salaries and wages of civilian employees outside the District of Columbia."

Mr. KAHN. That leaves the words "or elsewhere" in there?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman can strike those out afterwards. Does the gentleman accept the amendment?

Mr. KAHN. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the words "or elsewhere" are left in there——

Mr. KAHN. I am going to move to strike them out.

Mr. BLANTON. Otherwise the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana would be unavailing.

Mr. KAHN. I am going to move to strike them out.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 12, at the end of line 13, strike out the word "or," and at the beginning of line 14 strike out the word "elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 13, at the end of the line, strike out the word "or," and the first word "elsewhere," in line 14.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee with reference to the matter to which I reserved the point of order in lines 23 and 24, page 13, I desire to withdraw the reservation of the point of order, the gentleman from California having indicated his willingness to accept the proposed amendment. I withdraw the reservation and offer an amendment.

Mr. BRIGGS. If that includes the reservation against the whole paragraph I want to renew it to the last proviso of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. BRIGGS. No. I just reserve the point of order until the amendment may be offered.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Texas merely reserves the point of order against the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 23, after the word "for," insert the word "such"; and in line 24 strike out the words "at which printing" and insert the word "as."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, that will leave the language, "for printing and binding, including supplies, equipment, and repairs for such Air Service printing plant at stations outside of the District of Columbia as may be authorized in accordance with law," bringing it in conformity with section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919.

Mr. KAHN. The amendment is perfectly satisfactory.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in connection with the last proviso. I want to ask him what effect this last proviso is going to be—

That hereafter the Army Air Service shall control all the aerial operations from land bases and that Navy aviation shall have control of all the aerial operations attached to a fleet.

Does that mean all naval stations along the coast of the United States are now going to be turned over to the Army for operation?

Mr. KAHN. No. The immediate effect of that provision, we were told, would be a saving of about $10,000,000 a year. The intention is that there shall be no duplication of work as between the Army and the Navy. The Navy shall operate in connection with our fleet. The Army aviation shall operate in all land operations. The committee was reliably told that a very material saving in the expense of the aviation services could be made by the adoption of this provision.

Mr. BRIGGS. Was there any objection raised by the Navy Department to this provision at all?

Mr. KAHN. No; not that I have heard of.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does that in other words mean the operation by the Army of the land bases of the naval stations along these various coasts?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think it contemplates anything of that kind.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the establishment, enlargement, and improvement of public buildings and facilities at aviation stations, schools, and depots, $245,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 13, insert "for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation or otherwise, of 640 acres of land more or less and the appurtenances thereunto belonging, situate in Macomb County, State of Michigan, now occupied by the Air Service of the Army as an aviation station and known as Selfridge Field, not to exceed $190,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the Government has spent about $2,000,000 on this proposition. We had a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs this morning of representatives from the War Department. They stated that this land should be purchased by the Government and retained for the training of the aerial service of the War Department. The option expires June 1 next, and if anything is to be done it should be done in this bill at the present time.

Mr. BLANTON. It went before your committee, and they did not see fit to put it in, and therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS rose.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman desires to discuss the matter, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee that visited the aviation fields last summer did not have an opportunity to visit this particular one. It was on our program, but, for lack of time, we could not make it. But this field has some particular advantages that other fields of the country do not have. First, it is in the center of a great labor market. There are several miles of bay frontage on the field. It is a shallow bay, 4 or 5 feet deep, where they can practice with the guns without doing damage to the citizens or the property in the country. While I do not know enough about the system to talk about it intelligently, I understand that by reflecting the sun onto the water they use that as a target at which to shoot from the airplanes. I have had the process explained to me, but, as just stated, I do not know enough about it to explain it intelligently, but there is not another field in the country that has that advantage, nor is there another field where there is water on which to shoot and over which to fly.

It is conceded by aviators that it is not as dangerous for the fliers for the planes to drop into shallow water, 4 or 5 feet deep, as it is for them to drop on the ground. I believe it is the general consensus of opinion in the committee—I am not speaking for the committee, because it has not acted upon the question officially during the consideration of this bill—but I do venture the assertion that it is the general consensus of opinion among the members of the committee that this field is a good proposition. And I will say in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that the committee passed it without giving it any consideration, as this item was contained in the Army camp purchase bill that passed this House some time ago. As I recall, a fight was made against it by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia], and it was stricken from the bill. I think the House made a mistake at that time in striking it out. I think the gentleman would make a mistake by urging his point of order at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think if this item was not of sufficient importance to appeal to the membership of our Committee on Military Affairs, that has just framed the bill and left this item out, it ought to appeal to the Committee of the Whole House, that knows nothing about its merits, and when there has been no chance whatever to investigate or pass upon it?

Mr. FIELDS. Let me repeat what I said a moment ago, that the committee has acted upon it. They placed it in a bill that passed the House a few weeks ago.

Mr. BLANTON. They did not place it in this bill.

Mr. FIELDS. But I insist, in view of the importance of the Air Service, which, in time to come, and probably in my time and in the time of the gentleman from Texas, will be the most important branch of the Army and the Navy, in view of the possibilities of the Air Service and our inefficiency in that service, that the point of order should not be made, because I think this is important to the Air Service.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Will the gentleman state during his remarks what part of the State of Michigan this is in?

Mr. FIELDS. As I recall, it is in the southeastern part. If I am not correct, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] will correct me.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wanted to give some information, if the gentleman will withhold his point.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask why it was not placed in the bill by the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is what I want to state.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will withhold the making of the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. As has been stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], this Selfridge project was passed on and approved by the Military Committee and placed in H. R. 8819, which was considered by this House a month or two ago. It was stricken out of that bill on the floor because of objections made by Members of the House at that time, and it has not been passed upon since by the Committee on Military Affairs. But the arguments then, to include it in the permanent list of air stations, were considered by the committee, and the arguments are good to-day. For the information of the House, it ought to know that the present value of the improvements on the property is $2,825,000. This construction is on leased land. It will take $190,000, as asked for in this amendment, to buy the land the Government has under lease. If we do not buy this land, it means we will have to sacrifice this $2,000,000 worth of buildings that are now on this leased ground. If they are sold, they will bring about 10 per cent of their cost. Selfridge Field was included by the Chief of Aviation in the chain of aviation stations which were approved to go across the country from north to south and east to west. It is a part of the approved chain of stations; and under the circumstances—and I believe it is the opinion of the majority of the committee—the department should be authorized to go ahead and buy this land on which these improvements have been made.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman please state for information the character of these buildings, especially as to their permanency?

Mr. FIELDS. They are the standard aviation buildings.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is correct. They are of the regulation unit type, so called, and are of a much more permanent type than the other Army cantonments that the gentleman is perhaps familiar with. They cost twice as much as the average Army cantonment buildings, and will last 10 to 20 years.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. And as to salvage value——

Mr. ANTHONY. That is about 10 per cent of the cost.

Mr. FIELDS. In a nutshell, this is the situation: We have spent $2,300,000 on this field. We can secure a title to it for an additional expenditure of $190,000. It is worth more than $190,000 in agricultural value, and the testimony before our committee this morning was to the effect that it could be sold for an amount in excess of $190,000 as a real estate proposition. If we expend this additional $190,000, the Government acquires title to the property; if we do not, we lose our $2,300,000, except what we can get out of it for salvage value, which will probably be 10 per cent of the amount invested.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this country getting back to a peace basis just as soon as possible, not by resolution but by real action of the House, and I make the point of order to save this $190,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROSE). Does the gentleman from Michigan concede the point of order? The Chair is ready to rule, overruling the point of order on the ground that during the war legislation was enacted and is yet in force——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chairman permit me an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not a member of this committee that will claim this is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will wait until the Chair gives the reason for his ruling.

Mr. BLANTON. This is to buy land. This Committee on Military Affairs has no authority whatever to bring in such legislation as this. This is legislation on a bill where they have no authority to insert it.

Mr. FIELDS. The authority has already been given and the option taken.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee admitted they had this in a former bill and that it went out on a point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. It did not go out on a point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. For the information of the gentleman I will say that it went out of the bill because it was shown that the title of the land was in question and in the courts. That was the basis of the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman consider this is not subject to a point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think so, but I am not a parliamentarian.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, unauthorized, and not germane to this bill.

Mr. FIELDS. It is only carrying out legislation heretofore enacted. Legislation was enacted authorizing the Government to acquire this land, and an option was taken on the land, which option holds good until July 1. The legislation that authorized the Government to acquire this title is still in force, and I maintain that it is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair could almost adopt the language of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] in overruling the point of order.

There can be no doubt that during the war legislation was enacted and is yet in force authorizing the Secretary of War to acquire, by purchase, donation, or by condemnation, such land sites throughout the United States as are immediately necessary for the permanent establishment of aviation schools, aviation posts, and experimental aviation stations and proving grounds for the United States Army. For this authority let me cite the act of July 9, 1918, as also legislation previously enacted thereto. Since the legislation referred to has not yet been repealed the rights and powers above mentioned are yet lodged in the Secretary of War. A similar situation arose on April 13, 1920, when the Chairman [Mr. SANFORD, of New York] held that an appropriation for the acquisition of land necessary for aviation stations in connection with coast defense was in order as an amendment to the fortifications appropriation bill, since under existing war legislation the Secretary of War was granted power to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, land for aviation purposes. The Chairman, by reason of existing law and decisions thereunder, therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that it is not germane to the paragraph which precedes it. It must be germane to the paragraph—an amendment offered from the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of officers: For pay of officers of the line, $18,265,230.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that this item does not contain the proposed increase in pay for the officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and other service corps, but I understand that the conference committee is busy, and will possibly soon make some report to the House, perhaps of a compromise nature, although the Wadsworth pay bill, providing for a $59,000,000 increase in pay, is being considered.

The impression probably prevails in this House that nearly all of our Regular Army officers are West Point men. That is not true, for since the West Point Military Academy was established, 118 years ago, there have been less than 5,000 graduates, and it is safe to say that there are less than a thousand graduates from West Point to-day in the Regular Army.

Now, since the armistice was declared there have been 2,452 resignations of officers from the Regular Army, and there were 100 in the month of March, due primarily and emphatically to the fact that these officers can not maintain their families on the small pay received from the Government.

Reference has been made in this House to the fact that these officers do not need an increase of pay since they received promotion from, say, a captaincy to a majority, or even to a brigadier generalship, in time of war. But it is a fact, according to statistics obtained from the War Department, that while there were in promotions 72 per cent during the war of all officers in the Regular Army, since the armistice was signed they have all been demoted except 25 per cent, and these men will gradually be demoted at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, this year.

As to enlisted men and noncommissiond officers, there have been 11,083 desertions from the Regular Army from March 1, 1919, to April 5, 1920. I refer here to the necessity of increasing the pay, too, of the enlisted men, and I charge that these desertions are resultant from the fact that the enlisted man is not getting the pay he deserves.

There has never been a time since the West Point Academy was established when there were so many vacancies at this academy as there are now. Then the statement was made by the majority leader on the floor a few weeks ago that this increase in pay of officers would amount to an increased appropriation of $100,000,000. He did have the grace a few days later to revise the figures to $75,000,000; but, as a matter of fact, the Wadsworth bill provides for an increase in appropriation of $59,000,000, and that includes increased pay for all the officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service.

I hope that the House will take action at least before adjourning, and the sooner the better, because every day the Army and Navy are becoming more and more demoralized on account of inadequate pay, and said officers can not support their families and subsist on the small salaries paid them.

I may say for the benefit of the House that I have consulted the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs within 10 minutes and he assures me that something will come out of conference, or a compromise bill will be offered, carrying an appropriation of $40,000,000 to take care of this emergency.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLNEY. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Can the gentleman tell how many vacancies there are at West Point?

Mr. OLNEY. I can not accurately state at this time. I should like the information from the gentleman from New York, if he has it.

Mr. PLATT. I understand from The Adjutant General's office—and my information was received some weeks ago—that there are about 770 vacancies at West Point, and that from the regular examinations which have been held the number of vacancies to be filled will not be more than half that number. That is to say, as the law stands at the present time, because the statistics show that the percentage of vacancies filled does not exceed 50 from the examinations. Last year it was only 38.4. The year before it was 45.

Mr. OLNEY. Comparing that statement with the fullest capacity of the West Point Academy, which I think is about 1,300 men, it shows a deficiency of about 50 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman think something ought to be done to remedy that situation?

Mr. OLNEY. I certainly do. I think the bill proposed by the gentleman from New York would remedy the situation.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TOWNER). The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think it is only fair to say that the vacancies at West Point at this time are due largely, at least, to the feeling of the people generally that they want to get away from military matters.

It is not fair to charge that the boy of 17 or 18 or 19 is not entering West Point because the officers of the Army are not getting at this time as much money as they feel they should receive.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Not right now. I want to finish this statement. There has been a good deal of discussion about the increased pay of the Army, and my position in opposing it is not an enviable one. I have many dear friends in the Army, and their souls are wrapped around this proposition. I have no personal criticism of them to offer. It is natural that they should want an increase in pay and I do not blame them for getting it if they can. But, gentlemen, these continual increases in prices and everything else must come to a halt somewhere and at some time in this country. As the gentleman from Massachusetts pointed out, 72 per cent of the officers of the Army received increases of pay during the war, and until recently, by reason of increases in rank, many of them almost double and probably some of them more than double their pay prior to the war. Let us look over the figures and see what they are getting now, and how it compares with salaries in civil pursuits in this country.

They will tell you that a second lieutenant receives $1,700 per year. That, of course, is the minimum pay of a second lieutenant, but that would not be a fair basis of comparison, because the maximum pay of a second lieutenant is $2,380. The only way, therefore, to arrive at a just approximation of the pay of a second lieutenant would be to take the average between the maximum and the minimum, which is $2,040. To that is added his allowances, which make a total of $2,482 per annum that he receives.

They will tell you that the pay of a first lieutenant is $2,000. That is the minimum, but the maximum is $2,800. The average therefore is $2,400, and to that is added his allowance for commutation of quarters, heat, and light, which makes a total of $3,025.32. That is what a first lieutenant receives.

Ask Army officers what is the pay of a captain, and they will tell you it is $2,400; but that is only the minimum, the maximum being $3,360, which would make the average $2,880; and when we add to that the allowances that go to the rank of captain we have a total of $3,683.25.

They will tell you that the pay of a major is $3,000. That is correct as to the minimum, but the maximum is $4,000. Therefore the average would be $3,500, or his total average pay, including allowances, $4,579.02.

The minimum pay of a lieutenant colonel is $3,500 and the maximum $4,500. The average therefore would be $4,000. Add to that the allowances which he gets, and he receives $5,350.10.

The minimum pay for the grade of colonel is $4,000. The maximum is $5,000. The average there would be $4,800, and the allowances are added to that, making a total of $6,127.80. So, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, when we compare these salaries with the salaries received by men in educational institutions, by men in the medical profession, by men in the legal profession, by the superintendents and supervisors in the trades, in fact, in every civil activity in this country, I say that they compare most favorably with them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. What determines whether an officer is to get the minimum or the maximum or any intermediate figure between those two?

Mr. FIELDS. His pay increases 10 per cent with each five years of service up to 20 years.

Mr. OLNEY. And there is a maximum?

Mr. BARKLEY. You arrived at your average by adding the minimum and the maximum and dividing by two, did you not?

Mr. FIELDS. I took the 10-year period. They are increased each 5 years up to 20 years, and therefore the 10 years would be the average.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any way to tell what is the actual average pay of the officers in the various ranks, as they are now drawing their pay?

Mr. FIELDS. The only way by which an exact calculation could be made would be to take the Army pay roll and ascertain what each officer receives. As that would be a momentous task, I have prepared a table showing the minimum, the maximum, also the average pay of each grade. I insert that table at this point for the information of the House:

Pay and allowances of officers and proposed pay increase.

Rank and service.	Pay.	Commutation of quarters.	Heat and light.	Total pay and allowances.	Proposed 20 per cent increase.	Total proposed pay and allowances.

[1] No increase.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the men in the lower grades do not have increases in the way the men in the higher grades do. A colonel is limited with his "fogy" pay, as they call it, to $5,000 as a maximum. A major probably gets his commission after he has been in the Army 20 years.

Mr. FIELDS. A major is limited to $4,000 as a maximum, to which is added his allowances, which amount to $975.02.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; exactly.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I also desire to add here that in addition to the pay and allowances shown by the table previously referred to, officers receive their medical and hospital treatment without cost to themselves. They are also permitted to purchase their food and other supplies at Army commissaries at what they actually cost the Government at the factories, without any charge for transportation, which represents a saving to them of 42 per cent, as compared with similar purchases in the open markets of the country. I do not agree with the argument that is made that all these resignations in the Army are due to insufficient pay. During the war the officers had opportunities as never before to come in contact with business that they had not before come in contact with. They found business that was to their liking—that appealed to them more than the Army appealed to them—and it is true that many of them have gone out of the Army and are receiving larger salaries than they could receive or will ever receive in the Army. But that is true in civil life. There are a few men here and there of special ability—men of high skill—who far surpass the average in their earning capacity, but the only way to arrive at a just basis is to take the average ability and the average salary; and when we take the average ability of the Army and compare it with the average salaries in civil life, I doubt if there are many men in the Army who would resign to accept positions in civil life.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Just one thought: I realize the necessity for some more pay for the noncommissioned officers. They are the life of the Army; but I do oppose the proposition at this time to increase the salaries of the commissioned personnel, much as I dislike to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. How does the gentleman reconcile his statement that all of the salaries in civil life are less than the salaries in the Army with the statement that officers are resigning wholesale?

They certainly do not resign wholesale to get less salary if they are resigning on account of bettering their condition.

Mr. FIELDS. I say many of them would go out of the Army regardless of how much the Government might pay them, because the Government would never pay what they could earn in civil life, because of their fitness to perform some particular duty that they have found in civil life. I said also that we must take the average ability and compare it with the average salary in civil life, and when you do that I claim that my contention is correct.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think the resignations are so large in number that it refutes the gentleman's argument.

Mr. FIELDS. No; I think not. Then again, in the case of many officers their pay will be increased by an increase in rank, under the provisions of the Army reorganization bill now in process of enactment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous, except the appropriation for mileage to commissioned officers, warrant officers, members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, contract surgeons, expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law, shall be disbursed and accounted for as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk, and pending that I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 19, after the word "fund," add the following: "Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended in the payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall issue or cause to be issued any order, written or verbal, establishing social distinction, or preventing social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of said Army while not on military duty: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to an officer who shall have acted in obedience to orders from his superior."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I offered this amendment once before in this House and spoke in support of it. It was not adopted by the Committee of the Whole, but was adopted by the House on a motion to recommit, and I give notice now that if it is defeated by the Committee of the Whole I shall again offer it as a motion to recommit. You can go out through the country to-day and you will find that the thing that is causing the most unrest among the former service men, the thing that is poisoning the minds of the youth of the country most against the Military Establishment, is the social distinction that we find in the Army of the United States. I venture the assertion that the only place in the world to-day where the last remnant of Prussian autocracy is left in security is in the Army of the United States. There is not another army in the world where social distinction is recognized and practiced as it is in the Army of the United States. No one can say that France has not a fighting army. Yet social distinction is not practiced there to the extent that it is practiced in our Army. No man can say that Australia has not a fighting army, and yet you do not find social or class distinction practiced in the Australian Army.

Another thought. At the beginning of the World War this country changed its military policy from that of the volunteer to the draft system. It therefore reaches into every home in the land and brings from that home the bloom of its manhood and places it in the military service. You can not convince the fathers and the mothers of the youth that are taken from the homes of this country into the military service or the boys themselves that they are not as good, that they do not stand as high, socially, as any other class of men in the country. We all recognize the necessity of discipline; discipline is essential to the welfare of the private soldiers, but in this regard, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I maintain that discipline is overworked; in fact, class distinction is not a part of discipline.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Not now; I want to complete this thought. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], an honorable Member of this body, a former member of the Military Affairs Committee and a former officer of the National Guard and the Army of the United States, spoke on this subject on the floor of this House on the 27th of January last. I commend his sound doctrine to the House and to the commissioned personnel of the Army. If it should be followed by the Army it would save it from the evils that await it because of its practice of class distinction between officers and enlisted men, which is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and repugnant to our people.

Mr. TILSON said:

I have dwelt with considerable emphasis upon the question of the importance of matériel. In many respects it is more difficult to produce than trained personnel.

Neither personnel, matériel, nor both together will avail a nation anything when the crisis comes if that fine indescribable, intangible thing called the spirit of an army or of a nation be lacking or proves to be of inferior quality. It is of this I would speak to-day, of what threatens to destroy it in our Army and Navy and what may be done to prevent it.

Further on he said, and I commend this language to the House and to the Army:

The fathers and mothers of the land must understand that difference in rank in the Army is only the measure of responsibility, and that, whether their sons serve as high-ranking officers or as private soldiers, they equally fulfill the duty of citizenship. Class distinctions have no place in a democratic Republic like ours, whether it be in military or civil life. Difference in rank and pay is necessary in the Army and the Navy for the proper distribution of duties and responsibilities. Leaders must be placed in the proper position from which to lead effectively, and they must have power, authority, and compensation accordingly. In civil life the same adjustment is made in a slightly different way and with the same general result; but whether generals or privates, captains of industry or common laborers, all are equal before the law, all are equal before God, and there is not—and must not be—any place in America for classes, for class distinctions, or class spirit.

I heartily agree with the gentleman from Connecticut. With his experience in the military service on the one hand and his experience with the civil population on the other hand, coupled with his experience in this House, he foresees the danger that awaits the Military Establishment if this practice of class distinction is continued in the Army.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Let me finish this thought. A member of this House told me a few days ago that during his visit to France arrangements were made by Army officers to entertain him in an old royal palace, where American Army officers were billeted, and upon learning that he would spend that night at the palace he wired his young brother, who was a sergeant in the Army, to meet him there and spend the night with him. The sergeant came, but the Congressman was notified right away by the Army officers in charge that his brother could not even so much as enter the palace with him where they planned to give him a reception, because it was then the quarters of commissioned officers, and his brother was not a commissioned officer. The Congressman said to them in reply, "This is my brother; the same woman who brought me into the world brought him into the world; the same father who reared me reared him; and, while I am a Member of the Congress of the United States and he is only a sergeant in the Army, he is as good as I am. I refuse to accept your invitation unless I can take my brother with me, because I have not seen him for two years, and this is the only opportunity I shall have to talk with him while here." But his explanation availed him nothing. The officers advised him most emphatically that his sergeant brother could not enter. He then declined their invitation, and finally they provided for him and his brother an attic room, up next to the roof, a little 2 by 4 room, where they spent the night together. There were no hotel accommodations to be had, and the Member preferred the little attic room with his brother to the royal chamber that had been arranged for him down among the commissioned gods, where the private and the sergeant dare not enter. Mr. Chairman, I admire his grit and indorse his action.

The next morning when they went down for breakfast his brother was stopped at the door and informed that he could not enter, because it was the officers' mess hall. Oh, no; he could not enter; he must stop; he must withdraw, for the ground upon which he stood was holy ground that must not under any circumstances be invaded by a soldier who had given his services to his country and had pledged his life to the protection of its flag, unless perchance he wore upon his shoulder a bar, a leaf, an eagle, or a star.

I know of another instance where a Member of Congress was denied the privilege of taking his own son, who was a sergeant, on a day's trip on a train because commissioned officers constituted a part of the party occupying the train. The excuse was made that there was no room, which was untrue, as there was unoccupied space in the compartment occupied by the father of the boy who was refused admittance to the train. The soldier was on a furlough at the time, and there was no reason why he should not have gone with his father, whom he had not seen for many months, except that he could not ride with commissioned officers.

Mr. Chairman, I do not mention these particular instances in an effort to claim, or with even a thought of claiming, that the enlisted men who happen to be sons or brothers of Members of Congress should be given privileges not enjoyed by other men of their rank; far be it from me to make such a contention. I simply mention these cases because I have positive first-hand information to support my assertions. Nor are the two instances referred to all that I have heard of; I could not in any reasonable length of time explain nor even refer to all the cases of that character that have been brought to my attention.

I talked with a colonel of the Medical Department in France. I suppose from the course of his conversation that he had read the RECORD, where I made a fight against this practice. He explained to me that he at that time had a friend, a major, who previous to the war had been a sergeant.

He said:

Personally we—the major and I—are good friends. They have three children. I was their family physician when each of their children was born, but I never went to their home socially or permitted them to come to my home. Since he is a major his wife visits my wife and my wife visits his wife and I visit him and he visits me, but after the war is over and he is demobilized and goes back to a sergeancy I would not think of having him in my home.

Gentlemen of the House, that spirit has no place in the democratic Republic of America. I detest it beyond the power of words to express and I intend to fight it at every opportunity.

Now, as to the amendment. It does not often happen that such an order is issued as this amendment would prevent, but it does sometimes occur.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, I want the gentleman to tell us what the present orders are. Some of us are not familiar with these orders.

Mr. FIELDS. That is the point that I was about to reach.

Mr. McKEOWN. I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I agree with my colleague that there are some abuses, but I want to ask him in all candor if he does not think this amendment goes a little too far?

Mr. FIELDS. I do not. It does not go far enough. I had to draw it only as a limitation upon the appropriation, so that it would not be subject to a point of order under the rules. I wish it were permissible under the rules to make it more rigid. In answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] as to what orders are issued, I call to the attention of Members a case that occurred in Texas about a year and a half ago, where an order was issued by a major which purported to have been formulated by Gen. Buck, who was the commanding officer of the camp at which it was issued, which prevented officers and men from attending the same public gatherings, assembling in the same theater or the same church. When the order was called to the attention of Gen. Buck he sent out runners and had it taken down, and he denounced it in a telegram to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] as unauthorized and un-American. Yet the fact remains that an order, which Gen. Buck denounced as unauthorized and un-American, found its way out of the office of the staff of Gen. Buck, and was posted up before he knew anything about it. I also saw a photograph of a similar order which was posted at another camp and have heard of many others.

Mr. McKEOWN. What are the present orders now? Is there any regular order to that effect?

Mr. FIELDS. There are no general orders, and I am trying to prevent Army officers from at any time issuing such an order.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Not now. It will be contended, probably, by some that this would force officers to associate with men they might not want to associate with. It does not force anybody to associate with anybody else. It just prevents Army officers from issuing orders that would prevent free social intercourse between officers and men while not on military duty. There are some officers who would associate with their men if permitted to do so. There is nothing that would exert a more noble influence over the youth of the Army than for the Army officers, once in a while at least, to get down off their lordly perches and put their arms around them socially and take them into their confidence and into their association. Such action on the part of the officers would create and cultivate in the youth of the Army a feeling of mutual interest between them and their officers and would go a long way toward removing the smothered contempt which the private has for the officer but which he dare not mention while in the service where an officer will hear of it.

That statement, Mr. Chairman, may be startling to some Army officers, and perhaps to all of them, but nevertheless it is only a plain, straight-from-the-shoulder reference to a condition that exists; and if there are any officers who do not know that it does exist, I invite them to put on civilian clothes and go where they are not known as Army officers and talk with the men who have served in the Army. If that course were followed occasionally by Army officers instead of their continuous method of divorcing themselves from the men who see the Army from the private's viewpoint, they would know more about the private and the civil population than they now know, which knowledge would be a blessing to the Army in days to come.

Mr. Chairman, I do not submit these observations because of my hostility to the commissioned personnel of the Army but because of my interest in the Army and my firm conviction that the class distinction now practiced is poisoning the mind of the civil population against the Army, which will ultimately result in immeasurable detriment to it. It is in the hope that I may by my efforts and the efforts of those who join me improve conditions in the Army, and that such improvement will bring the Army and the civil population closer together, that I submit these remarks and exert these efforts.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman's amendment go so far as to prevent court-martial of a boy who neglects to salute an officer even when he meets him on the street?

Mr. FIELDS. No; it has nothing to do with that question at all.

Mr. KEARNS. I understand it does, and I hope it does.

Mr. FIELDS. It does not.

Mr. KEARNS. What is the necessity for a boy being required to salute some petty officer every time he meets him on the street?

Mr. FIELDS. Oh, that does not enter into this proposition, and I hope the gentleman will not take up my time further with it. And I will say in that connection in justice to the officer, for I want to be fair, that the officer is required to return the salute, and as there are more enlisted men than officers the officers get the worst of the requirement to salute.

I am sincere in offering this amendment. I think it ought to be adopted by this House as it was on the motion to recommit when I offered it near the close of the Sixty-fifth Congress. It ought to be adopted by the Senate and approved by the President of the United States. Some say the bill would be vetoed by the President if it should go to him with such an amendment. I do not believe it. To me it is inconceivable that the man who gave himself a national reputation, which led to an immortal name by his efforts to democratize the great institution of Princeton, would veto a bill because it carries a democratic provision like this. I hope this amendment may be adopted. I hope that the Army may begin now to realize that the officers are only men, and that man's social standing in this life is and should be measured by his conduct, and not by the amount of money he has in his pocket or the insignia that he wears upon his shoulders. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KAHN. It seems to me that from the reading of the amendment, as I heard it, it is not a limitation, but is a direction.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the identical amendment, with the exception that this contains the words "or verbal," was offered by me when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration in the last session of the Sixty-fifth Congress. A point of order was made and was discussed. The gentleman from Virginia, Judge Saunders, presiding over the committee, overruled the point of order. The amendment was not agreed to by the House and I offered it in the form of a motion to recommit. The point of order was again made and the Speaker overruled the point of order and it was voted upon and adopted by the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the point of order raised by the gentleman from California come too late?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; I reserved it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, notwithstanding the previous ruling, of which I was not aware until the gentleman from Kentucky spoke of it, that this amendment, with the language in which it is submitted, is clearly subject to a point of order. It is true that on its face it is a limitation, but in its matter it is a distinct change of existing law, a distinct mandate, ordering that an executive department shall proceed in a certain way.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do.

Mr. FIELDS. What existing law does it change?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is an affirmative direction.

Mr. FIELDS. There is no law authorizing the doing of the thing that is sometimes done and to which I object and which my amendment proposes to prevent. It does not change any law——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, it takes away the discretion already lodged by law with the officers. Now, I would like to call the Chair's attention to page 368 of the manual—I have not had an opportunity to examine the precedents quoted in Hinds—but here is one distinctly in point:

The limitation may not be applied directly to the official functions of executive officers.

That is precisely what this does. Furthermore I call the Chair's attention to the ruling by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] on the legislative appropriation bill of March 11, 1916, where he ruled—but such limitations must not give affirmative directions and must not impose new duties upon an executive officer.

Now, that is precisely, Mr. Chairman, what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky does. On these matters I am more concerned with the procedure of the House than I am concerned with the merit of the case. I offer no opinion whether the amendment of the gentleman would be wise or not, but I am opposed to legislation on appropriation bills, I do not care whether they are brought under the guise of the Holman rule or the rule of limitation. This is not a limitation at all; it is an affirmative direction to do just exactly what the precedents which I have cited say may not be done. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order of the gentleman from California is well taken.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, now the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] cites the rule which provides in substance that a provision is not in order which attempts to circumscribe the official action of an executive officer of the Government. This is clearly a limitation upon an appropriation. It does not attempt to interfere with the exercise or discharge of the official duty of an officer of the Army. It only places a limitation upon him if he shall attempt by written or verbal order to prevent social intercourse between officers and men while not on military duty. Now, there is no law authorizing the issuing of such an order. Therefore the contention of the gentleman from Ohio that it changes existing law is without foundation. There is no general order authorizing the issuing of such an order. Therefore his contention that the amendment will prevent the exercise of authority vested in him by the law is without foundation. It is clearly a limitation, Mr. Chairman, and it has been so held by a previous Chairman and the Speaker in a previous Congress, and I trust the point of order may be overruled.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The gentleman from Kentucky, I do not think, apprehended exactly the point I made. It is clearly giving affirmative direction, and it clearly violates the precedent that I quoted and ruled upon by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], that such limitations must not give affirmative direction and must not impose new duties upon an executive officer.

Mr. FIELDS. It does not give affirmative direction.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It gives affirmative direction, and if the Chair will note Hinds, volume 4, page 3957, it says:

The limitation may not be applied directly to the official functions of executive officers.

Mr. FIELDS. There is no authority in law or general orders authorizing the issuing of these orders that are sometimes issued and which this amendment seeks to prevent, and it is not an affirmative direction or a change of law or general orders.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair would hesitate and always does hesitate upon overruling a decision made by a previous presiding officer upon almost exactly the point before the committee. Especially is that true from so eminent an authority as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders]. The Chair has read carefully the decision of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders] in passing upon this proposition. Nevertheless the Chair shall overrule the decision without any hesitation. The Chair does not think it is a limitation, and to extend the Holman rule to such a case as this, the Chair thinks, would be beyond the province of the committee and a legitimate construction of the rule. This is based very largely upon this proposition. In this proposed amendment a penalty is imposed upon an officer for doing an act which is not prohibited by law or if prohibited by law imposes a new penalty for it. It says that "if any officer, who by any order, written or verbal, establishes social distinction"—who is to determine whether a social distinction has been established? It would take probably a court-martial to do so. "Or preventing social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of said army while not on military duty." Who is to determine whether or not social intercourse has been prevented? Is the officer to be deprived of his pay without a trial? Who is to say whether or not such a condition exists? Clearly such propositions as that can not be considered as a limitation within the meaning of the rule. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCIDENTAL EXPENSES.

Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, when ordered to active duty; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster Corps, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days; as additional school-teachers during the school term at post schools, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for overseers of general prisoners at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners, and for the United States disciplinary barracks guard; of extra-duty pay at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of War for mess stewards and cooks at recruit depots who are graduates of the schools for bakers and cooks, and instructor cooks at the schools for bakers and cooks; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to officers or agents of the Quartermaster Corps to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster Corps, including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government, and the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees of the Quartermaster Corps, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States disciplinary barracks, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $10 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement under court-martial sentence, involving dishonorable discharge; and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operation of the Army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $10,000,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask about the condition of the disciplinary barracks. That is to say, how many men are now confined in the disciplinary barracks and what number are expected to be continued in such barracks as shown by the hearings?

Mr. KAHN. As the gentleman knows, the Government has three disciplinary barracks—one at Leavenworth, Kans., one at Alcatraz, in the Bay of San Francisco, and one on Governors Island, N. Y.

As I recall, there are about 600 in the disciplinary barracks at Alcatraz, and I think there are 1,500 at Leavenworth. I will say to the gentleman that the disciplinary barracks were established about seven or eight years ago for the purpose of trying to allow a man who had deserted or who had been convicted by court-martial of some offense to redeem his record in the Army. By being sent to a disciplinary barracks the man is given a chance to work out his salvation. He is allowed to work every day. They make an effort to teach him a trade. He also has to do the usual amount of military duty. But in the end, if he performs his duties faithfully during the period for which he is sentenced to the barracks, he gets an honorable discharge from the Army.

Mr. McKEOWN. Are the men who are sent to the disciplinary barracks sent for any specific period of time under court-martial sentence?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Then if they make good, under these rules, they are permitted to be restored to rank and honorably discharged from the Army?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. McKEOWN. A great many of these men who are now in the disciplinary barracks were thrown into the Army by reason of the emergency?

Mr. KAHN. I should imagine, because of the largely increased number, that that is true.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman know about what average is being discharged from the disciplinary barracks now?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not.

Mr. McKEOWN. If a man does not make good, he is compelled to stay there the whole length of time for which he is sentenced by the court?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly so. But if a man shows a disposition to make good and does make good, he gets an honorable discharge from the Army, so that he can resume his position in civil life without a stain upon his record.

Mr. McKEOWN. Complaints have come into my office from persons in the disciplinary barracks about some trouble at Fort Leavenworth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. I would like to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] that the Army officers who have charge of this branch of the military service inform me that the disciplinary barracks proposition has worked out remarkably well and to the advantage of the soldier and the country.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I note in the preceding paragraph and in the paragraph last read a great number of articles are enumerated. I suppose that an estimate was furnished for each article to the committee?

Mr. KAHN. I believe they are itemized in the hearings.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. There is no restriction, however, as to what part of the $32,000,000 or the $10,000,000 might be spent for any one thing? There is no limitation put upon it?

Mr. KAHN. No. That is done purposely. I want to say to the gentleman that in the War Department itself allotments are made of the entire amount appropriated, and these are carried on the books of accounts under each particular item enumerated in the bill. It frequently happens that conditions which no one can foresee make it necessary to use a little larger sum for some particular item, and the War Department can also get along with a less sum for some other item. And so these different amounts during the year have to equalize themselves, and they do equalize themselves. It has been found that it would not be good for the Army or good for the service to limit the amount for each particular item rigidly in the bill. It is deemed advisable to allow some latitude to the administrative officers of the department.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I can understand that very well. But I think there should be some mobility in the administration of the funds. But I have wondered, if the War Department cared to do so, and they thought extra quarters or extra developments were needed, that they might transfer a larger proportion than was really absolutely necessary and then trust to a deficiency bill to take care of what has been distributed unwisely. How is that taken care of?

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will refer to page 25, line 14, he will see that new construction is limited in the paragraph to just one project:

That not to exceed $52,230 may be used in the erection and completion of an ice and cold-storage plant at Schofield Barracks.

Now, the evidence before the committee was that the ice has to be transported from Honolulu to Schofield Barracks, a distance of 12 miles. The weather there is usually pretty warm, and I think the testimony was to the effect that about 10 or 15 per cent of the ice that was being transported melted on its way to Schofield Barracks. The contention was made that this ice plant would pay for itself in the course of two or three years. Therefore the committee allowed that one piece of construction in the bill. The committee would not allow other construction that was suggested, and, of course, the uses that will be made of these sums are so numerous the War Department could not possibly use any considerable sum for construction without experiencing some difficulty.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. They could not divert it beyond the intention of the committee?

Mr. KAHN. That is it, exactly.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to state to the gentleman from Indiana in connection with this matter that there was a proposition submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs asking us to put in a provision that would make it possible to take 10 per cent of one appropriation and add to another appropriation; that is, 10 per cent of an original appropriation could be added. For instance, on an appropriation of $50,000 for construction, to make it plain, we could take $5,000 from another——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would like one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKENZIE. In order to give a little more leeway. But the committee felt that inasmuch as under the reorganization bill the entire language of the appropriation bill will have to be changed, it would be unwise at this time to do that. So they will have to be compelled to get along with the old law, with limited ability to transfer from one appropriation to another.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to line 24, page 26, of a donation of $10 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner when he is released from confinement. Does that mean a prisoner who has been sent, for example, from Fort Sam Houston to Leavenworth?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Or Alcatraz Island?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Let me understand. Of course, I anticipate that the chairman will say that this is the existing law.

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman that up to the appropriation bill of a year ago the amount allowed was only $5 and the committee thought it was proper to increase it to $10.

Mr. BEE. With all due deference to the chairman, it strikes me that to turn a man loose from Leavenworth or Alcatraz Island or Atlanta, Ga., after serving a year or two in the penitentiary and giving him a $10 bill and saying, "There is the street," is equivalent, so far as any good purpose is served to the man, to throwing the $10 away. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that there ought to be some way, where a man has served his sentence, has been punished, and served his time, and paid his debt to his Government for the offense committed, by which he should be permitted to be returned either to his home or to some place as he chooses as his future destination, if you expect that man thereafter to assume the place of a good citizen. Very often a man who has been in a penitentiary does not desire to return to his home, but in other instances he may. But, in any event, to turn a disgraced man out of the penitentiary and give him $10 and let him shift for himself, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred—and I will take the experience on that point of any man who has ever held the office of prosecuting attorney or has ever made the study of criminology at all—in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the penitentiary walls receive him again in a limited time. I wish just to call this to the attention of the gentleman in the hope that hereafter a provision may be made to give a man a chance, like the child who has offended against the fireside to return to that fireside with some degree of respect.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inform the gentleman from Texas that there is a provision in this bill to allow a discharged man from the penitentiary the sum of $25 for a suit of clothes.

Mr. BEE. He would have to have that, because he can not wear the others when he comes out.

Mr. KAHN. Up to the time this bill was reported the amount allowed—and the same amount is allowed until the present law is changed—was $15; but we have increased the amount to $25; and in discussing the matter in the committee, without desiring to violate any confidences as to the action that was taken by the committee, I used practically the same argument that the gentleman from Texas has used with reference to this personal allowance of money. I feel that when a man has served a term in the penitentiary in expiation of some offense, the country owes him at least an opportunity "to come back" and to get on his feet.

Mr. BEE. That is the reason why I called the attention of the gentleman to this matter, because it does not give him that opportunity at present.

Mr. KAHN. I recognize the fact that this is a very small sum, but I am told that the men in the penitentiaries also have an opportunity to earn some money of their own while they are serving.

Mr. BEE. I will say to the gentleman from California that in that respect I have always thought that where a State penitentiary undertook to manufacture any kind of articles the man manufacturing them ought to be allowed so much a day, to be used as an accumulating fund for his benefit when he is released. If he is a criminal, he will come back. If he is simply a man who has offended thoughtlessly, he will take his place in the world again.

I desire to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, on page 26, line 23. I desire to strike out, in line 23, the words "or citizen," so that it will read "in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer for such service and expenses."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not doing that merely for the purpose——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEE: Page 26, line 23, strike out the words "or citizen."

Mr. BEE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not doing this solely with the purpose of completing the thought that is in my mind in connection with this, neither shall I urge this amendment if the Committee on Military Affairs in charge of the bill do not deem it advisable; but I wish to take the opportunity to make a very brief statement in reference to this subject. I admit the heinousness of the offense of desertion on the part of a soldier from the United States Army in time of war. It is deserving, unquestionably, of death, and in time of peace it is deserving of punishment. But I do object to the idea that a citizen, not an officer of the law, shall be paid money for his assistance in bringing to justice a violator of the law. It is not done in civil life.

Let me say to the chairman of this committee that I speak of that which I know. As I stated before, when I was a very young man I was a clerk in the judge advocate's office in San Antonio, Tex., and I knew men who had been in the Army, and who had quit the Army, whose systematic business it was, by enticement, by deception, to worm themselves into the confidence of men who had deserted from the Army and had married and were raising families in an honorable occupation, giving them no chance to come back and make their explanation to the Government, but for $50 to betray those men. I myself as a clerk have paid into the pockets of one man in my city $800 in one year which that one man made by working himself into the confidence of these men, destroying their families, and putting them in the penitentiary, one of whom afterwards had his arm blown off in a mine where he was working.

Unless the gentlemen of the committee in charge of the bill think it is not advisable I shall insist on my amendment. We ought not to sanction the practice, either in civil or military matters, of civilians, not officers of the law, fattening themselves upon the misery of somebody else and fattening themselves out of the Treasury of the United States, because they are turning traitors against their comrades; and I say that, Mr. Chairman, without any extenuation of the man who deserts from the Army. We have got plenty of officers. God knows we have got more officers in this country, almost, than we have of anything else, and they are alert, and I have no objection to the officers of the law performing their duty, to go out of their way and secure some character of reward. But I am unalterably opposed to the idea of having citizens turn themselves into spies and traitors in order to make $50 as blood money from a man who has violated the law. Unless the gentlemen of the committee think this is necessary in the administration of justice I shall insist on my amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I confess that there is a great deal of merit in what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] has said. I rather think that the language at times leads to blackmail. Some citizen, learning that an ex-soldier who had deserted is living in a community and is trying to lead a decent life, bleeds that ex-soldier for money in order to remain silent upon the subject. The fact is that this language has been in the Army bill for many years.

Mr. BEE. Yes; I know that, because it was in the law when I was a young man.

Mr. KAHN. I myself believe that all these matters should be taken up with the officers of the Army who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law, with the view ultimately and soon of rewriting the language of the appropriation bill. In the committee we discussed the matter only recently, but in view of the fact that the Army reorganization bill is likely to become a law before the adjournment of this session the committee thought it best to bear with the ills we have for another six months, until with the new information that we will get on the subject of the appropriation bill we can make a revision all along the line.

Mr. BEE. Is it contemplated to bring in a revision of the court-martial law of the Army?

Mr. KAHN. I hope to be able to do that also before the end of this session.

Mr. BEE. I think we ought to do that.

Mr. KAHN. A subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs has been appointed for that purpose, and I am informed by the chairman of that subcommittee that hearings will be held very soon.

Mr. BEE. In view of the fact that it may perhaps disorganize existing conditions, and in view of the probability of a revision of the court-martial proceedings, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment, merely calling the attention not only of the committee but of the country to the fact that the kind of organized blackmailing to which I have called attention is an evil that ought not to be allowed to exist either in civil or military matters.

Mr. KAHN. I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 25 of the bill it speaks of extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty under the direction of the Quartermaster Corps, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days. Who fixes the amount of the pay for the soldiers who do that extra work?

Mr. KAHN. The law fixes the amount.

Mr. LITTLE. Where?

Mr. KAHN. There are laws on the statute books. That is another indication of the necessity for a codification of the military laws.

Mr. LITTLE. There is plenty of reason for that.

Mr. KAHN. The amount of extra duty pay, as I recall, is fixed by statute at 50 cents a day.

Mr. LITTLE. Does not the gentleman think that overpays them a little?

Mr. KAHN. They can earn about $15 a month by extra duty.

Mr. LITTLE. Who is it that decides whether a given company or soldier shall go to work on the road?

Mr. KAHN. No soldier is compelled to labor at any time. It is simply optional with the soldier if he desires to earn 50 cents a day. When the commandant of the force that he is with makes the announcement that he would like to secure so many soldiers to do this additional work, the soldier may accept it or refuse it, as he chooses.

Mr. LITTLE. To what extent is it done? How many of them respond?

Mr. KAHN. The information before the committee is that the number of the recipients of extra duty pay is gradually dwindling, and that the Army is drifting out of that custom.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that I am with him on this proposition, especially if he will raise it a bit.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Roger Sullivan is dead. That message wired from Chicago yesterday, seen in to-day's newspapers by millions of readers, carries wherever he was known regret and sorrow. Those throughout the Nation who admire "the self-made man," that type, distinctly American, who overcomes all obstacles, rises from obscurity through his own ability, industry, and energy to a merited position of eminence, regret the passing of this great man. To the people of Illinois and of Chicago who have long considered him their foremost citizen; who have an honest pride in his career; who appreciate him for his qualities of mind and heart; who know better than he really wished them to know—he never advertised his kindnesses—of his liberality and generosity, for as he grew successful he became correspondingly more solicitous for those on whom fortune had not smiled; his death brings sorrow. Alike in the stately mansion on the Lake Shore Drive and in the more humble home elsewhere throughout the city of Chicago—for human nature, despite the accidents of place or position, is the same—his loss will be lamented.

This is neither the time, nor have I the disposition in these first hours of my own grief over the death of my friend, to detail his characteristics. But, Mr. Speaker, one fact will serve as an index. I have known him more intimately than many men and have enjoyed his confidence. Yet only recently did I learn accidentally, and not from him, that he was educating at his own expense a number of young men, who otherwise would probably be unable to go to college or receive an education. This, Mr. Speaker, was characteristic of him, to do good quietly and to do it unselfishly. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, before we leave this paragraph I desire to make a statement, and I would like to inform the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] that upon looking into the matter since it was first called to my attention—about the transportation of discharged prisoners—I find that the War Department under existing law is allowed to furnish that transportation, where a prisoner has served a period of over six months. He receives his transportation to his home, a suit of clothes, and $10 in money, which money is supposed to buy his meals while he is en route to his home.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman from California that that meets the question that I had in mind, and is satisfactory, because it does what we have contended ought to be done. It gives a man who comes out of the penitentiary a chance to restore his good name and citizenship.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman further that in some cases hardships have arisen where men did not serve six months. It is probable that the Committee on Military Affairs will look further into the matter, so as to relieve a man who has had to serve time for some infraction of law in order that he may be given a chance to redeem himself.

Mr. BEE. Would you send away to a penitentiary a man to serve a sentence of six months or less, or would you confine him in the guardhouse at his post?

Mr. KAHN. He would probably be confined in the county jail of some county near where his conviction occurred. And yet after his discharge from the county jail he might have to travel three or four hundred miles to get to his home.

Mr. BEE. Since we have opened up this subject may I suggest to the gentleman from California that I do not believe that they ought to confine the rule to transportation back to the place where he was convicted. Very often a man finds it more compatible with good citizenship to go as far the other way, to get away from the scene of his disgrace.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, it is a very interesting subject, and I can assure my friend from Texas that when we again bring in a military appropriation bill the committee will have tried to get all the light possible upon the subject, with the view of doing some good for the unfortunate individuals to whom he has referred.

Mr. BEE. May I say to the gentleman from California that it has been suggested that if the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Texas were unfortunate enough to be transported away to a distant scene, far removed from their crime, their individual appearance would not enable them to conceal themselves, for obvious reasons, one quite different from the other. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORTATION OF THE ARMY AND ITS SUPPLIES.

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties, of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; for travel allowance to officers and enlisted men on discharge; for payment of travel allowance as provided in section 126 of the act approved June 3, 1916, to enlisted men of the National Guard on their discharge from the service of the United States, and to members of the National Guard who have been mustered into the service of the United States, and discharged on account of physical disability; for payment of travel pay to officers of the National Guard on their discharge from the service of the United States, as prescribed in the act approved March 2, 1901; for travel allowance to discharged prisoners and persons discharged from the Government Hospital for the Insane after transfer thereto from such barracks or place to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of the necessary agents and other employees, including per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4 for those authorized to receive the per diem allowance; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipment; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; for payment of wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for transportation of funds of the Army; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of the full amount of service be paid, $38,000,000: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on conditions that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provisions only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation of such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That nothing in the preceding provisos shall be construed to prevent the accounting officers of the Government from making full payment to land-grant railroads for transportation of property or persons where the courts of the United States have held that such property or persons do not come within the scope of the deductions provided for in the land-grant acts; for the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, drays, other vehicles, and motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans: Provided further, That $683,000 of the appropriation hereby made shall be available for additional pay for employees on harbor boats, quartermaster service, in lieu of subsistence: And provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act or any of the unexpended balances of any other act shall be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger or freight carrying vehicles for the Army except those that are purchased solely for experimental purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 10, after the word "purposes," insert "Provided, That no money herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of any motor-propelled vehicles nor for the hire, operation, maintenance, or repair of any motor-propelled vehicle, which shall be employed wholly or in part for personal, social, or similar use, or for any purpose except for military and official business."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from California about these railroad-grant payments to land-grant railroads. I notice it states that "pending the decision of the Supreme Court," and so forth. Has that matter been settled yet, and to what exent are we required to pay the railroads for transportation of Army supplies?

Mr. KAHN. These Supreme Court cases have been decided; but, of course, the language is put in here so as to enable the appropriation to be used in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court. The gentleman, I take it, is thoroughly familiar with the law regarding the land-grant railroads.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am not familiar with the final outcome of it.

Mr. KAHN. The general purpose of the land-grant law is to secure for the Government of the United States special rates for the carriage of officers and men of the United States Army and the supplies of the Army over these railroads. Of course, when we passed the antitrust laws and railroad-rate laws there was a question as to how far they applied to the Government. But the cases were taken to the Supreme Court and the decisions were rendered. We are still getting the benefit of these special rates. I believe the reduction made on the carriage of Government freight and the reduction made on Army supplies and for the transportation of officers and men of the Army is about 33⅓ per cent less than it is to the private individual.

Mr. McKEOWN. Did that apply to the war just ended?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. For a long time the Government held back some of this money, I think in the Treasury of the United States, awaiting the decision of the Supreme Court. When these decisions were rendered the entire matter was straightened out, and the Government is now receiving the benefit of these land-grant laws.

Mr. McKEOWN. And it is the purpose of this language to permit the Secretary of War to continue to get the benefit of those reductions?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly so.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATER AND SEWERS AT MILITARY POSTS.

For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situations require to be brought from a distance; for the installation and extension of plumbing within buildings where the same is not specifically provided for in other appropriations; for the purchase and repair of fire apparatus, including fire-alarm systems; for the disposal of sewage, and expenses incident thereto; for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing; for hire of employees, $4,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed the following sums may be used in the erection and completion of buildings, structures, or systems enumerated at the places named: $30,000 for a filtration plant at Fort Niagara, N. Y.; $60,000 for improvement of the water mains at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a misprint at the end of line 6, where the word "appropriations" should have a hyphen.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all the money hereinbefore designated under the titles "Subsistence of the Army," "Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps," "Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps," "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," "Water and sewers at military posts," "Clothing and camp and garrison equipage" shall be disbursed and accounted for as "General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last clause of this paragraph, line 21 to line 3 on page 33.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman desire to ask any question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. This is a most irregular and unusual proposition, to provide that the Quartermaster General shall use any and all of these funds as he sees fit.

Mr. KAHN. The language the gentleman refers to has been carried in the Army appropriation bill for probably 10 years. It has been found, or was found before we adopted this language, that frequently one appropriation would fall short about $1,000 during a fiscal year; another appropriation might be $2,000 ahead at the end of the fiscal year. Instead of coming in with a deficiency bill on the one item, the Quartermaster Department has been allowed for many years to use a surplus in any other item of the total number of items, so that the funds could be disbursed without delay at the end of the fiscal year. It has served a very good purpose.

During the war it was extended so that every item in the Army appropriation bill was made one fund. But in the appropriation bill passed a year ago we came back to the language of the original bill and restricted the matter entirely to the items which are under the direction of the Quartermaster General of the Army.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Under the language of this clause, page 33, "shall be disbursed and accounted for as general appropriations," it is possible under that language for the Quartermaster General to use all of this appropriation for different purposes for the accomplishment of one purpose.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It says "shall be disbursed and accounted for as in general appropriations."

Mr. KAHN. Possibly it might be done, I suppose; but the intention of the language is for bookkeeping purposes only. There has never been a violation of the intent of the language and I do not fear that there ever will be a violation of that intent.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have not nearly as much confidence as the gentleman from California has.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is a newer Member of Congress than I. When he has been here as long as I have been here and gets to know the officers of the Government he will probably have more confidence in them than he has to-day.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If I stay here sufficiently long to become hypnotized by them, perhaps that is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. Oh, well, the gentleman probably is more susceptable to hypnotism than is the gentleman from California.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That, of course, may be possible, though I wish to reserve a doubt as to that. I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order so that I may ask a question of the gentleman from California?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to ask the gentleman from California if he considers this language authorizes the various funds appropriated under this, or any part of them, that is not used for any one purpose, to be used for any of the other purposes? There is appropriated under the head of subsistence in the Army $32,000,000; regular supplies, subhead, $28,000,000; incidental expenses, $10,000,000; transportation of the Army and its supplies, $38,000,000; water and sewers at military posts, $4,000,000; clothing in camp, and so forth, $19,000,000. Those sums aggregate $131,000,000. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that only $31,000,000 is used under the subhead of subsistence in the Army. Could the amount not used under the gentleman's construction of this provision be used for regular supplies or for any of the other purposes as authorized by these subheads?

Mr. KAHN. If he had a deficiency in the first item that the gentleman has named, and he had a surplus in the second item, he could use, under this language, the surplus in the second item to make good the deficiency in the first item, but that is as far as he could go.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I think that is dangerous legislation. Every officer of this Government is in favor of lump-sum appropriations. This is practically a lump-sum appropriation of $131,000,000 that can be used for the purposes mentioned in this paragraph.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman that it has been in effect for the last 8 or 10 years and the discretion allowed has never been abused.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The language used evidently is legislation, not authorized by existing law, and the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

HORSES FOR CAVALRY, ARTILLERY, ENGINEERS, ETC.

For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for remounts, for officers entitled to public mounts for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian Scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Medical Department in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $1,500,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster Corps and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, at a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horse below the standard set by Army Regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies except for West Point Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place: Provided further, That not to exceed $250,000 of the appropriation hereby made shall be available for the encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army, including cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, and for the purchase of animals for breeding purposes and their maintenance: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, accept donations of animals for breeding and donations of money or other property to be used as prizes or awards at agricultural fairs, horse shows, and similar exhibitions, in order to encourage the breeding of riding horses suitable for Army purposes: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall report annually to Congress, at the commencement of each session, a statement of all expenditures under this appropriation, and full particulars of means adopted and carried into effect for the encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the military service.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the chairman of the committee the necessity for this appropriation for these horses, in view of the fact that at this time last year we were selling thousands, and we made an appropriation even when selling them last year of about two and a half million dollars for horses.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs was to the effect that they are between fourteen and fifteen thousand animals short of what they require for an Army of 175,000 men, for which we have appropriated.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have read the hearings this year. I have been unable to find any reference at all or any inquiry as to the horses they sold. I read the hearings of last year and they were selling horses and had sold 162,800 horses, which they had purchased for $250 each, for an average of about $150 or $170 each, and still had on hand some 70,000 or 80,000 horses, which they were selling off gradually. In the face of that fact, last year we appropriated two and a half million dollars for horses.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, it was advisable to sell the horses at that time, because the cost of feeding would have amounted to about if not quite as much as the horses could be sold for. But we did go into the matter quite fully this year, and the need for the purchase of additional animals, horses and mules. On page 767 of the hearings the gentleman will find that for an Army of 175,000 men——

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have read those hearings, but they do not say one word about the horses that were on hand or explain what they did with those other horses.

Mr. KAHN. They sold them. They sold, as I understand it, any surplus, and probably some have died, but at any rate for an Army of 175,000 men the War Department announces that it will require additional horses.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Last year I did not get the hearings until after this item in the appropriation bill had been passed. It carried $2,500,000 of appropriation for more horses, and at that time they had just finished selling 162,800, and still had 70,000 horses on hand, and it looked as if they just wanted to get a particular kind of horse that they might want somewhere else.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will indulge me, I think the amount carried in the bill as it left the House a year ago was $1,000,000. It was probably increased in the Senate to the larger amount.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But the committee this year seems to have followed the suggestions of the War Department, and yet last year they recommended to the House $5,000,000 for horses.

The House committee, instead of allowing that, cut it down to $1,000,000. Then the Senate raised it to $2,500,000, and I had the assurance of the chairman of the committee at that time that none of this money would be expended for horses unless absolutely necessary. I would like to know if all of the $2,500,000 was expended for horses, when they were selling horses and had some seventy or eighty thousand horses on hand. Did they use all of that money for horses?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know. This is the inquiry that was made:

For a strength of 175,000 there will be required to procure 10,293 Cavalry animals, at $225 a head, without replacements.
The CHAIRMAN. Is this amount on page 35, $7,988,000, the total amount you are asking for, or have you revised those figures?
Maj. HANNAY. They have been revised.
Col. SCOTT. We have estimates for armies of four different sizes.
Maj. HANNAY. The total for an Army of 175,000 is $2,727,000.

The committee cut that amount down to $1,500,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. But there does not seem to have been any inquiry made as to what they did with the seventy or eighty thousand horses they had on hand at the time the other appropriation was made, and the committee does not seem to have made any inquiry as to what they did with the two and a half million dollars which was allowed when the House appropriated only $1,000,000 last year. The House had to yield to the Senate and raise the amount to two and a half million dollars. It seems to me that they are spending too much money for horses, and are going out perhaps and selecting a particular kind of horse that they like and discarding the old horses.

Mr. KAHN. No; the committee went into those questions quite fully.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have been unable to find where they did.

Mr. KAHN. We had Col. Scott before us. He is very familiar with the horse and mule situation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He always wants more money than the committee thinks he is entitled to. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 13, after the word "thereto," strike out the figures "$1,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$500,000."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, I sent over for the hearings of last year. I did not know that we were going to reach this section so soon, but this question was raised last year, and it was shown by the hearings which were conducted by the Military Affairs Committee last year that the War Department had sold 162,800 horses for which they paid $250 apiece, and at the time the bill was pending in the House that they then had between 70,000 and 80,000 horses which they did not need. Yet that had to be brought out, and the committee, just in accordance with the old custom and old habit, brought in an appropriation for some more horses. The War Department wanted $5,000,000 last year, even though they had these horses on hand and were selling horses and mules for which they paid $250 for an average price of $150. Now, if they had 70,000 or 80,000 more than they needed on hand last year, what is the use of making an appropriation of $2,500,000? When I raised the question the chairman of the committee refused to let me have time to discuss it or, rather, to go back to the paragraph, it having been discovered after the paragraph was passed, but assurance was made at that time that the War Department would spend none of this $2,500,000 unless it were needed, yet after that it has been spent. I have read over the hearings and I have not been able to find where the committee made one single inquiry of any kind as to what was done with that $2,500,000, nor as to what was done with the money they received for the 70,000 or 80,000 horses they had that they did not need, yet they come in this year with an item that calls for 10,293 horses at $225 per head. I wonder what the 70,000 or 80,000 horses were sold for? Now, I assume that the War Department must be obsessed with the idea that when a horse gets so he does not hold his head in a chesty enough fashion and his nostrils do not distend they must discard that particular horse and go and buy another slick one that looks a little better to them. I believe it is time when we should cut down on this sum. I believe that $500,000 will be amply sufficient to take care of the situation until the department offers further evidence.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, the committee gave this particular subject careful consideration. The committee agrees with the gentleman from Texas that this Government ought to be economical in the matter of the purchase of horses, but I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to just one or two facts. We have authorized 17 regiments of Cavalry for the Army, and counting 1,200 to a regiment and figuring $200 apiece for a good cavalry horse, it would cost $4,080,000. Now, of course, we have a good many horses on hand, but during the winter season it pays the Government, in my judgment, to sell a good many of those horses rather than winter them over, and then buy again. I assume that the money received from the sale of those horses goes into the Treasury of the United States, but we felt after taking into consideration the fact that in the Artillery we are motorizing as much of it as possible—the 155's are motorized, and we are going to try out motorizing the field artillery, the 75's—but as years go on we will be able to reduce, perhaps, the expense of the purchase of horses and the maintenance of horses.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I want to know if the Cavalry hibernate during the winter and do not have any use for horses in the winter, by suspending training during the winter so entirely that they have to sell off the horses and buy them back again the next year?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I will say to the gentleman. Of course, the Cavalry does not hibernate, but in horses, as in everything else in the Military Establishment, we have a certain reserve, and ought to have a certain reserve on hand, but in certain localities of the country where Cavalry are not stationed and where we are using horses for transportation or horses for artillery, we could sell off a few hundred or perhaps a few thousand during the winter; not sell cavalry horses. I want to say that the Committee on Military Affairs, in the preparation of this bill, knowing well the condition of the country, has cut every item down to the bedrock, as we view it——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Including the item for horses, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will not be adopted, for, in my judgment, it will simply mean it would have to be added on in the Senate or face a deficiency——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if any inquiry was made—I have not been able to find it in the hearings—as to what was done with this two and a half million dollars of appropriation?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I do not know, and that I do not think any member of our committee knows. We have the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff and his staff officers in charge of the Government property in their hands, and if they sell property I assume, as honest men, they turn that money into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. I have a copy of the last year's hearings from which I desire to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, while I do not know anything about the wisdom of having different breeding horses and breeding stations and all of those things, yet I want to read the testimony that was taken last year by the Committee on Military Affairs, just an excerpt from the testimony which I have had copied.

It is the testimony of Col. Hardeman. And here is what he says:

Col. HARDEMAN. We propose to purchase 36,214 riding horses, 14,212 draft horses, 1,200 pack horses, 18,418 draft mules, and 2,397 pack and riding mules.
The CHAIRMAN. That is 72,000 animals in round numbers.
Col. HARDEMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. CRAGO. That estimate is based on a supposed army of 500,000 men, is it?
Col. HARDEMAN. Five hundred thousand men; yes, sir.
Mr. CRAGO. Suppose the Army is left at 200,000 or 250,000, you would have all the mounts you needed, would you not?
Col. HARDEMAN. We would have approximately the number we need now; yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. How are you off for Cavalry horses?
Col. HARDEMAN. We have sufficient for present needs. We have sufficient of all classes of animals for present needs.

* * * * * * *

Col. HARDEMAN. The horses averaged a little less than $90; and they will cost about $190 to buy them back.
Mr. WISE. So that both the mules and the horses will cost you, on the average, about $100 more than you sold them for?

I have the data, and, as I stated awhile ago, it shows that they had sold just prior to the appropriation bill of last year 162,800 horses; that they then had some 70,000 or 80,000 on hand that were subject to be sold; and that they were selling at $100 each less than they paid for them. Now, in the face of that, the Congress last year appropriated $2,500,000 for horses, based on an estimate made by the War Department that we were going to maintain an Army of 500,000 men. Now, they have sold those horses or done something else with them. They have spent that $2,500,000, or wasted it, or done something else with it, and are coming here with a request for $2,000,000 more, and the committee allows them $1,500,000 without asking them what they did with the $2,500,000, without asking them what they did with the 70,000 or 80,000 horses, and then they appropriate so much more money with which to buy more horses at a stipulated price. So if they are trying to economize on this side of the House, as they claim, it seems that the committee might at least ask the question when they are appropriating millions of dollars for horses, when the Government is turning around and selling them for $100 less than they paid for them per head. I believe it is wise to vote for this amendment cutting down this appropriation and require the War Department to bring up some more evidence before we allow them this large amount of money for horses. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am surprised at the lack of information the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has exhibited in reference to the need of horses in the Army. It is a well-known fact, demonstrated in the last 17 months, that proportionately it takes twice as many horses for the Army in peace time as it does in war time. An officer needs only one horse in war time, but in peace time he needs a work horse for the week day, and he needs a Sunday horse. He needs a fine saddle horse for himself and one for his lady love. Last Sunday I went, in company with a gentleman, over into Georgetown, and in that little stretch between the city of Washington and the bridge we passed six darkies, each of them riding one horse and leading another with a lady's saddle on. Coming back in a short time, we passed three or four of those that were then completely equipped and mounted. We have 2,000 Army officers in the city of Washington, where there is need for only 200, according to those who are qualified to express themselves, and each one of those officers has to have at least two of these fine saddle horses, which would necessitate 4,000 war horses at least in the city of Washington, whereas before the war we did not need one-fourth of that number. So it is perfectly apparent we do not consider the necessity for horses in war time as compared with the necessity for them in peace time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When those colored gentlemen were going past on those saddle horses, did they have a bill of sale or anything that showed the ownership of the horses, and was there evidence enough to hang a dog with to show that they belonged to Army officers?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There was not only evidence sufficient to hang a dog with, but to hang the men who were using the horses as well. There was a flunkey, dressed in military garb, riding one horse and leading another. The man's saddle and the bridles had on them the insignia of the United States Army.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Was he a flunkey or was he doing stable duty? Do you know anything about it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think my eyes deceived me, and I think I know a United States uniform when I see it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Was there any evidence as to whether they belonged to the Army or to private owners?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If all these horses belonged to the officers, what are they coming in and asking for $1,500,000 from the Government for?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does not the gentleman realize that across the river here there is a military post, where Cavalry and Artillery are stationed, and that those horses coming out of that post ought not to start an incident?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You can go out on one of these bridle paths around the Speedway at this hour, or at any time in the day, or into our public parks, and you will find any number of these gentlemen who are drawing down large salaries from the Government absolutely doing nothing but riding horseback with their lady love. But I am speaking in defense of the gentleman's committee; but he does not seem to appreciate it. I am trying to convince the House that his committee was well warranted in providing this item, because it necessitates more horses to accommodate these gentlemen in peace times than it does in war time. They must have something to do, and why not keep them riding? It is splendid exercise and much enjoyed by their lady companions. And I again say that I am amazed at the want of information displayed by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to read two or three questions and answers from the hearings in order that the record may be kept straight in connection with this matter. And I want to say before I read it that we were asked to appropriate $2,720,000 and we appropriated $1,500,000.

I asked Maj. Hannay how many animals he had, and he said that they had 118,000.

Mr. MCKENZIE. That includes mules and horses?

Maj. HANNAY. Yes; mules and horses of all classes—transportation and riding.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Do you buy the horses for the Army now?

Maj. HANNAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will you ask for the purchase of a considerable number this year?

Maj. HANNAY. Well, we will bring that up in the item for horses, Artillery and Cavalry. We will be asking for 14,599 horses under the Army strength of 175,000 men. That is not the total animals that will be required according to the table of organizations. It is cut down from that.

Now, that was his statement, but notwithstanding that we cut off one million two hundred thousand and some odd dollars.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I have no special interest in the horse controversy except in so far as it affects the Mexican border, where we have large Cavalry forces. Will the effect of this reduction be to reduce the Cavalry forces on the Rio Grande, which are needed to guard that Big Bend country and along down as far as Eagle Pass? Will that be the effect of it? It ought not to be done, even though there may be an Army officer in Washington who rides a Government horse out of hours. The Mexican border ought not to be left unprotected.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will simply say to the gentleman from Texas that the committee felt that, having in mind the Texas border, we had cut this appropriation as far as it was safe to go.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BARRACKS AND QUARTERS.

For barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration and office buildings, sheds, shops, and other buildings necessary for the shelter of troops, public animals, and stores, and for administration purposes, except those pertaining to the Coast Artillery; for construction or reclamation plants; for constructing and repairing public buildings at military posts; for hire of employees; for rental of the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, on duty with the troops at posts and stations where no public quarters are available; of barracks or authorized allowance of quarters for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men, men on duty where public quarters are not available, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve, retired enlisted men, and members of the enlisted Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty; for grounds for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and for buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops, for use as stables, storehouses, and offices, and for other military purposes; for the hire of recruiting stations and lodgings for recruits; for such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War; for wall lockers in permanent barracks and refrigerators in barracks and quarters; for screen doors, window screens, storm doors and sash, and window shades for barracks, offices, and quarters, and for flooring and framing for tents, and for the National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $10,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed the following sums may be used in the erection and completion of buildings enumerated at the places named—$404,256 for motor training school buildings at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; $600,000 for construction of officers' and noncommissioned officers' quarters, and the repair and remodeling of such existing buildings as may be available for such quarters at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. I notice you have a provision for building a motor training school building at Fort Leavenworth. What are they going to do with the Holabird camp, over near Baltimore, hitherto used for motor training purposes? The department has been engaged on a great building program during the war, and we have been hoping that this program would be completed, and we had supposed that there had been enough building, because the other parts of the country that try to get public buildings are not permitted to get them because of the condition of the Treasury. Yet here is a building program being carried out by the War Department, and we ought to know the necessity for it.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will allow me, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] is very familiar with that situation and can explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. Very well.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will refer to page 214 of the hearings he will find the whole matter covered by the reports of the War Department. There are three motor repair shops already provided—one in Texas, one in Georgia, at Camp Jessup, and one at Camp Holabird. This repair shop is intended to repair all the motor vehicles in the Central West, where it would be too expensive to ship the engines to these eastern and southern points. Moreover, it is intended to have much of the labor done by the prisoners at the disciplinary barracks. Instead of paying $8 or $10 a day for labor they will get the labor for nothing, and at the same time they will be teaching a useful trade or occupation to these prisoners who are undergoing confinement, and at the end of their imprisonment they will be turned out possessed of knowledge and skill in some gainful occupation. It is to take advantage of the labor in these repair shops.

The other item will go hand in hand with the item immediately below it, which provides a million dollars for the necessary buildings at the Infantry School at Camp Benning, Ga. As the gentleman knows, we have provided for basic training schools for the Infantry. The largest of them is at Camp Benning. We also have an Artillery school, as the gentleman knows, at Fortress Monroe. We have Field Artillery training schools at Bragg, Knox, and Sill, Okla. The graduates of these training schools all go to the staff schools at Fort Leavenworth for final training, where they develop a high type of officers who are capable of exercising field and staff command in time of war. Heretofore there have been about 150 officers in the Leavenworth school. When these men begin to go in for postgraduate education from these other schools there will be 350 officers who will have to be taken care of at Fort Leavenworth, and the Government must provide for these men if we are to work out the plans that they have adopted for this school system.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is to take care of the situation?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am not opposed to the appropriation, except to this extent: That I wanted to voice my sentiments by saying that I do not think it would be fair unless it is absolutely needed by any department of the Government at this time to do any extra building.

Mr. ANTHONY. This motor training shop will be an economy to the Government, and the committee cut the other item in half from what the recommendations of the War Department originally were for it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, D. C., for such building or buildings as may, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, be necessary and suitable for the use of the Army Medical School, including necessary heating apparatus, plumbing, water and sewer systems, electrical work, and roads and walks for the same, $500,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct the RECORD in regard to some figures I gave awhile ago. I gave them from memory, and in quoting Col. Hardeman's testimony as to the number of horses they had sold, I said they had sold 80,000 or 90,000. Col. Hardeman says they had sold altogether 162,800 animals. I read from his testimony as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. How many animals have you on hand now?
Col. HARDEMAN. On the 1st of July we expect to have 83,000 and some hundred.

Now, I want to read you what he says about the need of horses at that time. He gives the figures, including 36,214 riding horses, and so forth. I read:

Mr. DENT. Let him give those figures again.
Col. HARDEMAN. We propose to purchase 36,214 riding horses; 14,212 draft horses; 1,200 pack horses; 18,418 draft mules; and 2,397 pack and riding mules.
The CHAIRMAN. That is 72,000 animals, in round numbers?
Col. HARDEMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. CRAGO. That estimate is based on a supposed Army of 500,000 men, is it?
Col. HARDEMAN. Five hundred thousand men; yes, sir.
Mr. CRAGO. Suppose the Army is left at 200,000 or 250,000, you would have all the mounts you needed, would you not?
Col. HARDEMAN. We would have approximately the number we need now; yes, sir.
Mr. CRAGO. And unless we increase the Regular Army to 500,000 you would not need these horses?
Col. HARDEMAN. That is based on four combat divisions at war strength, 16 at peace strength, and a Cavalry division.
The CHAIRMAN. How are you off for Cavalry horses?
Col. HARDEMAN. We have sufficient for present needs. We have sufficient of all classes of animals for present needs.

Now, I just want to call attention to the fact that the estimate they made as to the horses they had on hand and as to the need for the 70,000 horses they had last year was based upon an Army that was supposed to be fixed at 500,000 men, and in answer to the direct question as to whether they would need any more horses if the Army was left at 200,000 men or 250,000 men, they said they would not need them. Now, we left the Army at less than 250,000 men. In other words, according to the testimony of their own expert they had all the horses they needed last year, and yet we appropriated $2,500,000 for horses for that period. What did they do with the $2,500,000 when they had just sold 162,800 horses? What did they do with that money when they had on hand 83,000 horses, which was a sufficient number for an Army larger than Congress allowed them for the coming year? Notwithstanding the reduction in the Army and the sale of horses the appropriation for the last year carried $2,500,000. The House made it only $1,000,000, but the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol increased it to $2,500,000, and the House yielded, and the bill as finally passed carried the $2,500,000.

When the cry for economy is going up from the Lakes to Gulf and from sea to sea, when you come down to the cold logic of the situation, just because some Army officer wants to discard a horse that has grown tired, and wants one with arched neck and distended nostrils, that he may ride with more grace and dignity, I do not see why the United States Government should go to that unnecessary expense. It seems to me we should not make the appropriation at the expense of the taxpayers of this country under such circumstances.

Mr. KAHN. Read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHOOTING GALLERIES AND RANGES.

For shelter, grounds, shooting galleries, ranges for small-arms target practice, machine-gun practice, field-artillery practice, repairs, and expenses incident thereto, including flour for paste for marking targets, hire of employees, such ranges and galleries to be open as far as practicable to the National Guard and organized rifle clubs under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $50,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 36, under "barracks and quarters," I see that the Secretary of War is empowered to expend $10,000,000 for certain purposes. I want to ask the chairman if he is authorized under this appropriation to buy additional land for drill purposes?

Mr. KAHN. He is not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am awfully sorry he is not.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEE: Page 40, line 25, at the end of line 25, add the following: "Provided, That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $88,880 for the acquisition of land as an addition to the Leon Springs military reservation in Texas, heretofore authorized, and now in use as a target range for Camp Travis, Tex."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Illinois reserve his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I anticipated that perhaps a point of order would be made; but let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that the situation is this: In 1917 the Government of the United States exercised the option of purchase on some 17,000 acres of land near Leon Springs, Tex., for a target range, appropriating $316,000 for the purchase of this land. The war came on and the land was occupied by the Army for a target range. Subsequently the option of purchase was not carried through, but the possession of the property by the Army was continued. In 1917 this land was taken over under an option of purchase authorized, the occupants of it were dispossessed, and the land used for a target range. Under the appropriation act of 1917 the sum of $316,000 was appropriated for the purchase of the land. In 1918, the land being still in use, the money had not been paid to the owners, and the sum of $316,000 was reappropriated.

Subsequently, in July, Congress passed an act stopping the purchase of any more land except that which was purchased prior to the armistice, but the Comptroller of the Treasury construed it to apply only to Army, National Guard, and National Army cantonments, and for that reason refused to permit this purchase to be carried out.

Thereupon the War Department released approximately 12,000 acres of the 17,000 acres that had been purchased, retaining 4,869 acres as a target range for Camp Travis, which is a division headquarters of the Army. They have a division there. The land to the right of Camp Travis is of a character which can not be used as an Infantry target range. The land west of this property is now used as an Artillery range. This piece of property connects up the property now used as an Artillery range and the property at Camp Travis used as a division headquarters, and is the only available place.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will bear in mind that they have there a balloon school and a flying school. In addition to that they have this division headquarters. They have an Artillery school at Leon Springs. This is the only piece of ground that is available for Infantry target practice. The owners of this property have been out of possession of it. The farmers who were occupying it for their herds and their fields have not had the use of the property for three years in May. The Government has not completed its purchase. They have been paid nothing whatever for it. It has been used for three years by the Army, and is now in use for a target range for the Infantry of Camp Travis. The result is that if the purchase of this land is not authorized the Infantry at Camp Travis will have no place for their Infantry target practice.

In the second place, these citizens of the United States who have surrendered their property under the option of purchase exercised by the Government under the appropriation made by Congress in 1917, and under an appropriation of Congress made in 1918, who have never been paid anything at all, find themselves totally without their property for three years. If this amendment is not put into the bill, they will be still further deprived not only of their property but of their money. I violate no confidence when I say that this amendment is not objectionable to the Committee on Military Affairs, because, as is my practice, I consulted them before I offered the amendment, and they recognized the merit and justice of the situation, both from the standpoint of the Government and from the standpoint of the citizen. I make that statement to the gentleman from Illinois, and I hope that he will not insist upon his point of order. The amount involved is $88,880. The Government has target ranges all over it and is using it. It is the only available place that can be used by this big division headquarters. When I make this preliminary statement to the gentleman from Illinois I hope I can induce him to withdraw his point of order, because the amendment is not unacceptable to the Committee on Military Affairs, both sides of it, and so stated by its members.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEE. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I make no especial pretentions to parliamentary skill or knowledge in this body. I have never undertaken to argue parliamentary questions in this House, but I want to submit to the Chair that this afternoon the point of order was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] against the purchase of a flying field at Camp Selfridge in Michigan, under the Air Service section, on the ground that it was not germane and not authorized. The Chairman overruled the point of order, and the Camp Selfridge amendment was adopted. Now, I submit to the Chair the question of germaneness. In the first place, this amendment simply carries out two acts of Congress in which the money has already been appropriated and authorized. It is not the question of a new appropriation or of legislation on an appropriation bill.

It is a carrying out of the appropriation already authorized, both in the act of 1917 and the act of 1918, and never repealed, never turned back into the Treasury, and yet appropriated money in the first place.

In the second place, the amendment is offered to line 25, page 40, under the section that provides for shooting galleries and ranges, for shelter, for grounds, for ranges, for small-arm target and machine-gun practice, and so forth, $50,000.

This amendment is offered to that section, it being the section providing for grounds, for ranges, for target practice. This land is now in use for a target range. I am not going to make any elaborate argument on the question, except to state that it is an appropriation authorized by law twice, and in addition to that it is an appropriation that is germane to the purchase of ground and ranges for target practice. I submit that the parliamentary status is the same as that under the ruling this afternoon on the paragraph which is now in the bill, adopted after a point of order was overruled, as to Camp Selfridge Flying Field. There is no reason why the same rule should not apply to an authorization being made for the completion of the purchase by the Government of the United States where it is authorized in two different acts of Congress to acquire and carry out the option of a purchase exercised by the United States, not only to the extent or use of the occupancy of the land but to the dispossession of those owning the premises, leaving them without any means for recovery hereafter except the nebulous claim that might go to their great-grandchildren. I submit that the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the legislation to which the gentleman refers has never become effective as to the purchase that he proposes. The Comptroller of the Treasury ruled that the appropriation could not be used for this purpose. Now the law does not apply. Hence there is no law authorizing the purchase. I make the point of order on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unless it shows on its face that it is a reduction in the expenses, and this amendment not only does not show that, but, on the other hand, shows that it is an increased expense to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois is somewhat difficult for the Chair to understand, but if the Chair understood the statement of the gentleman from Texas, the proposition is to acquire a separate and detached piece of land, and, if that is the case, it occurs to the Chair that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BEE. If the Chair will pardon me, it is not to acquire a separate and detached piece of land; it is to acquire additional property. In other words, if the Chair will permit, there is no difference, except in favor of this amendment, between the amendment that was ruled upon this afternoon, where the point of order was overruled and the amendment became a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no knowledge regarding the facts in that matter. This is the rule that is laid down in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, section 3776:

3776. A proposition to purchase a separate and detached lot of land for an Army target range was held not to be in continuation of a public work. On June 11, 1906, the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when Mr. Francis W. Cushman, of Washington, proposed an amendment:

"Land for target range: For the purchase of a tract of land, of 3,000 acres or less, at American Lake, near Tacoma, State of Washington, for a target range, $30,000."

Mr. Edgar D. Crumpacker, of Indiana, made the point of order that the amendment involved legislation.

After debate, the Chairman ruled:

"The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] has raised a point of order. The Chair thinks it is clearly obnoxious to the rule and subject to the point of order. The Chair thinks you might purchase land next to an Army post and that it would probably be a continuation of a public work, but it is evidently not in order to purchase a separate piece of land, as this amendment proposes. It is no more in order, in the opinion of the Chair, than it would be to provide on an appropriation bill for the erection of a hospital building or the construction of an Army post without a previous authorization of law therefor. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order."

Mr. BEE. May I call the attention of the Chair to this fact? In the authority that the Chair just read it occurs to me that the same condition exists here. This is adjoining an Army post already acquired, and is to acquire additional land to that post already belonging to the United States. In other words, it is not a separate and detached piece of land, it is additional land adjacent to the land already owned by the United States, and it is to be acquired for the purpose of the Government for target practice. It is a further carrying out of the contract of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that he ought to know what the prior legislation is to which the gentleman from Texas refers. The Chair thinks that he should reserve his decision on the point of order until he can ascertain those facts.

Mr. BEE. I will get the previous legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Chair will reserve his decision and the consideration of the amendment offered until to-morrow, and the Clerk will read. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

For the employment of the necessary civilian instructors in the most important trades; for the purchase of carpenter's, machinist's, mason's, electrician's, and such other tools and equipment as may be required, including machines used in connection with the trades; for the purchase of material and other supplies necessary for instruction and training purposes and the construction of such buildings needed for vocational training in agriculture; for shops, storage, and shelter of machinery as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 27 of the act approved June 3, 1916, authorizing, in addition to the military training of soldiers while in the active service, means for securing an opportunity to study and receive instruction upon educational lines of such character as to increase their military efficiency and enable them to return to civil life better equipped for industrial, commercial, and general business occupations, part of this instruction to consist of vocational education either in agriculture or the mechanic arts, $3,000,000: Provided, That whenever possible officers, warrant officers, noncommissioned officers, or other enlisted men shall be detailed as instructors in vocational training in the most important trades in lieu of civilian instructors.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman from California what authority there is for that provision?

Mr. KAHN. The national-defense act of June 3, 1916.

Mr. WALSH. Has the provision been carried in the bill heretofore?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; and some years ago I recall that the amount appropriated was about as large as the amount in this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Does the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, require a detail of warrant officers?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; that proviso was written in there by the committee to try and save some money for the Government of the United States.

The original language would allow the employment of many civilians at a much larger salary than is paid Army officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that vocational education is given the men in the Navy and the Marine Corps at Quantico, Va. Most of the training is being done there, I am reliably informed, by officers and men in the naval service, and the Committee on Military Affairs felt that it would be advisable to allow officers of the Army and enlisted men to do as much of this training as possible. It was believed to be in the interest of economy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, that explains the authority for the provision and also explains the reason for the proviso, but of course the way to save money in an appropriation bill is to reduce the amount. You are still going to allow them to spend $3,000,000.

Mr. KAHN. The amount they asked was something like $10,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that we are teaching these men how to be farmers, masons, carpenters, and other important trades?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. I understand that all those trades are being taught. This is the situation. Usually the military work performed by an enlisted man is done between the time he gets up in the morning and the time he receives his lunch. The afternoon is generally free. He can do with his time whatever he wants to do.

Mr. WALSH. Why is that?

Mr. KAHN. Because there is no work for him to do.

Mr. WALSH. Why is there not any work?

Mr. KAHN. His military work during the entire morning, I presume, tires him out.

Mr. WALSH. And you put him to farming to give him a rest in the afternoon?

Mr. KAHN. It is optional with the man. If he wants to take two or three hours' vocational training so that he will become better able when he gets out of the Army to earn a good wage for himself, I think the Army is doing a good service for those men. We have had some experience in those things. About 10 or 12 years ago the Army established a cooking and baking school. The enlisted men at that period were not receiving any instruction in those matters at all. There was considerable complaint about the Army cooking. The complaint during the Spanish-American War was called to the attention of our War Department officials, and the country was indignant at the conditions. Therefore these schools were established. Oh, there was a great deal of opposition to their establishment. Men said, "You are going to train men who will gladly leave the Army, because they can go to the lumber camps of the country and the great construction camps of the country and receive large salaries after being trained at the expense of the Government." But in the wisdom of the Congress the necessary laws were passed. The men who were trained in those schools did go out of the Army. They did take civilian employment, and they were able to earn much more money than they ever had been able to earn in their lifetime. When this World War broke out, for the first time in the history of the Army we had well-trained bakers and cooks, and the complaints that the food was not properly prepared for soldiers was not heard to any considerable extent. If the men who enlist in the Army can receive vocational training whereby they will be able to go into civilian life and materially increase their earning capacity, I imagine that no harm will be done to their citizenship because the Government has taught them those things. I feel that the Army, besides being simply a military machine, will be doing a splendid service for the young men who enter the Army for a short period of time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California has given a very interesting dissertation upon the benefits of vocational training. We are providing vocational training for soldiers who were wounded or disabled, and we are getting a little bit off the balance on this subject of vocational training. It seems to me rather a peculiar policy to follow out to ask men to enlist in the Army in peace times, increase their pay, and say, "While you are in the Army we will show you how to be a farmer, an electrician, a machinist, a carpenter, so that when you get through your first enlistment you will be so well equipped that you can supplement your dislike for the Army service with ability to engage in some other pursuit"—something he probably could have equipped himself to do if he had not joined the Army in the first place. It seems to me that when we appropriate as large a sum of money as this we ought to be assured that there is a demand for it, and that the benefits to be received justify departing along this policy.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman that the mere fact that the vocational education has been put into operation has been the means of bringing into the Army a great many young men who probably would not have enlisted. That is the information which the committee has, but I want to cite another instance where the training seems to give men in the Army an opportunity to better their stations in civil life. Under the condition of training in the Coast Artillery the young men have to handle some rather intricate machinery, especially electrical machinery. They become experts in that line, and they go out of the Army with an earning capacity of two or three times that which they had before they secured this training. So there is a double purpose served. The military training enables the young man to receive an education in the line which will enable him to come to the defense of his country should the country need him for its defense at any time in the future. This vocational training gives him an opportunity to become better equipped for civil life.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say I am inclined to be sympathetic with the indication of the gentleman's mind, if I derive it correctly from the character of his question. I believe there is such a thing as losing balance in this matter of vocational training as made a part of the Military Establishment under the act of June 3, 1916, known as the national-defense act, and under subsequent appropriations.

Of course, the foundation that is suggested in the act is a practical one. This instruction of soldiers in the mechanic arts, or in such other manual crafts and occupations as may extend to military life, may just as well be carried along systematically and methodically, so as to get a more or less rounded experience in the crafts as a whole. That is quite reasonable enough, for it does increase their efficiency in the Army, because everybody knows to-day that the modern military weapon is a very complicated thing and its use is distinct from the question of mere brute force. It is the question of handling very delicate and complicated instruments as weapons. It also follows as an inescapable proposition that a man who has once learned to use those things by being taught vocational training as incidental to them, when he comes out of the Army takes that knowledge with him. So up to that point we are estopped. If we begin the one we invite the other consequence, of course. That is all right. You can not get away from it.

But it seems to me the mistake under the present administration is that they are going to work on a paternalistic scheme, advertising from one end of this country to the other, "Boys, come in and be soldiers. Not be soldiers just to be soldiers, but to employ the Army as a camouflage for private education and then get out in civil life to use it." That is what the proposition is, and the Army is going to stand the expense.

At first those figures ran up a little bit, a few hundred thousand. But to-day people in the commercial, industrial, and trade world, knowing that the Government is furnishing free vocational education, are permitting their employees to go into the Army and get it, so that they will come back with the free vocational education to work for them. It has been suggested to me by one of my colleagues that the Goodyear tire people have done that very thing.

Now, we all know what the cry of "militarism" means. We know how often a man who is inclined to make mischief can invent and devise all kinds of things that will tend to suggest how dreadful is the burden of a large standing army. But when this Government is maintaining its Military Establishment for vocational education in this fashion, you are going to start out on a national kindergarten method of supplanting the State and private educational institutions by teaching crafts to all the boys who come in the Army and charge that sum off against the Military Establishment, and one of these days somebody is going to cry out what a dreadful burden "militarism" is. It seems to me it is pretty near time right here and now, not only in this case of vocational education but in the case of various and sundry other things, to show that the Army is being made to bear the charge of certain costs to the people of the United States that are not to be confused with a direct military purpose at all.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit? If you carry this out on such a scale as this, what are we going to have? An Army of soldiers or an Army of industrial mechanics, mechanicians, cooks, bakers, and farmers.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We are going to have an Army of men going into one of these revolving doors long enough to get an education and then come out and use it.

Mr. KAHN. But in the meantime he is receiving military training and will be a great asset.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; until he gets tired, and then they turn him over to a vocation.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to suggest this, that because an incidental expedient seems for the time being, some place, somewhere, to be a benefit, must it be turned into the policy and practice and do away with all your foundation principles? In other words, does the end justify the means?

Mr. TILSON. Should there not be a line of demarcation between these vocations and those which lend themselves to the military service? Cooks and bakers are as essential a part of the military service as learning the manual of arms, and so are other things in connection with machines.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And carpenter work, and so on.

Mr. TILSON. But when you carry it entirely outside of anything that has anything to do with the Military Establishment, then it seems to me you enter the realm of camouflage.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The same idea the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests about agriculture—it would take a considerable strain of imagination—and the Lord knows I am eager to do what is my enlightened duty by the Army—it would take a strain of imagination to believe that the art of paper hanging is going to turn out a better soldier, or that we are going to appropriate money out of the Public Treasury to support these matters of private education which under the hitherto understood terms of the Constitution were reserved to the people or to the State. I do not understand this thing. I can not make myself understand it. All I understand is that now and then they bring in the estimates, where they want a thousand more civilians tacked onto the Army, so that every Army post will be swarming with them.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman realizes the supply of civilian instructors is increasing daily?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It has been suggested in connection with that—by what authority I do not know, but probably just as good authority as the original estimates were made on—that there are to-day practically, as far as the present scheme and policy for the administration of the Army is concerned, two civilians carried on the shoulders of each soldier, and the whole thing charged off to the awful burden of "militarism."

Mr. WALSH. This is a million-dollar increase over the last bill, as I recall it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have listened with a good deal of interest to this discussion, which is academic in part and, I think, eminently practical in part. What struck me, as I understand it, is that this $3,000,000 is in excess of what would necessarily be appropriated were there no vocational training. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Then I note that the $3,000,000, it would seem, would educate a large number of men in the Army, for I assume that much of what the Army already has in the way of equipment could be utilized in these schools. I assume that they are not going outside to teach these things, but that it will become academic work in the classroom. What strikes me is—and I am just wondering—whether the $3,000,000 can be expended effectively in this connection, and I would like if the chairman of the committee will tell me how many men now in the Army are taking this extra vocational training?

Mr. KAHN. I can not give the gentleman the figures, but I understand there is a general demand for the training among the men who are in the Army now and the young men who are enlisting at the present time in the Army.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. These figures, allowing $300 a student, would bring 30,000 men per year.

Mr. KAHN. We have 175,000 men in the Army. We have over 211,000 men at the present time, but the bill carries an appropriation for a force of 175,000 men on the average for the next fiscal year.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will any large percentage of those 175,000, say 30,000 of them, allowing $300 per unit of men instructed, engage in this vocational training?

Mr. KAHN. I think more than 30,000 will engage in it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As a matter of fact, I can see how this might well become a substitute for universal military training, and a most effective one, provided effective use was made of this training when they went out, and if they changed every year or two years it would be even better.

Mr. KAHN. The law fixes the period of enlistment at three years, but on first enlistment, if the Army reorganization bill goes into effect, a young man will be allowed to enlist for one year, but if he reenlists he must enlist for three years. After all, the total number of the Army can only be as great as Congress is ready to appropriate money for.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will yield now.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman has suggested that this might be a good substitute for military training, or something to that effect.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It might result in military training if carried far enough.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not that just exactly the way, by not coming out and being flat-footed and honest and frank in a policy, we get tricked by just such a thing as this?

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman believe in universal military training?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; I believe in universal military training, but I want it called by that name. I do not believe in any of these kindergartens or sociological experiments in the Army, which only mean, after all, that a man shall go out as a finished skylight artist or plumber instead of a soldier. The whole proposition comes down to this: What was an innocent little paragraph in the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, by the application, to my mind, of a strained policy year after year, gives us another example of the old scriptural warning against "the little foxes that spoil the vines." Little by little there has crept up in the minds of the directing heads of the War Department what has become a policy, and we are embarked now upon a whole expedition of paternalism, by which the Government, not only in simple execution of the act itself performs these things, but blazons and heralds the inducement from one end of the land to the other to the soldier not to be a soldier but to be a plumber or a painter.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether any of these soldier students have been trained to paint some of the posters that the War Department is having exhibited in various parts of the country to serve as an inducement to the American youth to joint the Army?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not informed as to where these schools have distributed their war paint. I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has the floor on the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I think at this stage I am inclined to make the point of order, but I would like to have just a little more information before I do it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would like to have a little information, and maybe the gentleman from Massachusetts can furnish the information. If not, no doubt the chairman of the committee can. They have got a number of professors in the War Department, some of them teaching music, vocal and instrumental, and some of them teaching society etiquette, and some of them teaching ping-pong and other similarly cultivated and elevating accomplishments. They were conducted during the war under the term of "war-camp activities." I would like to know whether the intent of that wonderful proposition for instructing young men how to be soldiers is being continued yet, and whether it is under this appropriation?

Mr. GARNER. They have enough officers compared with the number of men they have got to continue that instruction.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Those were civilians.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Some of them are officers, and they were paid anywhere from $4,000 to $10,000 a year.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We are trying to run them out of the Army as fast as possible, but sometimes they seem to be able to get into a major general's uniform and so manage to escape us. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Of course, there is no such thing as keeping down the number of officers.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not when the officers are the only permanent part of the Army.

Mr. GARNER. You are sure to keep the officers.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; because they are the only men who can teach the boys how to fight.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state what is the necessity for increasing this item a million dollars this year?

Mr. KAHN. The testimony had before the committee was to the effect that they required $10,000,000 for this purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Well, that is what they will get one of these days.

Mr. KAHN. But the committee decided that $3,000,000 would be ample for carrying on this work, and made the cut accordingly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I would like to know whether this expensive advertising that the War Department is doing now comes out of this fund, or if they have another fund that is available for that purpose?

Mr. KAHN. I do not believe that it comes out of this fund; but I want to call to the attention of the gentleman and members of this committee the fact that I can remember 15 years ago when the War Department had magnificent posters illustrated with beautiful scenes in the Philippine Islands and the Tropics, generally.

Oh, they were gems of the lithographer's art. These posters asked young men to enlist in the Army and see the world. I suppose they are conducting that kind of propaganda to-day; but you had those other posters before there was vocational training, and you probably will continue to have that kind of advertising for enlistments in the Army, because somehow or other the American youth as a general rule does not desire to enlist in the Army.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If my colleague will permit, is it not true that after all is said and done, with all these experiments in recruiting, with all the inducements that are offered in just the manner he suggests, the actual number of enlistments may be indicated by the barometer of the economic situation; that when we are in hard times Army recruiting is easy, and when we are in flush times it is not?

Mr. KAHN. There is no doubt about the truth of the statement of the gentleman. Whenever men are walking the streets looking for work they will enlist in the Army and take a three years' chance at military service. Whenever a man can earn anywhere from $4 to $12 a day he does not look to the Army for $30 a month.

Mr. WALSH. Why do they want the $1,000,000 increase in this appropriation? That is what I am interested in now. Why should we increase this $1,000,000 over what they had during war times?

Mr. KAHN. They did not have it during war time.

Mr. WALSH. Well, after the armistice, and we were in war until we heard from the commander in chief.

Mr. KAHN. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that immediately after the armistice, and when we had over 2,000,000 men in France, the War Department organized what they called a university at Beaune, France. The enlisted men in the Army were told that they could go to that place and learn trades, and even painting and drawing and music. I am told that something like 25,000 American soldiers went to that camp and received this training. During the period that they were at the camp they were thoroughly satisfied. If anyone went to the other side during the period immediately after the armistice he found that the American soldier was anxious to get back to this country; that he did not feel satisfied in Europe; but the opportunity to go to school and to learn something that he had not been able to acquire during his civilian life certainly did make a very marked improvement, and the young men were satisfied. Of course, some men may see no virtue in having given those young men that opportunity, but I feel that every one of them who had that opportunity feels kindlier toward his Government than he felt before.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, if we are going to establish a citizenship in this country which, in order to acquire kindly feelings toward the Government, must get something for nothing, whether it be in the military service or the civil service of the Government, I think we are going to have a rather peculiar type of citizenship in the future. That has been the trouble in countries heretofore in the past.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am free to admit that many things have happened in my country within the last two or three years that have made me doubt at times the loyalty and the patriotism of large numbers of the people. But I believe the overwhelming majority are sound at heart. I believe that no occasion will ever arise in this country when the people will not demonstrate with all their soul and might their loyalty and devotion to this country. But I see things happening every day which I regret.

Now, the purpose of the Army is to supply a force of men who can defend the country in the hour of its stress. In the morning these men are taught military tactics, military training, obedience to constituted authority, respect for law and order. They have their afternoons free. I myself can see no reason why those young men should not be improved in civilian pursuits if they desire to take their free hours and accept the vocational training. I think they will be better citizens when they come out of the Army than they were before they went in.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course the gentleman has suggested incidental by-product benefits.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The question is whether we shall upset a general foundation principle in order to get those benefits.

Mr. KAHN. I deny that we are upsetting any foundation principles. The men get all the military training that they have ever had, and they will continue to get that military training; but as a by-product they will also learn something in the way of civilian pursuits that will enable them to go out into life after they have served in the Army better prepared to meet the problems of life.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And in the meanwhile, just to show the authority I have suggested, it is still within the principles of bookkeeping, and that does not lie; and the bookkeeping shows that all of this which the gentleman says is a great benefit to civil life is charged up to the burden of the Military Establishment.

Mr. KAHN. I presume there are lots of things charged up to the burden of the Military Establishment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And that is wrong, too. The gentleman knows that you can not prove an original point by citing a few more errors. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts in line with his first suggestion——

Mr. WALSH. I asked why they needed $3,000,000, an increase of a million, and I have not yet ascertained the reason. The gentleman from California was diverted from answering my question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked some question about employing the time of the soldier. The soldier's situation is a peculiar one. As the gentleman knows, the soldier is really in the position that a fireman is at a fire station; he has a tour of duty of 24 hours a day, but he can not actually be employed the whole 24 hours. He gets a certain number of hours in actual employment in military training. That leaves him intervals in which he has nothing to do unless he be on duty taking his trick at guard or his trick on kitchen police or that sort of thing. So that he has intervals of time on his hands.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my point of order and offer an amendment to strike out the sum of $3,000,000 and insert $2,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, line 12, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER SUPPLIES AND SERVICES FOR RIFLE RANGES FOR CIVILIAN INSTRUCTION.

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors; for clerical services; for badges and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship and their participation in national and international matches, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and to remain available until expended, $100,000: Provided, That out of the said sum of $100,000 there may be expended for the payment of transportation, for supplying meals, or furnishing commutation of subsistence of civilian rifle teams authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in the national matches, not to exceed $80,000.

Mr. CONNALLY rose.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I will give notice that immediately thereafter I shall move that the committee rise.

Mr. CONNALLY. In line 1, page 43, is a provision for the employment of instructors. Is it the purpose to employ civilians to instruct at the target range?

Mr. KAHN. No; these instructors are for rifle practice. They will be National Guard officers, and reserve officers, and Army officers, and enlisted men.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I had in mind that they should do.

Mr. KAHN. That is what is intended. The testimony before the committee at the time of the hearings was to the effect that that was exactly the kind of instructors that were being employed and that they would continue to employ.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the bill carry pay for officers of the National Guard when called into service?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; but we do not want to call the National Guard officers into service for this purpose. They can be utilized for training the civilians in rifle practice and can be very serviceable in doing this work.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I had in mind, and on the assurance of the chairman I will not offer my amendment.

Mr. KAHN. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13587, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12889. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River, at or near Division Street, in the city of Youngstown, Ohio;

H. R. 11877. An act granting the consent of Congress to Madison and Rankin Counties, in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River between Madison and Rankin Counties; and

H. R. 9065. An act to amend certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. BLACK, for 10 days, on account of his father's illness.

To Mr. STEVENSON, for one week, on account of the sickness of his wife.

To Mr. BURKE, for two weeks, on account of bad health.

SIOUX TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Indian Affairs from further consideration of the bill H. R. 400, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the bill about?

Mr. GANDY. It is H. R. 400, authorizing the Sioux tribe of Indians to submit their claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman talked with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. GANDY. I will say that this request was made not only with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but has been informally considered by the committee. It was the sense of the committee that the bill be sent to conference. The only difference between the Senate and the House is that the Senate struck out a part of the House bill, and the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs is insistent that the bill remain as it was.

Mr. MILLER. There are a number of bills of this character pending before the Indian Affairs Committee.

Mr. GANDY. Yes; some.

Mr. MILLER. Why should the Sioux Indians be singled out to submit their claims and not the other Indians.

Mr. GANDY. I hope the gentleman will not charge me with the responsibility of that.

Mr. MILLER. I am asking the gentleman if he knows why they reported out this bill.

Mr. GANDY. They have reported a number of bills. I am unable to say why. I am not the chairman of the committee. The committee has worked on them diligently and has reported out quite a number of them. This bill was reported out some time last summer.

Mr. MILLER. What is the character of claims involved in this bill?

Mr. GANDY. This is a land claim.

Mr. MILLER. Similar to the claims of other tribes of Indians throughout the country who are trying to get through similar legislation?

Mr. GANDY. I assume so.

Mr. MILLER. I shall not object to this, Mr. Speaker, but I shall object to any further bills until all of the bills are brought in here, because I have some myself that are as meritorious as any.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. ELSTON, Mr. DALLINGER, and Mr. CARTER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill by inserting a letter from the Secretary of War regarding the matter of the number of troops in German territory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all those who have spoken on this bill or who may speak on this bill may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it understood to be their own remarks?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 16, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate requesting the authorization of an expenditure of $1,000,000 from unexpended balance in the appropriation, "General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps," for use of the Construction Division for "Buildings for Infantry School, Camp Benning, Ga." (H. Doc. No. 725); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation for the United States Geological Survey to cover cost of transcripts of evidence before Quebec bridge commission (H. Doc. No. 726); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required to cover the cost of the education of natives of Alaska for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 727); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Missouri River, S. Dak., with a view to bank protection in the vicinity of Vermilion, and locating sites for dams in South Dakota; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SINNOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13592) to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to commute their entries, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 837), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8690) for the relief of certain homestead entrymen, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 838), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CURRY of California, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13500) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish an Hawaiian homes commission, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 839), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ELSTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12788) authorizing any tribes or bands of Indians of California to submit claims to the Court of Claims, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 840), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9357) for the relief of S. S. Markley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 836), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CANTRILL: A bill (H. R. 13624) to amend section 7 of the act of Congress of April 26, 1898; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAHER: A bill (H. R. 13625) to increase the compensation of pressmen in the Government Printing Office; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 13626) amending and modifying the war-risk insurance act as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 13627) to amend paragraph E of section 7 of the act approved March 3, 1919, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines"; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KLECZKA: A bill (H. R. 13628) to amend sections 1 and 4 of title 2 of the national prohibition act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13629) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the withdrawal of distilled spirits from bonded warehouses; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 13630) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses"; to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 13631) to provide for 1-cent-a-mile furlough fare for all soldiers, sailors, and marines now being given treatment in hospitals; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KNUTSON: Resolution (H. Res. 521) requesting the Department of Justice to investigate sugar hoarding in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOCH: Resolution (H. Res. 522) for the investigation of certain charges against Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 335) directing the Attorney General to investigate the manufacture, distribution, and sale of print paper and to institute criminal proceedings against those found to be profiteering; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 13632) granting an increase of pension to Letitia R. Whitehouse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DEWALT: A bill (H. R. 13633) granting a pension to William H. Trautman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOOLING: A bill (H. R. 13634) for the relief of Katherine Cronhardt; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. EMERSON: A bill (H. R. 13635) for the relief of John W. Covington; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 13636) granting an increase of pension to Louis De Witt; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13637) granting a pension to Jacob Kuhn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GLYNN: A bill (H. R. 13638) granting a pension to William J. Norton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 13639) granting a pension to Cordelia E. Roach; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13640) granting an increase of pension to Joshua B. Richardson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13641) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Scott; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 13642) granting a pension to George G. Denning; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13643) granting a pension to Carrie Bouret; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 13644) for the relief of Charles Gittery, jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: Resolution (H. Res. 523) authorizing the restoration of Louis Roos to his former position as a special officer in the Capitol police; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2965. By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of 31 citizens of Delaware, Ohio, in favor of the Raker bill, for the parole of Federal prisoners; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2966. By Mr. CARSS: Petition of the Virginia (Minn.) Central Labor Union, urging an investigation of the Bureau of Immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

2967. By Mr. COLE: Petition of Central Labor Union, Marion, Ohio, asking repeal of war-time measures; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2968. By Mr. CURRY of California: Petition from the engineer employees of the third San Francisco district, Engineer Department at Large, favoring Senate amendment to House bill 11892, providing for 25 per cent increase of basic pay of January 1, 1920, for all assistant and junior engineers and chief clerks in the Engineer Department at Large, together with the retirement provision; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

2969. By Mr. FOCHT: Petition of citizens of Greencastle, Pa., opposing compulsory military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2970. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of Walter R. Mungovan and 75 other members of Michael J. Perkins Post, No. 67, of the American Legion, favoring the cash bonus for ex-service men of the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2971. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of Local Union, No. 514, A. S. M. W., of Baltimore, Md., urging the passage of Senator FRANCE's joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171), also Senate bill 1233; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2972. Also, petition of Le Roy K. Murrill Co., of Baltimore, Md., protesting against House bill 12976; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2973. Also, petition of the Consolidated Engineering Co. (Inc.), of Baltimore, Md., urging the passage of the Britten bill (H. R. 13390); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

2983. Also, petition of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, at Canonsburg, Pa., to secure justice for the Irish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2984. By Mr. YATES: Petition of Illinois State Dental Society, Peoria, Ill., urging that the Dental Corps have the same status as the Medical Corps of the Army, and favoring military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2985. Also, petition of McNeil & Higgins Co., of Chicago; George B. Stadden, president Franklin Life Insurance Co., Springfield; Stuber & Keck, of Peoria, Ill., favoring 1-cent drop-letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 16, 1920.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 15, 1920.)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] will yield to me for a moment, I desire to offer a Senate resolution and ask that it may be read and lie on the table.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 351) was read, as follows:

Whereas repeated demands for higher wages are made by the employees of the street railways of the District of Columbia;
Whereas such demands are followed by requests from the railway companies to the Public Utilities Commission for permission to raise their fares;
Whereas such requests seem to be uniformly granted on the alleged ground that the companies must make dividends on their stock of from 6 to 7 per cent;
Whereas by this method the whole burden of maintaining stock dividends and the expenses of operating the railroads is placed upon patrons of the roads;
Whereas the patrons of these roads are largely Government employees with fixed salaries and people of limited means;
Whereas one road appears to make money and the other does not;
Whereas a limit will be reached at which the patrons will cease using the railroads whenever it is possible for them to do so, and bankruptcy to the railroads will result;
Whereas with all the increases in fares the service furnished by said roads is abominable and can hardly be worse; and
Whereas both roads ought to be under one ownership and management, and certain power plants that are necessary in connection with their operation should be taken over: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the street railways of the District of Columbia and the necessary power plants operated in connection therewith should be taken over, owned, and operated by the District of Columbia or the Government of the United States; and the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby directed to formulate and present to the Senate at as early a date as may be practicable, for its consideration, legislation to bring this about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MILITARY JUSTICE.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 64) to establish military justice.

I take this opportunity to submit the report, and I shall hope, after the bill as amended is printed, to have it considered at an early day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REORGANIZATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE BRANCHES.

Mr. SMOOT. I introduce a joint resolution, and as it is a very important one, in my opinion, I ask that it may be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee is created, to be known as the "Joint Committee on Reorganization," which shall consist of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Joint Committee on Reorganization to make a survey of the administrative services of the Government for the purpose of securing all pertinent facts concerning their powers and duties, their distribution among the several executive departments, and their overlapping and duplication of authority; also to determine what redistribution of activities should be made among the several services, with a view to the proper correlation of the same, and what departmental regrouping of services should be made so that each executive department shall embrace only services having close working relation with each other and ministering directly to the primary purpose for which the same are maintained and operated, to the end that there shall be achieved the largest possible measure of efficiency and economy in the conduct of Government business.

SEC. 3. The committee shall, from time to time, report to both the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its inquiries, together with its recommendations, and shall prepare and submit bills or resolutions having for their purpose the coordination of Government functions and their most efficient and economical conduct. The committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may require, at such compensation as the committee may determine to be just and reasonable, and to make such reasonable expenditures as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work, such expenditures to be paid in equal parts from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and the Senate, as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolutions of those bodies.

SEC. 4. The officers and employees of all administrative services of the Government shall furnish to the committee such information regarding powers, duties, activities, organization, and methods of business as the committee may from time to time require, and the committee, or any of its employees when duly authorized by the committee, shall have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any administrative service for the purpose of securing the information needed by the committee in the prosecution of its work.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not intend to take the time of the Senate this morning to call attention to the duplication of work which is now found in the different departments of the Government. I have a great deal of matter prepared—it is not complete, however—and at some future time I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the facts, showing that there must be some kind of readjustment of the activities of the departments of our Government if we ever intend to do away with the wicked duplication of work now going on in these departments.

I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

NITRATE OF SODA.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yesterday the Chair laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users a supply of nitrate of soda. The joint resolution relates to the distribution or the sale of nitrate by the War Department. Objection was not made to the amendment of the House, but it was asked that it might go over until to-day until I could confer with the department from which it was supposed the objection came. There was a misunderstanding about it. It is now perfectly clear. The department now understands that the joint resolution as it came from the House provides that as soon as this substance is sold the money that is obtained for it shall be used to repurchase and keep the quota intact. There is no further objection to the amendment of the House, and I hope it will be acted upon now, because it is a case of emergency.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will have no objection if there is no debate. If it gives rise to debate and the consumption of time, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 400) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ELSTON, Mr. DALLINGER, and Mr. CARTER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 795. An act for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert;

H. R. 6025. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

H. R. 9065. An act to amend certain sections of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916;

H. R. 11877. An act granting the consent of Congress to Madison and Rankin Counties, in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River between Madison and Rankin Counties; and

H. R. 12889. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River at or near Division Street, in the city of Youngstown, Ohio.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of Shiawasse Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Owosso, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called Kenyon-Vestal Americanization bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENYON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Winneshiek County, Iowa, remonstrating against the adoption of universal military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Hanna, Wyo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to exclude foreign publications from second-class mailing privileges, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

MERRITT & CHAPMAN DERRICK AND WRECKING CO.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3294) for the relief of the owner of the derrick Concord. I will state to my colleague that if it gives rise to any discussion I shall not press its consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With that understanding, I make no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from New York why he asks for the passage of the bill at this time?

Mr. CALDER. The bill permits the owner of the derrick Concord to go into court and sue for damages to his vessel.

Mr. SMOOT. There are a half dozen such bills on the calendar.

Mr. CALDER. This was the only one objected to when the calendar was under consideration. Its passage is recommended by the Navy Department. The owner of the injured vessel must go into court and press the matter in court and obtain the verdict of the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read. I have not a copy of the report on my file.

Mr. CALDER. I hand the Senator a copy of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the derrick Concord, arising out of collision between said derrick and the U. S. S. Robin on January 10, 1919, at the north pier of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick and Wrecking Co.'s dock at the district salvage base, Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said derrick Concord by reason of damages to said derrick, may be submitted to the United States court for the eastern district of New York under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same right of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owner of said derrick Concord, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provision of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out section 2 of the bill. I do this in conformity with the action taken by the Senate on all previous bills of this kind.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. After the word "Section" in line 16, on page 2, I move to strike out "3" and insert "2," so as to read "Section 2."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS FOR SOLDIERS OF SPANISH WAR, ETC.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2) to pension soldiers of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 527) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 4229) granting an increase of pension to Kate M. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4230) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Tanco, jr.; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KNOX (by request):

A bill (S. 4231) for the relief of certain estates; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 4232) granting a pension to Neil J. Devlin;

A bill (S. 4233) granting a pension to Mary C. F. Warren; and

A bill (S. 4234) granting a pension to Gustav A. Schlott; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COLT:

A bill (S. 4235) granting a pension to Joshua H. Thomas (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4236) granting a pension to Charles Layton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4237) providing for the coinage of a 7-cent piece and an 8-cent piece; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present a court decision and three briefs relating to prohibition cases before the Supreme Court and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to being incorporated in a public document in connection with a similar brief heretofore presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

SIOUX INDIAN CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 400) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SPENCER, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 13, 1920:

S. 2811. An act for the relief of the York County Savings Bank, of Biddeford, Me.; and

S. 3187. An act to dispose of a certain strip of public land in Waterville, Me.

On April 15, 1920:

S. 2786. An act authorizing the sale of lands in Gregory County, S. Dak.;

S. 3263. An act to authorize the construction of flood-control and improvement works in Minnesota River and Big Stone Lake between the States of Minnesota and South Dakota;

S. 3779. An act to authorize the Ozark Forest road improvement district of Baxter County, Ark., to construct and maintain a bridge across the White River, near Norfork, Ark.;

S. 3813. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain, between the towns of Shoreham, Vt., and Ticonderoga, N. Y.; and

S. 4082. An act to amend section 4878 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of March 3, 1897.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Glass	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Harris	McNary	Smith, Md.
Calder	Harrison	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Kellogg	Nugent	Spencer
Comer	Kendrick	Overman	Swanson
Culberson	Kenyon	Page	Thomas
Cummins	Kirby	Phipps	Townsend
Curtis	Knox	Pittman	Wadsworth
Dial	McCormick	Reed	Warren
Edge	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], in attendance at a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. GRONNA, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. STERLING, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to their names when called.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. NEW, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. DILLINGHAM entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment proposed to the pending bill by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. McKELLAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, beginning in line 12, after the words "Philippine Scouts," it is proposed to strike out the two provisos beginning on that page, which read as follows:

Provided, That, beginning with the fiscal year after the year in which the system of military training hereinafter provided for shall have been established, the total permanent personnel herein authorized and that hereinafter authorized for detail or assignment to each of the several arms, corps, and services shall be decreased, as follows: Commissioned officers, 2 per cent per annum for five successive years; enlisted men, 5 per cent per annum for five successive years: Provided further, That the decreases provided for in the next preceding proviso shall be distributed proportionately among the several commissioned and enlisted grades, and, during the period of decrease vacancies occurring in such grades shall not be filled until the decreases herein provided for have been made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just a word or two, on the assumption that perhaps there are some Senators here this morning who were not here day before yesterday, when the pending amendment was offered, to hear the reasons for its being offered.

The Committee on Military Affairs had hoped that universal military training would be accepted, and with that hope and on that theory it had provided by these two provisos that the Regular Army should be progressively reduced as the training program was developed and perfected; but as the training program on a universal basis has been stricken from the bill as originally drawn, the committee believes that it would be unwise and unsafe to prescribe at this time that the Regular Army shall be reduced to such a low figure.

May I say that the number fixed in the pending bill of 280,000 men at that is 20,000 less than the number fixed in the bill which has already passed the other House?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from New York states that the provisions for military training have been stricken from the bill. Is it not true that there is still a provision in the bill for military training, the only change being that it is made voluntary instead of compulsory?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but that is a very profound change.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it the Senator's opinion and the opinion of those with whom he has conferred that voluntary military training will not be a success?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; we did not infer that; but we have no idea how many men will volunteer for training, and until we have some experience, to find out what the volunteer system of training is going to produce in the way of a trained citizen soldiery, we believe it would be unwise to command in a statute that the Regular Army go through this course of reduction during the next six years. Two or three years from now we can tell how many soldiers the volunteer training system is going to produce.

Mr. GRONNA. Am I right in assuming that in the pending bill there is an appropriation to take care of the training?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; this bill does not carry an appropriation for anything.

Mr. GRONNA. But it sets up the machinery, and, of course, an appropriation for that purpose would naturally follow in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would; yes.

Mr. GRONNA. This bill provides the machinery for training?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and if we were certain how many young men would volunteer to take the training then we could tell accurately by what number we could reduce the Regular Army from year to year, but at present it is absolutely impossible to estimate how many men will take it.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, as I understand, the Senator from New York believes it would not be safe under the present system to reduce the number of men in the Regular Army to the number provided for in the provision which he has asked the Senate to strike out?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the present system and at the present moment in the world's history, with conditions at home and abroad as they are to-day, I believe that it would be unsafe and unwise for the Congress of the United States to announce that the only military forces which this great Republic will have at its disposal at the end of four or five years from now will be 210,000 men.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I hope that at the present time no measures will be taken to reduce the present size of the Army. I feel that, with the present conditions in the country and the fact that it is problematical how many men we will get under the voluntary system of military training, we should have at the present time at least an Army of the size provided for in the bill; in fact, I believe we should have 500,000 men.

We have a coast line greater, possibly, than that of any other country in the world. As it now stands, this bill provides that the Coast Artillery shall be limited, I think, to 28,000 men. That will not afford a one-man relief to the guns. We are maintaining fortifications along the Atlantic coast and along the Pacific coast. In the Puget Sound section we are more strongly fortified than at any other point on the Atlantic or the Pacific coast. This is due to the fact that it is necessary to keep the fortifications on the Pacific as strong as possible, owing to existing conditions. In Hawaii and Alaska it is contemplated to have one division of troops—that is, 27,500 men—and it is necessary to maintain in the Philippines the strength of one division. As I have said, there are 28,000 men in the coast defenses, and they are not sufficient to man the guns with a one-man relief. In Panama we need a division of troops, or 27,500 men. On the Mexican border we have now 24,000 men, who are engaged in small groups in the effort to maintain the embargo on arms against Mexico. There are 14,000 men in the Southern Department. In other words, we only have 38,000 men on the Mexican border at the present time to defend a frontier of 1,500 miles, whereas in the present chaotic condition we should have at least 150,000 men there.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to suggest to the Senator in that connection that I have received a great number of appeals in the last three days for an enlargement of the forces at Douglas, Ariz. As the world knows, Sonora, which touches the United States at that point, and from there on to the Gulf of California, is in rebellion against the Carranza government and fighting is already taking place there. It is going to come close to the American border, and I am told that the town of Douglas is absolutely unequipped to meet such contingencies as might arise there. I have been begged and importuned to go to the Secretary of War in an effort to have some artillery sent to that point and to increase the number of soldiers there. As the Senator has said, that line from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean is practically unguarded, or at least not half so well guarded as it should be.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, in addition to that, we have around Washington, or should have around Washington, a division stationed at Camp Meigs, Fort Myer, and at other posts near Washington, and in addition we should have a full force of marines at Quantico. The Capital of this country at this time should be amply provided with proper protection, and we can not assume that less than a division of troops should be here or in the environs of Washington to protect the National Capital.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. REED. What does the Senator want this large force around Washington for—because of threatened or possible internal disturbance, or because of possible external attack?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I believe that when you are providing a method of national defense the Capital of the Nation should be amply protected at all times by a sufficient number of troops to secure the safety of the Capital against any emergency. When we realize that in the Russian revolution Petrograd, a great city, and the Government were taken by a mob scarcely exceeding 2,000 men, it seems highly necessary that, at least, this Capital should be protected by an amply sufficient number of troops when we know malignant forces are working at this time in this country against the Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator's answer, then, really is that he wants this large army because of possible internal trouble. I am interested in this, because I tried a day or two ago to get somebody to tell me what they wanted this army for.

The Senator says that 2,000 soviet troops took the capital of Russia. Does the Senator think that the United States bears much resemblance to Russia, either in the character of its people, in the conditions which exist here, or in the character of its army? As I understand, the real trouble in Russia was that the army was in favor of the revolution. If you have that condition, the smaller your army the better off you are.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I quite understand the point made by the Senator from Missouri. However, I feel that it is our duty to maintain at least a sufficient force to preserve law and order, and that one of the posts that should be protected is the Capital of this country. I think that is a duty that we owe to the 110,000,000 people of this country, if we have a standing army. I am not quite sure that internal dissension and civil commotion are entirely remote. From some of the utterances and the attitude taken by certain racial groups and classes in this country I feel that at least we should have a sufficient police force to preserve law and order. However, possibly the Senator may feel that a smaller number is sufficient; in fact, he may feel that no troops are necessary. I disagree with him. I feel that at least a limited amount of armed force should be around the National Capital to protect it.

But that is the plan here—to have a division of troops at Camp Meigs and at Fort Myer, and around in the various encampments in Virginia and in the District of Columbia. The location of troops in the posts throughout the country and in our insular possessions at the present time, including 50,000 that are scattered around in other sections—Porto Rico and elsewhere—absorb 235,000 men. That includes the 19,000 men that are now in Germany. That practically leaves only 50,000 troops in this country available for immediate use, unless they are withdrawn from these posts. Now, I am not in favor of militarism. I am not in favor of an unwieldy standing army; but I do believe that in the present condition of the world we at least should have 300,000 men to do the police work of this country as a national police force, and I feel, therefore, that any effort to reduce it at this time would be unwise.

I make that statement with a sincere desire to do only what is proper for the national defense. We absorb 235,000 men in the insular possessions and in the coast defenses and in the various posts in this country; and that leaves scarcely 50,000 men, with the exception of the National Guard, who will only be called in an emergency, to defend 110,000,000 people and nearly 4,000 miles of coast frontage.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, but very few Senators were in the Chamber this morning when the resolution offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was read. To my mind, that resolution brings to our attention a subject of prime importance and one upon which summary action of some sort should be taken, if possible. It was doubtless prompted by the fact that the Public Utilities Commission of the District has seen fit to grant another raise in the rates of fare on the transportation lines of the District, and that was doubtless prompted by the apparent determination of the employees of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. to go on strike if their demand for increased compensation should not be granted.

It has become the custom in America—a custom which began during the war and the end of which we can easily foresee—of organized bodies of wage earners to demand increased compensation, accompanied by a threat of strike, which demand is complied with, either in whole or in part, after due deliberation, and sometimes without deliberation, thus encouraging the practice and merely postponing the day of final collapse, because the industrial system can not sustain an indefinite development of that method of demand and increased expense.

The difficulty in this District is primarily due to the fact that the Washington Railway & Electric Co., like nearly all the corporations of the country, has been permitted to water its stock until its dropsical condition threatens its existence. I am informed that the lines which were consolidated into the Washington Railway & Electric system were secured here some years ago for less than $10,000,000, and that the capital stock was increased to $15,000,000, exclusive of bonds. What the bond issue is I can not say. It is very large, and because the company can not now make 6 per cent upon its capitalization it has besieged the commission for an increase, which seems to be contemporaneous with the dissatisfaction expressed by its employees.

Mr. President, an increase of 60 per cent within the last 12 months, if my recollection serves me rightly, has been made in the fares which prevailed in this District, and which, under the charters of incorporation, were presumably the maximum fares to be levied for transportation. It will be absorbed, and perhaps more than absorbed, by this increased demand of the employees, with the result that another request will be made for an additional charge, and that in all probability will be also granted.

Mr. President, I want to protest against this action of the commission, because it levies a tax, and an unbearable tax, upon the vast body of toilers in the District, those employed by the Government and those as well in private employment, to enable this one corporation to meet its expense account and pay dividends upon its enormous capitalization.

The injustice of that situation may be well illustrated by the fact that the increase is given generally, in consequence of which the other company, the Capital Traction Co., will enjoy its benefits; and I am told that it is considered one of the most prosperous institutions in the country. It has been well managed; its capitalization is comparatively small; and, even under the 5-cent rate, it was able to get along splendidly. It will take advantage of this situation, of course. The commission is therefore attempting to aid a crippled institution by compelling the people to pay an additional charge for its services, and at the same time unduly increasing the revenues of a prosperous competitor.

We are told with every meeting of the Appropriations Committee that the cost of living is constantly mounting, thus requiring additional compensation to our employees; and that is true. But in the face of that fact, to have this commission now deliberately place this increased toll upon the earnings of the people of this District, for the purpose of saving a corporation from bankruptcy, and whose embarrassment is a direct consequence of its own conduct, can not be justified upon any system of reasoning or logic which I am capable of comprehending.

This resolution, which goes over, does not, of course, reach the immediate thing. Any action of ours may not be taken in time to prevent the accomplishment of this purpose, and once established we may not abandon these rates. I do not know what the power of Congress over the commission may be. Doubtless additional legislation will be required. But the people of this District are without relief unless Congress can grant it, and the spectacle of this commission attempting to enable a failing concern to continue as an operating concern on the one hand and inordinately increasing the profits of a profitable concern on the other is too serious to justify any long postponement of the resolution of the Senator from Washington.

In my judgment, the Washington Railway & Electric Co., instead of bolstering itself up on the earnings of the public, ought to go into the hands of a receiver. Many of the other public utilities which, taking advantage of a liberal market and an atrophied public sentiment, have swelled their capitalization into bloated proportions, thus sowing the wind, have reaped the whirlwind. Why should this concern be given the special and tender consideration which it seems to be receiving every time it makes a demand for increased compensation, when the increase means an additional tax upon the productive energies of the community and the salaries of the employees of the Government? It is no slight thing to require the average man or his wife to pay 16 cents to come from home to the center of town and return when it could be done for less than 10 cents prior to the disturbed condition brought about by the war.

This company has said, if I recollect rightly, that the increase to 8 cents is not sufficient for its purposes, and I have no doubt that that is true. But it should be compelled, Mr. President, to rely upon its own resources, just as every one, in private life at least, is compelled to do. I do not want to see these hundreds of thousands of dollars taken from the pockets of the people of the District of Columbia and poured into the coffers of a bankrupt concern and also of an unduly profitable concern merely because the former want 6 per cent upon capitalization which is so largely fictitious.

I understand some of those interested in the Washington company a few days ago purchased $27,000 worth of the stock in New York City for $5,000, and, of course, they want 6 per cent, not upon their $5,000, but upon their $27,000. Mr. President, I do not wish unduly or unfairly to criticize the action of the commission. I concede that they know more about the facts which are involved here than I do. I have no doubt that they have been actuated by high motives and the most sincere desire to meet an unfortunate situation. But however that may be, Mr. President, the fact still remains, as I have said, that it is met by increasing the cost of living to this community. Consequently every man, woman, and child in the District is interested in the subject. Therefore, I trust that this resolution will receive immediate consideration, to the end that we may be able in this emergency to extend some relief, however inadequate, to the suffering people of this District.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything about the resolution this morning, and I am not going to take much time in reference to it now. I did offer the resolution, however, to emphasize the situation, and I am glad that it has attracted the attention of the Senator from Colorado and that he has made the statement he has submitted.

The resolution, however, has not gone to a committee. Possibly the Senator, simply hearing it read from the desk, did not grasp the full purport of it. The resolution calls for an expression by the Senate on the question of the Federal Government or the government of the District of Columbia taking over these lines in the District. It expresses it as the sense of the Senate that we should do that, and directs the Committee on the District of Columbia to formulate legislation looking to that end.

A few years ago I was a member of a committe which investigated the street car conditions in the District of Columbia arising out of the strike which occurred at that time. I think the committee was unanimous in the view that the conditions of labor at that time were very deplorable, and that the employees were largely justified in taking the action which they did take.

The resolution which I have submitted to-day does not pretend to pass upon the merits or demerits of the demands of labor for an increase of wages. That is a question I have not looked into. I was strongly prompted to submit the resolution in order to call attention to the situation. As the Senator from Colorado has said, the people of this District must pay these increased charges, whatever they may be, and this impressed upon me that it is largely the poor people of the District, the employees of the Government, who are not getting high salaries or high wages, and people of limited means who must pay largely whatever increased expense there is from the increase of these rates and wages. In other words, the people of the District who are taxed by it are the people who are really less able to bear the tax than anybody else.

The man who has an automobile is not disturbed particularly by this increase in wages and the increase in the price of street car tickets. He gets around without any additional cost or expense. People who live within a mile, or two miles, possibly, of their work can also get to their work without suffering very much from this increased tax. But the great mass of the people who patronize, and must patronize, the street car lines are people who are not really able to pay the increased cost that must be imposed upon them by the increased price of fares. It is in the hope of saving them from this tax and this burden that I have called attention to the situation here.

Furthermore, I can not understand why the Public Utilities Commission feels that it is absolutely incumbent upon it to fix rates here so as to practically guarantee a company a 6 or 7 per cent dividend.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NUGENT. The Senator from Colorado a few moments ago made a statement to the effect that this property was recently purchased for about $10,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. No; not recently—some years ago.

Mr. NUGENT. Some years ago, then, it was purchased for about $10,000,000; and the Senator stated that in the intervening years the capitalization has been increased to something in the neighborhood of $30,000,000. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington whether he has any definite information in respect to that matter?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Colorado is correct. I have not looked it up lately.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington, further, whether, in his opinion, the Washington Railway & Electric Co. is a bankrupt concern, or whether it is a paying concern?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the street car line, together with the electric-power plant, which it owns, practically, and operates in connection with its railroad, is a paying concern. My recollection is that the testimony in the investigation we made a few years ago showed that the street car company itself was probably not on a very paying basis, but that the electric-power company, which is practically owned by the street car company, was paying very large profits.

Mr. NUGENT. I take it for granted that the Senator from Washington will not contend that there is any valid subsisting reason why the people of this community should be obliged to pay a rate of fare which would pay 6 per cent interest on about sixteen or eighteen million dollars of watered stock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not.

Mr. NUGENT. Does the Senator from Washington know of any valid reason why, if the railroad company is a bankrupt concern, it should not be placed in the hands of a receiver and sold, as are other bankrupt concerns?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not.

Mr. NUGENT. Does not the Senator believe that that would be the proper policy to pursue in this matter?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Possibly so. I am not generally in favor of Government ownership of enterprises, but I have come to the conclusion that about the best thing for the District of Columbia, and the best way to furnish really proper and adequate service, is for the Government to take the street car lines and put them together, taking the one which is making money and the one which may not be making money, both of which, however, are operating all in the same way, and using them as one system. Then we will have better service, in my judgment, and we will have cheaper service.

Mr. NUGENT. I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And we will not be threatened every three or four months with a complete tie-up of the system here through strikes of employees, and so on.

Mr. NUGENT. I am in full accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Washington, and I am very strongly of the opinion that the action of the Public Utilities Commission in ordering a further increase in fares is an outrage. I am furthermore of the opinion that were it not for the powerful influences which hold this watered stock the street car company would go the way of other bankrupt concerns and its property would be sold for whatever it would bring in the open market.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Am I to understand the Senator that this additional stock was issued without consideration? In other words, was it what is known as "watered" stock?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not remember the details with reference to the issue of the stock. The Senator from Colorado probably can tell the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not pretend to speak with any personal information or base my statement upon any personal knowledge. The Washington Railway & Electric Co., however, is practically a consolidation of a number of smaller going concerns. On June 5, 1900, an act was passed by Congress creating this corporation and limiting its stock issue to fifteen millions. My information is that the actual cost of the constituents of the company was between nine and ten millions. Of course, they were exchanged for the stock upon the theory that it was worth the face value. That is the way in which all issues of watered stock are covered.

Mr. DIAL. Let me state the point I am getting at. I think, perhaps, we can remedy this condition in the future if we shall pass a law prohibiting the issue of any watered stock. We had similar trouble in South Carolina, and at last we passed a law making it unlawful to issue any watered stock. There stock can only be issued for property.

Mr. THOMAS. In this particular case such legislation would be locking the stable door after the horse is stolen.

Mr. DIAL. I understand that is true in this particular case; but I agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] that if this enterprise can not run by charging a reasonable compensation for its services it should, like other unfortunate enterprises, be sold out, and let somebody buy it and put it on its feet, on a proper basis.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the conditions with reference to street car service in the District are becoming intolerable. Not only are the fares being raised from time to time in a very unusual degree but the service is simply abominable. It could not get much worse. Something ought to be done to meet the situation. Whether anything can be done to prevent the raise being allowed by the order of the commission that is going into effect I do not know. I do not see how anything can be done, except that we pass a law providing that fares in the District shall not exceed a certain amount, and do that before the 1st of May.

I understand from newspaper reports that this order of the Public Utilities Commission goes into effect the 1st of May. The commission have authority, under the law creating them, to regulate these rates. They have seen fit to raise the rates and have made an order increasing the rates on the 1st of May. That order will go into effect unless before that time Congress shall pass a law modifying the public-utilities act with reference to the charges that can be fixed. It occurs to me that that would probably be very difficult to do. That would only afford temporary relief. We have to meet the situation, and in my judgment it can be met now only by the Government taking hold of the matter.

I have submitted the resolution, and I expect to call it up at the very first opportunity in the hope of getting an expression from the Senate on the proposition. I have not any doubt that every Senator's mind is practically made up really as to what would be the wise thing to do, and if it should be the sense of the Senate, as declared in the resolution, then it will be a direction to the committee to formulate the legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Can the Senator state whether, combining the railroad properties with the power property of this corporation and taking the profits of both companies, it would require an 8-cent fare to enable them to declare a reasonable dividend on the whole investment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think so, but I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of the matter to state. In my judgment it would not be sufficient.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then if with its whole property it can not produce a dividend and pay a fair rate of wages, whatever that may happen to be, does it not become essential to determine that situation, and is there anything left except a receivership?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is nothing left except for the Public Utilities Commission to allow them to raise their rates or to have the Government take over the properties through receivership or otherwise.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. As a business proposition, does it not require reorganization or sale or something else to relieve the condition?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If they can not make any money, they are in a bankrupt condition, anyhow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is one of the systems of roads here in the District which is making money, and has been making money all the time. Why should we not put the two systems together and work them together?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I can not see any reason why that should not be done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In that way we could work out a system of transfers and accommodation to the public and all that sort of thing that would be much better, as well as much cheaper, making it all one system. I do not think there could be any question but that the water-power system and the two lines combined as one would work along and make money without any increase in fares over and above the rate of six tickets for a quarter.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Glass	McKellar	Spencer
Brandegee	Gronna	Nugent	Sterling
Capper	Harris	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Harrison	Phipps	Thomas
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kendrick	Reed	Warren
Dial	Kenyon	Sheppard	Watson
Dillingham	Lodge	Simmons
Edge	McCormick	Smith, Ariz.
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Smith, S. C.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is absent in attendance at a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. KIRBY, Mr. NELSON, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. McNARY, Mr. CALDER, Mr. TRAMMELL, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. HALE, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. OVERMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I feel that the number of the Army proposed in the pending bill is entirely too large. One-half the size proposed is sufficient. I do not see any necessity for such a large Army at this time. We have in this country a great many soldiers and a great many ex-officers who are now out of the service. An Army of the size proposed would entail an unnecessary expense upon the people of the United States. I am told that in Panama we now have so many soldiers that they are in the way of each other; and I imagine that is the condition in some other places. This proposed legislation will impose an unnecessary burden upon our citizens. I hope we shall take steps here not only to reduce the number of the Army by adopting this amendment, but in any other way to cut down the expense involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I understand the pending amendment proposes to strike out the feature of the bill which provides for a reduction in the size of the Army to a certain definite number—210,000—within the next five years. I might be in favor of such a reduction, and ordinarily would be, but I should like to know if there has been any estimate or if there is any way of estimating as to how many the Army will probably be increased to by the voluntary training system which is proposed to be included in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no way at all of ascertaining that.

Mr. KIRBY. There is no way of estimating whether or not that plan will be a success?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to say that perhaps I ought to put it in this way—that there is no way of estimating the degree of success. It is for that very reason that the committee thought it would be very unwise to lay down a general policy extending for six years to come making the Army smaller and smaller as the years go by, when we have not the slightest idea upon what we have to depend.

Mr. KIRBY. I thought with the training of the National Guard and with the number of men that ought to be developed under the voluntary training system we might very well afford to reduce the Army; but I do not know. As the chairman of the committee has stated, we are utterly at sea as to whether any particular armed force would be developed by this volunteer training system. Of course, if our young men do not take to it, it will not operate effectively.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We will be able to tell two years from now how the voluntary training system is coming on. The Senator from Arkansas will remember that the volunteer training system is not to take effect until the calendar year 1922; and, in view of that and the uncertainty of the result under it, I think it exceedingly unwise to legislate now for the size of the Army in 1927. That is why I have moved to strike out the provisos.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I observe that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], with whom I have a pair, is absent. I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who I notice is not in the Chamber. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. SPENCER's name was called). The present occupant of the chair has a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], but under the arrangement had with him feels free to vote and votes "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He being absent, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], but I find I am able to secure a transfer of that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]. I make that transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I understand, however, that if present the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote as I have voted. I therefore let my vote stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I find that I am able to secure a transfer of my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I make that transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY].

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is absent on official business. If present he would vote "yea."

The reading clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). For the purpose of the motion I am going to make, I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

The yeas and nays resulted:

YEAS—35.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment of the Senator from New York the yeas are 35, the nays are 12. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] are present, but have announced their pairs. A quorum is therefore present, and the amendment is agreed to.

[Mr. REED addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, and pursuant to a notice given several days ago, I present an amendment, which has been printed, which affects the Judge Advocate General's Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 32, line 6, after the word "purpose," it is proposed to insert:

Immediately upon the passage of this act the number of colonels in the Judge Advocate General's Department shall be increased by five, and the vacancies thus created shall be filled by promotion as heretofore provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York ask that this be considered as one amendment or as four?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is true that there are four amendments. They are all really linked together in their effect, however.

The READING CLERK. In line 9, strike out "major" and insert "captain."

In line 12, after "act," insert:

Vacancies remaining or occurring in the Judge Advocate General's Service, after the original appointments in the field grades authorized in section 42 of this act have been made, shall be filled by the assignment thereto of officers of the permanent personnel in their proper grades from captain to colonel, inclusive, as provided by this act; by the appointment in the grade of captain of first lieutenants of the permanent personnel; or by the appointment in the grade of captain of reserve officers not under 30 years of age of the Judge Advocate General's Service. Appointments in the grade of captain herein provided shall be subject to such examination as the Secretary of War may prescribe. Reserve officers so appointed in the grade of captain shall be considered as having had on the day of appointment sufficient prior service to entitle them to promotion to that grade and shall be placed accordingly upon the promotion list provided for in section 43 of this act.

On page 51, line 11, after "proposed," insert:

Provided, That any person under 54 years of age having special scientific, technical, or professional qualifications, and who is otherwise eligible for appointment to a field grade under the provisions of this section, may, upon the recommendation of the chief of such service and the concurrence of the board of general officers herein provided, be appointed to the grade of colonel, lieutenant colonel, or major, as provided in this section without reference to the minimum age limits otherwise prescribed for appointments in such grades. But no such person under 34 years of age shall be appointed to any field grade.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer a substitute, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

The permanent personnel of the Judge Advocate General's Service shall consist of 1 Judge Advocate General with the rank of major general, 1 Assistant Judge Advocate General with the rank of brigadier general, 16 colonels, 32 lieutenant colonels, and 72 majors. The Judge Advocate General and Assistant Judge Advocate General shall be appointed from officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department not below the grade of lieutenant colonel.

Except as in this section otherwise provided for, all officers of the Judge Advocate General's Service shall be permanently commissioned therein. One-half of the vacancies created by this section in each of the grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel shall be filled by the appointment to date from July 1, 1920, of persons, other than officers of the Regular Army, who having served as officers in or with the Judge Advocate General's Department during the present emergency have demonstrated their qualification therefor; and all vacancies in any grade which can not be filled by the promotion of officers holding permanent commissions in the Judge Advocate General's Department, may be filled by appointment as last above provided for. Vacancies in the grade of colonel and lieutenant colonel which are not filled by such appointments shall be filled by the promotion, to date from July 1, 1920, according to present seniority of officers in Class A, as provided for in section 44 of this act, now holding permanent commissions in the Judge Advocate General's Department. All vacancies created or caused by this section in the grade of major shall be filled, subject to such examination as may be prescribed, by the appointment to date from July 1, 1920, of persons, members of the bar and learned in the law, who served in the Army of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and June 30, 1919, and all vacancies remaining or thereafter occurring in the grade of major shall be filled, subject to such examination as may be prescribed, by the appointment of persons, members of the bar and learned in the law, selected from officers of the Regular Army, the Judge Advocate General's Officers' Reserve Corps, the National Guard, or civilian members of the bar. Officers appointed by selection under the foregoing provisions may be arranged in order of rank among themselves and with reference to officers promoted as of the same date, without regard to prior commissioned service: Provided, That the present order of lineal rank among themselves of officers now holding permanent commissions in said department shall not be disturbed thereby.

The President may assign to duty with the branch of the Army from which he was selected for appointment in the Judge Advocate General's Department any officer holding a commission in that department, and from and after such assignment such officer shall be regarded for all purposes as an officer of the branch of the service to which he has thus been assigned.

The reserve personnel shall consist of all reserve officers and reservists assigned to the Judge Advocate General's Service as provided for in this act.

Nothing contained in sections 42 and 43 of this act shall apply to or affect the Judge Advocate General's Service or the officers thereof."

On page 48, section 41, line 24, after the comma at the end of the word "general" and before the words "the Quartermaster General" insert the words: "the Assistant Judge Advocate General."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as you know, during the war there were many criticisms of the Judge Advocate General's Department, and this amendment, which I propose as a substitute, has been carefully prepared by the department for the purpose of democratizing the Judge Advocate General's Department as far as possible. There is a very small body of officers in the regular personnel of the Judge Advocate General's office, I think only about 28 or 30 officers, if I remember the number accurately. All the rest will go out. The department asks for 120 officers, and it seems to be the consensus of opinion that, owing to the great amount of work that is piled up in that department as a result of the war and the work which will be there for a number of years to come, this number, 120, should be allowed; and, in so far as the number is concerned, this substitute does not differ from the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

But there are a number of differences in the method of appointment. I want to read very briefly a statement from the department, and I will say that the amendment offered bears the approval of the department and of Gen. Crowder, the head of the department, as I understand, as well as of the Secretary of War. The statement reads:

"A very careful study of the situation has been made in the department to determine the smallest number of officers who will be sufficient to handle its business. Under existing law the emergency officers now connected with the department will return to their private practices at the expiration of the present fiscal year. When that time comes there will, of course, be a considerable volume of business growing out of the war which is to be regarded as abnormal. In making provision for the number of permanently commissioned officers in the Judge Advocate General's Department the amount of this abnormal business has been eliminated from consideration and the number has been carefully fixed with reference to the volume of business that may fairly be expected to continue after such abnormal business has been disposed of. The number of permanently commissioned officers thus determined will certainly not be less than 120. This is the number asked for in the proposed amendment. It may become necessary to increase this number, but it seems impossible that the actual requirements after normal conditions are restored will fall below this number. Until these conditions are restored, the 120 permanent officers asked for will be inadequate to cope with the volume of work, which on the whole is increasing rather than diminishing. The plan formulated in the amendment now advocated by the Judge Advocate General can only be put into effect at the end of the present fiscal year by assuming that a sufficient number of officers can temporarily be detailed to the Judge Advocate General's Department to afford assistance roughly commensurate with the abnormal temporary excess of work.

"If the number of officers asked for seems high to the average Member of Congress, that must be due to a general misapprehension of the volume, nature, and importance of the functions of the officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department. It is not generally understood that these functions extend beyond the conducting and reviewing of the proceedings of courts-martial and drawing, in a more or less perfunctory way, military contracts. As a matter of fact, the legal work of the War Department, all of which falls upon the Judge Advocate General, comprises every field known to the law. It is safe to say that no Federal court or any other court has occasion to consider questions wider in range than those considered by the officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department."

In this connection I wish to say that the Judge Advocate's Department recruits its forces from civilians in order to get the best service. It is impossible to take the young men who graduate from West Point or the young men who are in the line of the Army from civil life and from them select men who will make the kind of a department the Judge Advocate General's Department should be. They need trained lawyers; they need the very best kind of lawyers, and during this emergency they have had in that department a number of the most excellent and the very best lawyers.

Naturally they desire to keep as many of these lawyers in the department as they can, and this substitute provides the means by which they can be kept, the highest officer among these officers to be selected from civil life being colonel. It is possible under the substitute to appoint colonels from these men who are already in the service temporarily, and not lower than major, and it fixes no limitation as to age, and this policy should be adopted. They have some very excellent lawyers there in the department already doing splendid work, who would probably be too old under the Wadsworth amendment, and others who are doing splendid work who would probably be too young. We who are lawyers all know that the question of age does not affect a lawyer a great deal, unless he is very young or very old. Some of the very best lawyers I have ever known were at their best before they were 30; others did not reach their best until they were 60. It is a matter of temperament with lawyers, and this substitute provides that the department may have its pick and get the very best.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Right along that line I would like to ask the Senator to consider this hypothetical case: Suppose a lawyer went into the service of the Government in this department during the war, a man, we will say, 52, 53, or it may be 54 years old, and rendered splendid service to the Government, a strong lawyer, who desired to stay with the Government. Under the substitute of the Senator from Tennessee, could such a man be kept in the department?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I read from page 2 of the substitute:

One-half of the vacancies created by this section in each of the grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel shall be filled by the appointment, to date from July 1, 1920, of persons, other than officers of the Regular Army, who having served as officers in or with the Judge Advocate General's Department during the present emergency have demonstrated their qualification therefor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I suggest that the portion of the Senator's amendment which wipes out all limitations as to age is found at the bottom of page 3?

Mr. KENYON. In any event one-half would be appointed from civilian life?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of the lieutenant colonels there will be at least half, and there will be a portion of the colonels who are appointed from those men, and all limitations as to age are wiped out by this proposed substitute.

Mr. KENYON. Does the substitute provide that a certain number of the colonels shall be appointed from that class of men?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I am not good at remembering numbers exactly, but I think there are some 28 officers, and probably about half of the colonels and lieutenant colonels will be appointed from the Regular Establishment and about half will be civilian appointments, and if the substitute shall be agreed to the department will have no limitations as to age.

Mr. President, I want to proceed just a little further about the nature of this work, and I read from this report of the department on this subject:

"4. The nature of the work: The functions of the department are essentially threefold: (a) To carry out the discipline of the Army through the system of courts-martial and other military tribunals and particularly to prevent and correct miscarriages of justice and errors in its administration."

I want to pause here long enough to say that it is very essential we should have these gentlemen from civil life to pass upon the questions arising in courts-martial. It is claimed by many people that where judge advocates come from the Regular Army their decisions are in accordance with military procedure absolutely, that they are inclined to render harsh judgments.

I do not know whether that it is true or not; but, at all events, if we fill up this corps with civilian employees, and especially from these men who have been experienced in the Great War in passing upon these questions, surely the country can feel assured that their judgments will be, for the most part, at any rate, righteous judgments, and judgments which will be fair and just to the soldiers who are being tried by these courts-martial. I think the mothers and fathers of this country will feel much easier in mind when they know that their boys who may get into trouble of one kind or another in the Army are going to have their cases reviewed, where it is proper to review them, by civilian lawyers who have been brought into the Army in this way and who are not trained Army officers, and therefore likely to be more careful of military discipline than these men who are brought in from civil life.

I read further:

"(b) Aside from offenses against discipline, to determine the rights and relations that exist between the Government, on the one hand, and officers and soldiers, on the other hand, and between the latter inter sese, and (c) to determine the rights and relations which exist between the Army and the War Department, on the one hand, and private individuals and concerns on the other.

"(1) The administration of military justice is the only part of the work of the Judge Advocate General's Department of which Congress and the public have, in general, a fair conception. It comprises the supervision of preliminary investigations, drawing charges and specifications, participating upon trials, giving advice in respect of confirming, modifying, mitigating, or annulling sentences to the convening and reviewing authorities, including commanding generals, the Secretary of War, and the President, and, in substance, if not in theory, assuming the responsibility of a court of criminal appeals. These duties demand consummate understanding and practical grasp of legal theory and the exercise of mature wisdom, judgment, discretion, and sagacity. If the department fails in these qualities, lax discipline, fatal to efficiency, will go unpunished and unchecked, or else there will be injustice to the accused, either by way of punishing the innocent on mere suspicion or by way of visiting harsh and severe punishments on minor offenders.

"During the war the military justice work of the Judge Advocate General's office at Washington, which amounts to no more than from one-third to two-fifths of the legal work of that office, has, by comparison, been found to exceed in volume the aggregate criminal appellate court work of 39 of the States of the Union. (The present average is approximately 425 general court-martial cases per month, or over 15 cases per day.) And in this statement no account is taken of the field work of the Judge Advocate General's Department, which is quite distinct from the work of the Judge Advocate General's office. After reestablishment of peace conditions and after disposing of all the tasks created by the war, the volume of the military justice work of the department can not diminish to anything like its prewar volume. This is manifest from several considerations. First, the Army is to be about three times as large as before the war. Second, the review of court-martial records at Washington, which before the war was slight and confined to very few cases, was enormously extended in scope by General Order No. 7, War Department, January 17, 1918. This order will be made effective permanently, and the country demands that it should be. Third, there is the strongest probability that Congress will require greatly increased services by judge advocates at court-martial trials, either by acting as counsel to the accused or as a member or quasi member of the court. The present amendment, however, makes no provision for the increased personnel which such legislation will require.

"(2) Questions relating to the treatment which, under the acts of Congress, an officer or a soldier is entitled to receive from the Government and relating to the place which he is entitled to occupy with reference to his fellow officers and fellow soldiers cast upon the Judge Advocate General's Department a burden greater than would be anticipated. The questions relate not only to pay, rank, retirement, decorations, furloughs, and allowances for quarters, rations, fuel, and light, but also the management of post exchanges, the use and control of company and regimental funds, and the compensation properly awarded in case of death, injury, or disability. Unless these questions are solved legally, justly, and wisely dissatisfaction and loss of morale will be the result.

"(3) In volume and also, at least from the taxpayers' point of view, in importance the foregoing activities of the Judge Advocate General's Department are overshadowed by those incident to disposing of the questions of a business and largely of a nonmilitary nature which the Army and the War Department must solve. The tremendous increase in the absolute and relative volume of work of this sort is due to the change that has been wrought in the nature of warfare. It is no longer entirely or even principally a conflict between trained and armed men. It is now principally a contest between engines and machinery and artillery and the arts and methods of production, manufacture, and supply. The activities of this nature which the Army must exercise, and the machinery, plants, equipment, warehouses, and facilities which it must possess can never return to the prewar scale; and the legal problems are necessarily commensurate with the volume of these activities and the number and value of these properties. Work of the nature now referred to comprises at present 60 per cent to 65 per cent of the legal work of the department. With the return of peace conditions, it may probably amount to a higher percentage. That legal questions of a business and nonmilitary nature should be so numerous and important will only be understood if the fact is grasped that the War Department, with its many ramifications, is and will continue to be a prodigious business enterprise. It is engaged in business as landowner and tenant, as a manufacturer, as a warehouseman, as an employer of workmen, as common carrier, as operator of railways and ships, as a builder, owner, and charterer of ships, and as ruler of distant insular and other territorial possessions, including Porto Rico, the Philippines, and the Panama Canal Zone. If those who make claims upon the War Department are given what they are justly entitled to, the expense and delay and waste of time of public officials through unsuccessful litigations is avoided. And if correct conclusions can be reached which will prevent claimants from receiving more than they are justly entitled to, great economies in money are attained.

It would not be an exaggeration to say that the Judge Advocate General's Department has been saving and will continue to save the Government, on the average, several millions of dollars every month.

"On the whole, the Judge Advocate General's Department is the hardest worked in proportion to its numbers of any department of the Army, and it would cause the greatest loss to the country to cut down its personnel without justification.

"To convey some notion of the range and importance of the legal questions that the Judge Advocate General's Department is called upon to consider and upon which it must advise with businesslike promptness, a few such questions taken at random from those actually referred for opinion within the last few weeks, without any effort to select the most important, is appended hereto.

"5. General officers: There is agreement everywhere that the Judge Advocate General himself should continue in future to be a major general, as he has been in the past. During the war there have been four other general officers in the department. It is believed that it would be commensurate with the size of the department, as it ought to be, and would conduce to efficiency to have permanently two general officers of the rank of brigadier general in addition to the Judge Advocate General. This would accord with the two great divisions of the Washington office, viz, the military justice division and the financial or administrative law division.

"6. How newly created vacancies shall be filled: Aside from the question of the size of the department the principal question is how it shall be constituted. The department is greatly in need of additional permanent officers who have had the benefit of professional training in private practice before the ordinary courts of the land. The department was fortunate enough to be able to bring in as emergency officers during the war some of the leading lawyers of the country. The most valuable of them are still in the department. They are on the average substantially older than the regular officers and have been many years in private practice. Although they have patriotically given up their private practice to enter the Army, now that peace has returned it will be impossible to retain their services unless they can be offered commissions commensurate, at least in relation to other officers, with the work which they have been doing, which they are better qualified than others to do, and in the doing of which the department desires to continue them. To accomplish this the number of colonelcies and lieutenant colonelcies must needs be made somewhat greater than is done in either of the pending bills, and it must be made possible to offer to the most valuable of the present emergency officers permanent commissions as colonels and lieutenant colonels. If provision should not be made for them at this time and they should return to their private practice at the end of June, it would be impossible, unless this country should have a future war, to get them back into the service upon any inducement which the Government could then offer them. The best way in which the desired result can, as a matter of practice, be attained is to have Congress itself determine how many of the vacancies shall be filled by the appointment of emergency officers. In the amendment now submitted by the Secretary of War and approved by the Judge Advocate General this is taken care of by providing, in effect, that the Regular officers shall have not only the existing colonelcies and lieutenant colonelcies, but also one-half of any created colonelcies and lieutenant colonelcies, and that the emergency officers should receive the remaining one-half of the created colonelcies and lieutenant colonelcies.

"7. Wherein the pending Senate bill is deficient: S. 3792 sacrifices the Judge Advocate General's Department to considerations of mere sameness and conformity with the general scheme designed for the Army at large. No allowance is made for its needs as a distinct professional branch of the service. No difference is recognized in the qualifications of the judge advocates and other officers of the Army generally with respect either to age, service, prior professional learning, or experience. Exceptional provision has been made for the Medical Department on account of its professional character, but like consideration, although impelled by the same or more cogent reasons, has been withheld from the Judge Advocate General's Department.

"S. 3792 provides a single list of all officers of the Army arranged according to length of prior commissioned service. This scheme, ideal, perhaps, for the Army at large, is demonstrably unworkable within this small professional branch. One illustration will suffice to show this. Suppose that at the age of 35 a civilian lawyer has achieved sufficient success at the bar to be offered, and that, actuated by an unusual degree of patriotism, he hereafter accepts, a commission as major judge advocate. All the majors of the Army who held commissions as such upon his becoming a major will, of course, be promoted ahead of him. But the crux of the situation is that every captain and every lieutenant in the entire Army, even the 21-year-old second lieutenant who shall have been graduated from West Point the day before the civilian lawyer becomes a major, will be promoted ahead of him. In other words, he must count upon never being promoted. Clearly under such a system the only members of the bar who in general could be induced to accept commissions would be those whose services would not bring to the Army any distinct benefit.

"S. 3792 does not provide a definite number of officers in any of the authorized grades for any particular branch or arm, although the total number of officers for each authorized grade is fixed for the entire Army. The number of judge advocates in each grade would depend upon such a distribution as could be obtained from the total number in each grade provided for the entire Army. If the judge advocates were distributed among the different grades in the same proportion as that which obtains for the entire Army, the Senate bill would admit of 14 colonels, 15 lieutenant colonels, and 51 majors for this department. The 120 officers sought by the amendment, if distributed in the same proportion, would give 20 colonels, 23 lieutenant colonels, and 77 majors. The proposed amendment appears conservative in fixing the number at 16 colonels, 32 lieutenant colonels, and 72 majors. The only increased provision for the Judge Advocate General's Department which is asked for is, therefore, the greater total number of officers."

Mr. President, I believe that the principal objection of the chairman of the committee to the substitute is over the rapid promotion of the 28 Regular officers now in the department that will be caused by reason of the passage of the substitute. It is true that if the single list is adopted there probably will have to be some change in the amendment, but I hope that it will not be put on the single-list basis. I do not think the department ought to be placed in that situation.

The substitute provides that men who come into the department hereafter shall be selected to a very large extent from civil life. It does not cut out the Regular Army, because that would be unfair. There are many Regular Army officers who are graduates of West Point or who come in from civil life who have a tendency toward the profession of the law.

Many times these young men are stationed at colleges as commandant or superintendent, and under those circumstances if they want to take a course in law and graduate in law and become perfected in their studies and enabled to graduate and get a license to practice law, under the provisions of the substitute they can enter into the service and it does not cut them out at all; but for the most part it provides for civilians coming into the department.

In order to get good lawyers you have to pay them. It does not pay to get in this department a man who is inefficient. The Government should have the very best. You can not get the best if you shut out from him all possibility of promotion. For that reason it seems to me that it ought to be excluded from the single list, if the single list should be adopted, and the Government should have men of such ability and such efficiency that we may know that the very best service and the very best skill and the very best ability is had in the Judge Advocate General's Department.

If the Government needs a lawyer it should have a good one. I think the provision for captains in this service is all wrong. You can not get a good lawyer anywhere for a captain's pay. The basic pay of a captain is about $2,400, and all told, I believe, it is about $3,000 under the present law. We can not get for that pay the kind of a lawyer that we want or that the Government ought to have or that this department ought to have. In addition to that, if we are going to shut out these men from any future promotion, of course we are not going to get them into the Army, and the kind that we will get will be the kind that the Government really does not need and should not have.

My judgment is that we ought not to make a mistake about it. This is distinctly a professional employment, distinctly so. It is an employment where we must be careful to get the best, and the only way we can get the best is to give them such salaries as will compensate them in a measure, or at least sufficiently to keep themselves and their families from want. They will take a great deal more pride in their work and will do better service if they are given some chance at promotion. If these men are brought in on the single list they will not be given that chance that they should receive in this department.

The legal department ought to be a quasi civilian department of the Government. By the terms of the substitute it is virtually made a civilian department of the Army, and it ought to be made a quasi civilian department of the Army. When I say that I do not mean to reflect at all upon the officers of the Army who have come from the Regular Army to serve in this department.

Some of them I know to be the very best lawyers and the very best kind of men. This does not exclude that kind, but what we do in the substitute is virtually to make it a civilian department, in which the whole country will have confidence. We will hear very much less, in my judgment, about the inordinate and cruel and inhuman punishments that have been inflicted by courts-martial where we have this kind of a civilian department to pass upon the mistakes of the courts-martial.

For these reasons I sincerely hope the substitute will be adopted. It is in the interest of efficiency; it is in the interest of the orderly management of the legal affairs of the Army; it is in keeping with what we ought to do. If there is to be any reorganization, let us make this a separate department and take it away from the single list, just as the Medical Department, I believe, is taken away. At all events, let this professional department, this highly skilled and highly technical department, be taken away from the single list and made separate and apart, so that the very best services can be had.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I noticed in the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee references to court-martial proceedings and criticisms that have arisen, and I think the tenor of his remarks has been that the criticisms have been directed to officers of the Regular Army serving in those court-martial cases, where he assumes that the officers taken from civilian service would be perhaps less severe.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the general public impression. I do not know whether it has any foundation or not. I do not mean to make any charge about it.

Mr. WARREN. That supposition is incorrect. There have been mistakes made, and severe sentences have been given both by officers of the Regular Army and by those of the civilian or drafted staff.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be entirely correct. I have no information about it.

Mr. WARREN. But the most severe sentences upon the lesser crimes or misdemeanors have been administered by those taken into the service from civilian life, and who assumed that the office that they held required that in time of war punishments should be of a more severe nature than any that had been administered heretofore.

That matter all came before the subcommittee considering military justice which has been taking evidence, and there are some 1,500 pages of those hearings. I think that Senators should not maintain that there are any more criticisms due—in fact, there are less criticisms due findings of officers of the Regular Army than are due those officers taken from civilian service. I do not want to accuse those from civilian or Regular service of intentional cruelty.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be entirely true. I am not advised as to the relative severity of the sentences inflicted by the officers of the Regular service and by those officers who came in from civilian service, but we all know from the newspapers that many complaints have come in about the cruel and inhuman punishments being inflicted.

I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if he does not agree with me that if we build up this department of men who have been trained in the temporary service during the war, coming in from civil life, splendid lawyers peculiarly trained during the late emergency for this work, that it will have a tendency to do away with the fear that this kind of punishment may be made permanent?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I believe it will be very beneficial to the service to draw from both sources.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all the substitute which I have offered provides. It provides that the Judge Advocate General's Department may be recruited from the National Guard, from civilian life, and from those who have served as temporary officers, as well as from those serving in the Regular Army. I hope the substitute will be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not pretend to understand the application either of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] for the committee or the substitute proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. They are both technical and involve a knowledge of the organization of the Army which I do not possess. I have, however, a very definite thought in my mind and a very clearly defined purpose. I intend to make an appeal to the chairman of the committee to lend his influence to embody in some form, and the form is entirely immaterial to me, the purpose which I shall endeavor to express.

It is not in my mind to suggest anything that will tend to retard the promotion and the recognition of the veteran Regular Army officers who are now in the department. I know many of them; they are highly qualified; they are exceedingly faithful; and nothing that I say must be understood as suggesting any disparagement or criticism of the work of those officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to say at this point that I indorse what the Senator has said about the officers in the Regular Establishment; I fully agree with him; and if my remarks suggested anything to the contrary I did not intend them in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, the observations of the Senator from Tennessee are in entire accord with the views I shall attempt to enforce, and I think I am in entire sympathy with the amendment which he proposes, but it is too complicated and too intricate for me. I intend to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to consider just one proposition and to see that in some fashion or other it is embodied in the law.

We all know that the work of the Judge Advocate General's Department has vastly increased both in volume and in importance, and that to discharge or perform that work satisfactorily necessitates the employment of experienced, competent lawyers. The work of administering military justice is no more important, indeed, I think it is less important, viewed from one standpoint, than the interpretation and the construction of the law so far as it relates to the civil rights both of the Government and of those who enter into some kind of relation with it. Both these great departments of the law require and demand as good lawyers as we can secure.

In the course of the last three or four years and during the German war there have been called into this department necessarily a number of lawyers who are patriotically inclined, who have a natural disposition to enter the service of the Government, and who have performed the most efficient and valuable work in connection with their duties. We can not keep those men or any considerable number of them unless Congress directly and positively shall say in this bill that a certain number of them are to be retained. Because I am a lawyer, I suppose, I have been led naturally into more intimate acquaintance with the work being done in the Judge Advocate General's Department than any other department of the military branch of the Government, and I know that at this time a great many of these capable, experienced lawyers are seriously considering resignation from the service, and unless we at this time are able to give positive assurance that they may take their places as a part of the permanent personnel of the Judge Advocate General's Department, they will retire from the service.

When they do retire, I predict that it will be wholly impossible for the Secretary of War or the Judge Advocate General, no matter how much they may so desire, to fill those places with like men.

I understand that it is the ultimate purpose of the chairman of the committee as well as of the Secretary of War that a certain number of these men shall be retained; not because the department desires to favor them, but because their service is necessary in order to do the work of the department as it should be done. As we all know, it is absolutely impossible to secure the services of a good lawyer for a captain's pay or a major's pay, and I doubt very much whether it can be successfully accomplished with a lieutenant colonel's pay. The rewards of the legal profession are so rich at this time—and that has been true for years past—that the pay of a lieutenant colonel or a colonel is not very attractive compensation for men who are competent to do the work which these men are called upon now every day to do.

This is my suggestion to the chairman of the committee, and I care not whether it is embodied in some form of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee or in some form of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. I should like Congress to say now that in the reorganization of the Army, which we are contemplating and for which we are now providing, there shall be a certain number of colonels and a certain number of lieutenant colonels. I am not interested in any grade below that of lieutenant colonel, because I do not think we can retain the men I have in mind with the pay and the rank of less than a lieutenant colonel; but I should like it to be stated directly that of this increased force at least 6 colonels shall be taken from the emergency army of the United States, without regard to and outside of the Regular Army force, and that at least 16 lieutenant colonels who are now in the service of the United States shall be taken from the emergency army of the United States. In that way, if we will say that, and say it directly, so that it shall be understood from this time on that we intend to reorganize the department in this fashion, we will be able, I hope and I believe, to retain these valuable men, or some of them at least, in the service. What arrangement ought to be made for majors and captains and first lieutenants and second lieutenants, I do not pretend to say.

I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not understand that I am criticizing his amendment in any way at all, but I am pointing out the thing which I think ought to be accomplished and which can be accomplished simply by saying in the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York that of this increased force at least 6 colonels and at least 16 lieutenant colonels shall be selected or chosen from the ranks of the emergency army instead of from the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is provided that there shall be 16 colonels, 32 lieutenant colonels, and 72 majors. The substitute that I have offered in terms requires that one-half of the vacancies, to wit, 8 colonels and 16 lieutenant colonels, shall be filled from the list of temporary officers.

Mr. CUMMINS. I gathered that from the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the purpose of it. I merely wish to say that if these officers are left on a single list a man appointed as major will have nothing to look forward to, because the chances are that he will never be promoted; but if they are kept in a separate department, as the substitute proposes, then he can look forward to promotion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am simply looking to the main point. I do not want to become involved in the controversy in regard to the single, the double, the triple, or the quadruple list. No matter what may be the policy adopted in that regard, in order to provide for the present contingency, this bill ought to declare the policy or the will of Congress in the respect that I have mentioned. I ask the chairman of the committee whether there is anything unreasonable, unfair, or likely to result in disadvantage to the United States or to the Army of the United States if my suggestion were adopted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; I do not think anything unfair or disadvantageous would result; but the desired result can be accomplished without the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that it can be accomplished without the amendment, but there is great fear that it will not be done unless Congress so directs. A further great consideration is that if this bill is passed and we go forward to a reorganization of the Army, which may take weeks and months, and possibly a year before the matter is finally adjusted, the men whose services I think we ought to retain will not wait for the uncertain movements of a board which is to arrange this allotment. If the Senator from New York believes it ought to be done, why should we not do it, and do it now, and do it so that everybody will understand what is to be done in that respect?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to the element of time. The fact that we write this provision into the amendment would not immediately bring about what he desires. These men would have to be examined after the act takes effect.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not concerning myself with those details. I assume that all the provisions with regard to ascertaining qualifications and all other matters of that kind will remain in the bill. Far be it from me even to suggest that any incompetent man shall be retained in the service, or a man who can not pass any examination which the orders of the department may require.

When we come finally to decide the matter I intend to propose just that amendment, if other amendments which are intended to accomplish the same result are not adopted. I intend to narrow it just to that one point, not by eliminating any of the precautions which the Senator from New York has embodied in his bill, but solely by providing by act of Congress that a certain number of colonels and a certain number of lieutenant colonels shall be appointed in the Regular service from the emergency Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this matter of the proper organization of the Judge Advocate General's Service is one which has disturbed the Committee on Military Affairs for several weeks. I say "for several weeks" because had we ever realized in the committee that the bill as drawn last autumn, which had been sent to the War Department for criticism and suggestions, contained provisions which adversely affected that particular service, we should have attempted to reach a conclusion last autumn. The truth is, however, that it was only about a month ago when the Judge Advocate General of the Army and the Assistant Judge Advocate General informed the committee that any trouble was pending, long after the bill had been reported to the Senate. Since that time various proposals have been made in the way of amendments which would clear up the situation and enable the Judge Advocate General's Service to function in an efficient and adequate way; and the disposition of the committee has been all along to see to it that that service is not crippled. It is true that the bill as printed and as reported from the committee originally would have had a most unfortunate effect upon the Judge Advocate General's Service. We did not realize it at the time, not having been warned.

The amendment offered by myself is the result of a special meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs called a few days ago to consider all the different amendments and proposals that up to that time had been offered or made. The Assistant Judge Advocate General, Gen. Kreger, and his subordinates in the department have been working for some time in drafting a proposed amendment. That had been shown to me on several occasions, and it was laid before the committee. The Secretary of War had prepared by some one—I know not whom—the amendment which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has offered, and the contents of that amendment were also presented to the committee. I have not before me a copy of the amendment suggested by the Judge Advocate General himself. Suffice it to say that it is quite different from the one suggested by the Senator from Tennessee; so that his statement that this represents the views of the Judge Advocate General to-day puzzles me somewhat, because this is not the amendment that was presented to the Military Affairs Committee from the Judge Advocate General's office.

There is no question but that the department needs 120 officers. There is no quarrel upon that point. The bill as presented gave them originally only 80 officers, and by an amendment which I offered day before yesterday we raised that number to 120. There is no question but that the department has an exceedingly heavy task and needs able men to conduct its business, and that it can not secure from the line of the Regular Army a sufficient number of experienced and well-grounded lawyers to carry on that work, and therefore that it must rely to some extent at least upon getting men from civil life to take commissions in the Regular Army from now on or induce those who are now in to stay in.

The bill as drawn does not attempt to say how many colonels there shall be in any branch of the service, nor how many lieutenant colonels there shall be in any branch, nor how many majors or captains. The bill, as I have said upon many occasions, simply provides that out of the pool of officers provided for in section 12 of the bill there shall be assigned or allotted to the several services what might be termed a standard number of officers, not fixing the grades in which they shall be appointed; and so this bill, so far as it is applicable to the Judge Advocate General's Service, provides that they shall have 120 officers in the grades of colonel to captain, inclusive—I think it is printed now, colonel to major, inclusive. The War Department can assign just as many colonels to the Judge Advocate General's Service as it pleases, or just as many lieutenant colonels, or just as many majors, or just as many captains, so long as it does not exceed the total of 120, and may exceed the total of 120 if the President authorizes it to do so. So, I say, there is no limit to the discretion in the naming of officers in the Judge Advocate General's Service in the several grades, and there is really no limit to the aggregate number if the President can be persuaded that they need more than 120 officers.

The bill, however, as reported was defective in that by putting the officers of the Judge Advocate General's Service upon the single list, a peculiar result has been brought about in that particular office. It so happens that three or four of the regular officers there, when placed upon the single list, would have been jumped by three or four other officers in the same department who would have gone over them and would have displaced them, and the service would have been disrupted to that extent. There would have been a somersaulting of officers as a result of the operation of the single list. The Judge Advocate General asked us to cure that situation by providing that there should be five more colonels in the service, and that those five colonels should be appointed according to the provisions of law existing at the time of the passage of this act. That, of course, would have resulted in the promotion of five lieutenant colonels in the Judge Advocate General's Service to the rank of colonel. That, in turn, would have permitted the commissioned personnel in the grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel to straighten itself out in such a way as that when you put the whole of them in the single list no change would have been brought about in the relative rank or grade inside the Judge Advocate General's Service.

The committee is willing to do that. My amendment provides that there shall be five additional colonels and that they shall be promoted according to the provisions of existing law. That means that five lieutenant colonels, all Regulars, who are now in that department will become colonels.

The Judge Advocate General's Department also asked us to add 10 lieutenant colonels, to create 10 vacancies in the grade of lieutenant colonel, and that they, too, be filled by the promotion of officers now in the Judge Advocate General's service occupying the grade of major. The committee halted at that point. It had a little too much of the aspect of wholesale promotion by law, confined only to the Regular Service in that regard. Had that request been granted by the Military Affairs Committee, every officer of the Regular Establishment now serving in the Judge Advocate General's Department, with the exception of two, would have been promoted one full grade, and as a result of that would have jumped something like six years ahead of their contemporaries in other branches of the service when placed upon the single list.

We could not quite accept that proposal. We thought that was asking too much. I venture to say that nothing like it has been proposed by any other service; and if we were to do such a thing as that before we established the single list several other services would come in and would inevitably demand that we give them immediate promotion before they were put upon the single list. The committee realize that we must have civilians to piece out this department; there is no doubt about it; and so we propose an amendment to that section of the bill which has to do with the admission of emergency officers into the Regular Army. That is section 42.

Section 42 provides that at least half of the vacancies created by this act in the permanent commissioned personnel must be filled by emergency officers who are veterans of this war. Half of all the appointments that are going to be made necessary in the Regular Service must be these veteran officers. The committee placed a maximum age limitation of 50 years applicable to those appointments into the Regular Army. Of course, we must have an age limitation somewhere—I think at least we ought to—because there are several things to consider in this matter of age and rank and the amount of time which an officer may serve until he is retired. Officers must retire at 64. If we put the age limit much above 50 and allow officers to come in at 55, 56, or 57 years of age, as I have heard suggested by some of their friends, we will find them only serving six or seven years and then retiring on three-quarters pay for the rest of their lives.

That is going a little strong, so the committee had to put an age limit somewhere, and, after the best study we could give to it, we decided that, generally speaking, 50 years should be the maximum age for the admission of officers into the Regular Army. I think it has never been put as high as that before; at least not to my knowledge.

Then, it was pointed out to us that in some of the services, like Chemical Warfare, and perhaps Ordnance, and perhaps Engineers, and certainly in the Judge Advocate General's Service, it was exceedingly desirable to lift the limitation somewhat; that there were more than a few men, there were quite a number of men, now holding commissions as emergency officers who are over the age of 50, and whom it would be exceedingly desirable to keep in the service until they are 64.

The committee finally agreed to the proposal that in certain cases the age limit should be higher than 50. So, as a part of my amendment, we proposed to amend that section of the bill which imposes a 50-year age limitation with this proviso:

Provided, That any person under 54 years of age having special scientific, technical, or professional qualifications and who is otherwise eligible for appointment to a field grade under the provisions of this section, may, upon the recommendation of the chief of such service and the concurrence of the board of general officers herein provided, be appointed to the grade of colonel, lieutenant colonel, or major, as provided in this section without reference to the minimum age limits otherwise prescribed for appointments in such grades. But no such person under 34 years of age shall be appointed to any field grade.

The lowest rank in field grade, of course, as is well known, is the rank of major.

The committee believes that that establishes a sufficiently liberal provision to meet this particular problem. If the Judge Advocate General has his eye upon an emergency officer who is a good lawyer and who has served, we will say, during the war, who is over 50, but still under 54 years of age, and will make his recommendation that that officer is especially needed by reason of his professional qualifications, it is entirely within the power of the War Department to commission him. I think there is no doubt whatsoever but that the department and this board of general officers, to which reference has been made, will follow the recommendations of the different service chiefs in that regard, and in that way civilians up to the age of 54 can be brought into the Judge Advocate General's service.

The committee thinks that is about the extent of the exception in the matter of age limitation to which it ought to go. An officer joining the Regular Army at the age of 54 will serve only 10 years before he is retired for life at three-fourths of the pay of his rank. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee wipes out all limitation whatsoever.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator leaves that, I notice, in line 22 of his amendment, the following:

But no such person under 34 years of age shall be appointed to any field grade.

It seems to me that that limitation ought not to be in the bill. As I stated before, some of the best lawyers I have ever known were good lawyers before they were 34 years of age, and even before they were 30 years of age. I think some of the very best I have ever known won their spurs and became famous lawyers by the time they were 30.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that brings up another side of the question. Before I approach that, may I say to the Senator that the heaviest emphasis in this whole discussion about the Judge Advocate General's Service is that they want to get the older men in, not the younger. They want to get older, more mature men into the grades of lieutenant colonel and colonel, and with that I agree. You can not use the same argument in favor of lifting the limit of age that you use in favor of lowering the limit of age and apply it to the same department and use the same reasons.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from New York is not a lawyer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I am not.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator were a lawyer and had practiced at the bar, he would know that the question of a lawyer's ability does not depend on his age, whether young or old. It depends on the kind of a lawyer he is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am taking the word of the Judge Advocate General. He and his assistants have talked to me and my colleagues on the committee time and time again, and their principal argument is that they must have middle-aged men of mature experience. As I recollect their arguments, they say it is exceedingly difficult to find a man 31 or 32 years old who can carry the responsibilities which are sometimes placed upon an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Service. They want men of 40, 45, 50, and 54. That is their principal argument.

Now, it is proposed by the Senator from Tennessee to wipe out the minimum age limit completely, and let any man over 21 years of age occupy any grade in the Judge Advocate General's Service. I submit that that is an absurd proposition, and indefensible. Mr. President, you can not take men of 27 or 28 and make them colonels or lieutenant colonels, or even majors, without causing a great deal of bitter feeling and most embarrassing situations in the Army.

The Senator from Tennessee suggests that this minimum age limit of 34 years for the rank of major will work more harm than good. I propose to demonstrate that it will work a great deal more good than harm. Thirty-four years of age is a little under the average age of majors in the Army. If you are going to take men of 32 and 30 and 29 and 28 and appoint them as majors, and put them on the single list above captains in the Regular Army who have served for 10 or 12 years, and keep them above those captains all the rest of their Army careers, what are you going to do to the morale of the Army? You simply can not do things of that sort.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the provision in his amendment that captains may be appointed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is an entirely different question. That has nothing to do with the age limitation.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is inseparably connected with it. I do not think men ought to be appointed in this department as captains, because you can not get the kind of a lawyer who ought to be in this department on a captain's pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Or at a captain's age?

Mr. McKELLAR. I disagree with the Senator wholly about the captain's age, for the reason that some of the very best lawyers I have ever known, whether you regard them as trial lawyers or in any other way in which you take them, were less than 30 years old. I have in mind some gentlemen of my own bar, at Memphis, where I think we have as good a bar as anywhere in the country, who won their spurs before they were 30 years old, and became the superiors of men who had been practicing law a great many more years than they were old.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was discussing the age limitations and not captains. I again suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee wipes out all age limitation whatsoever.

Under his amendment you could appoint a man to the Judge Advocate General's Service 63 years and 11 months old, who would retire in one month. Does the Senator think that should be permitted? It can be done under his amendment. Under his amendment a boy of 21 years and 1 day can be appointed a major. Ought that to be permitted?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, such an appointment would not be made. The department would never do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We propose to have a little bit of standardization about it, and we say that no man under 34 years of age shall be appointed to a field grade, and the lowest field grade is the rank of major. We put that minimum age limit in for the purpose of protecting all the other officers of approximately the same age who are in the Army to-day. We can not very well afford to take men under 34 and appoint them as majors and put them over captains who have had 10, 12, or 15 years of service, and keep them over them all the rest of their lives in the Army, running on a single list of promotion, or any system of promotion. You would create a degree of discontent all through the commissioned personnel of the Army that would go far toward ruining its morale.

There is a limit to this matter of jumping civilians over men of much longer service, and we have tried to place such a limit at an intelligent figure, and we do not believe, with the study we have given it, that the Judge Advocate General's Service will suffer by reason of the fact that it is not permitted under the law to appoint men in the grade of major below the age of 34. They can appoint them as captains if they want to; and there is nothing in the bill which attempts to limit the number of colonels assigned to the Judge Advocate General's Service, or to limit the number of lieutenant colonels, or to limit the number of majors. The Secretary of War and his board of general officers can assign to the Judge Advocate General's Service just as many of those officers as he and they think it needs; and when they have filled up the number to 120, if they have not enough then the President can raise the number, and more officers can be put in in any grade that is considered wise.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I see just what he wants to accomplish, and I am for it. I did, however, want to point out the danger of wiping out all age limitations; and when I have a chance, in a moment, I want to point out the advantage that can be gained by adding the grade of captain to the Judge Advocate General's Service. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall not interrupt the Senator until later.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator and I can get together rather easily and draw a proviso which will result in assuring the assignment of a given number of emergency colonels and lieutenant colonels in the Judge Advocate General's Service, provided, of course, as the Senator will understand, that the number be reasonable, as I have no doubt he would propose.

The criticism has been made that we should not permit captains to be assigned to the Judge Advocate General's Service. It is probable that very few would be assigned immediately upon the passage of this act. But when we remember that a very large number of emergency officers are going to be commissioned in the Regulars after this act goes into effect, that half of all the vacancies created by the act must be filled by emergency officers, veterans of the war, and that, further, the act is going to create something like 9,000 vacancies, we see that something like 4,500 emergency officers are going to be commissioned in the Regular Army, subject, of course, to examinations in all the grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive. It is fair to assume, Mr. President, that the majority of those men will be commissioned in the Regular Army in the grades of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain, quite a number of majors, a somewhat less number of lieutenant colonels, and an even less number of colonels; but the bulk of them are going to come in in the grade of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain.

Many of these men before the German war, before they went into the Army as emergency officers, had had some experience in practicing law. We all know that. Many of them are acquaintances of ours, graduates of first-class law schools, who had practiced law. Just as the Senator from Tennessee has said, there are some young lawyers who are very able. That being the case, why make it impossible for the Judge Advocate General to go out and get some of those captains who are being commissioned in the Regular Army and get them assigned to the Judge Advocate General's Service, and there give them the additional training and experience which nearly all officers, when once they join that service, have to have, and let them grow up in the service? It seems to me that an opportunity will be afforded as the years go by—and I am talking about the conditions 5 or 6 or 10 years from now—for building up from the ground, as it were, a Judge Advocate General's Service. If you open that service to captains, and are careful not to fix the number of captains who must be taken in, then the Secretary of War and the officers of the Army who have the personnel distribution in charge can use their judgment from time to time, and if they see a captain of Infantry who they are informed has been a good lawyer in civil life, and who is willing to transfer to the Judge Advocate General's Service, they can transfer him and put him in, or they can take a first lieutenant and raise him to the rank of captain and put him in.

It certainly can not hurt the Judge Advocate General's Service, and it may help it. I think it will help it after the office is reorganized and gets going upon a normal basis, which will not be for two or three years; that is, the normal basis will not be reached before that time, because the law business left over from the war is so tremendous.

A suggestion has been made by the Senator from Tennessee that we take these men off the single list and put them in the same category, I presume he would say, as the medical officers in the Army, the veterinarians, the dental officers, and the chaplains. That resolves itself down to a question of policy. I have heard some officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department say that it would be a good thing for the service. I have heard others say that it would be a most unfortunate thing for the service. The committee has leaned to the latter view. If we take the judge advocates off the single list and put them off to one side, with their own scheme of promotion, it means that no longer will a judge advocate be considered a soldier in the accepted meaning of the term. It means that a judge advocate will not be regarded as eligible for promotion to a general rank in the line of the Army. It means that a judge advocate will not be considered eligible for the command of any kind of troops at any time. That may not seem very important, but it is a question of policy which I regard as rather important. I do not believe the time has come when we want to say that a judge advocate can not be transferred back to the line, to the branch from which he came.

Most of the officers of the Judge Advocate General's Service to-day were educated as Infantry men, Field Artillery men, Coast Artillery men, and other branches. One I met the other day commanded a regiment in France in combat. Another was offered the position of chief of staff of one division, and again was offered a position as chief of staff of a corps, because he was known as an able soldier in addition to being a good judge advocate. I am personally acquainted with the judge advocate of one division that went to France, who, in a very tight place, took command of a battalion of Infantry and led it over the top, and got a decoration for distinguished gallantry.

In other words, the judge advocates have not as yet been entirely divorced from the idea that they are soldiers, and I do not think they should be. I think they should be eligible for combat work if their superiors and men in charge of the personnel believe that they can be used for that purpose when need arises. That is the principal reason why the committee has left them upon the single list for promotion with the rest of the officers of the Army.

If by the Congress they are taken off the single list for promotion, next year we will find the Ordnance officers coming here and asking to be taken off the single list for promotion in order that they may get special legislative treatment bringing promotion for them, and for them alone. You will find other groups of officers representing other branches of the service, which they will say are so technical, or giving some other argument, coming here year after year and saying, "You have left the judge advocates out; you have given them special treatment; you have given them a start upward faster than you have the rest of us; take us out also." Thus you will have renewed in the Halls of Congress that very kind of lobbying which has been the curse and bane of the Army for a generation, each branch trying to dig out something especially favorable for itself.

There are indications that just that kind of lobbying is going on around here now. Certain individuals are not pleased at the way the bill is drawn. Some man below 34 years of age has a friend, and that friend wants him to be a major in the Regular Army and our bill prohibits it, and instantly an amendment is offered on the floor of the Senate wiping out that limitation for the entire Army in order to help some one person. The same thing is true about several other services. If we commence to make exceptions for the judge advocates, taking them off the single list, giving them an advantage over all the other officers of the Army, giving them a special line of promotion, we will find that will be followed by other branches of the service coming and asking for special treatment, and we will go back to the condition which existed a few years ago, a condition which was so ridiculous as even to make the beneficiaries of that condition laugh.

A few years ago we expanded the Field Artillery of the Regular Army. It had to be expanded. It had become a proportionately more important arm. The result was that the Field Artillery officers all got promotions. An act of Congress which expanded that particular branch caused promotions to run in that particular branch. Only Field Artillery officers got the promotions, or those who were lucky enough to get transferred to the Field Artillery. The result was that the Field Artillery officers are to-day eight or nine years ahead of their contemporaries of the Infantry and Cavalry.

Then what happened? The Cavalry came to Congress and said, "Look what you have done for the Field Artillery. You have left us away behind. Can you not give us some mandatory promotion?" The result was that the Congress passed a special provision increasing the number of officers in the Cavalry, with the result that we had 61 colonels of Cavalry in the Army and only 21 regiments of Cavalry. That is what we are going back to if we begin to make exceptions to this single list.

That is why I am especially opposed to the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. His amendment absolves the judge advocates from the single list. I think that they should be kept on the single list. I think the committee amendment starts them on the single list in a favorable position and I think the committee amendment opens up the Judge Advocate General's Service to an essential number of civilians of ability and standing, to whom the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has so correctly alluded. I think the amendment, with one other little proviso inserted, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa, will give the Judge Advocate General's Service everything which it needs. It will give officers of adequate rank, it will give officers of adequate age and experience, it will assure the conduct of the Judge Advocate General's Service in the years to come upon a normal basis and according to normal methods, and still will not give them an undue advantage over their colleagues in the other services.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator, in speaking of the single list, does not mean that under the provisions of the bill he would go back and affect those promotions which have come to men in the various branches to which he has alluded and who under the law have obtained those promotions by right?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would not take their rank away from them, of course, but I would have them wait until the Infantry and the Cavalry caught up with them.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator say that under the provisions of the bill it demotes certain officers in different branches of the service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it does not demote anyone.

Mr. HARRISON. At least it retards their promotion to a certain extent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It deprives them of a certain participation in additional promotion which has not come to them by anything that they have done. It has come to them by act of Congress, affecting their particular branch, of which they were beneficiaries through accident.

Mr. HARRISON. It came to them by law, then?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly; but it was unfair to the rest of the Army.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator would take it away from them now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I would not take anything away from them.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator would have this law passed which would have the effect of going back and taking away from them that right which they had under the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would not take away from them anything they have to-day. If a man secured a jump of one grade by transfer from the Infantry to the Field Artillery on the eve of the expansion of the Field Artillery and holds that grade to-day, or whatever grade he may be in to-day, he would continue to hold it, but you will never get good feeling among the different branches of the service until you permit those men who, through no fault of their own, were left far in the rear in this race for promotion to catch up; and that is what the committee bill does. They were unjust laws that were passed at that time.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think the single-list policy should be in force from the passage of this bill and not be retroactive?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I believe it should be retroactive in that respect.

Mr. HARRISON. In other words, the Senator would go back and take away from certain men rights that they have obtained by the passage of laws through Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have some hesitation in accepting that word "rights." My conception of right in an Army officer is that it refers to something he has earned. A man who has jumped nine years above his contemporaries through the expansion of the branch in which he happened to be serving and for which expansion that branch was lobbying around the Halls of Congress has not earned that advancement. A man just as old as he is in the Infantry or the Cavalry or other service stood alongside him then, but did not get that advantage, and he is left forever behind. If it is the purpose to commence the operation of this single-list promotion in the way suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], it means that all these officers, who for years back have been left in the rut through no fault of their own whatsoever, are hopelessly handicapped in reaching the grade of general officer. It means that those officers who have been lucky, whose branches have been expanded, who have gotten promotions which they have not earned, will be constantly at the top of everybody else, and we will not have cured the degree of injustice which to-day exists in the Army, and the condition will not cease for 20 years to come if the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi is adopted by the Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator says that these officers have not earned promotion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; they have not.

Mr. HARRISON. They earned it under the law that was passed by Congress, did they not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not earning it, in my conception of the term "earn."

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is finding fault with what the Congress did in the past. Is not that true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I certainly am.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator misunderstands my attitude on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I am not in favor of giving to the Judge Advocate General's office certain rights touching the single list that do not apply to other branches of the service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am glad the Senator wants to be consistent on that. The Senator and I think alike on it. If we are going to have the single line of promotion, they ought to all be on it with the exception of the medical officers, the veterinarians, the dental officers, and chaplains.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say in addition to that that my idea about the single list is that it should apply upon the passage of this law, and should not be retroactive and affect certain privileges or rights of promotion that came to men of the various branches under an act of Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I can say, with a measure of assurance that I am saying something that is correct, that the sentiment of the Army at large is in favor of the single list for promotion. There are a few officers, however, who would like to see it amended. They have been to see me, they have been to see other Senators. They would like to see it amended so that they can continue to occupy the advantage over their fellows which they gained by accident years ago. They have been perfectly frank to say it, too. I am glad to say that the number is not large.

There are many of those officers who secured this promotion by accident or transfer on the expansion of the branch, who have been to me and who have said very frankly that they ought to be required to wait until their colleagues catch up with them, that they do not intend to ask Congress or the Senate or the Committee on Military Affairs to put into the law a continuation of a situation which they admit is unfair to their contemporaries in the Army.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Entirely along the line of the arguments of the chairman of the committee, I desire to say that I am just signing some mail which has been sent me from my office, and accompanying what I am signing are the letters requiring the answers. I have just come across, not 10 minutes ago, a personal letter written by a Regular Army officer in the Artillery, a young man who is a native of Washington. This young man was appointed by the President to the West Point Academy, and upon graduation, on account of his capability for that line, was assigned to the Artillery. The letter is dated Coblenz, Germany, March 24, and, among other subjects, he speaks of what he considers the temporary injustice of some of the emergency officers still holding higher rank than officers in the Regular Army of much longer service, so that for the time being it places the Regular Army officers under those officers who have served for less time, and with but scant training and experience. Of course, it is a personal letter; but, as he proceeds, toward the end he states:

All true well-wishers for the good of the Army are hoping for the single list, with no exceptions, to pass, based upon length of commissioned service. Although I lose a lot of rank by it, I am firmly convinced that it will increase the efficiency of the Army by 200 per cent, but the line and staff must have identical treatment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is it.

Mr. WARREN. As I have read, he states:

Although I lose a lot of rank by it—

Mr. WADSWORTH. He is mistaken; he does not lose any rank. He loses the prospect for immediate promotion.

Mr. WARREN. Exactly; taking the construction that our friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] gives to it, differing from the construction given by the Senator from New York, which is correct in that respect, although, of course, the result is perhaps the same. This officer says:

Although I lose a lot of rank by it, I am firmly convinced that it will increase the efficiency of the Army by 200 per cent, and the line and staff must have identical treatment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is it; and that is just what this bill does.

Mr. WARREN. It has so happened that this letter has just come to me, mailed less than three weeks ago at far-away Coblenz, in Germany. This shows how sensitive all officers of the Army are concerning this matter of promotion and the rather hodgepodge condition that we have gotten into by special or spotted legislation, taking up one arm of the service at a time. This because some branches of the Army have been very greatly increased, while others have remained nearly stationary; hence promotions from lieutenants to majors in one branch may be reached sooner than the first lieutenants can receive their promotion to captains in some other branch. Hence the great percentage of officers, including a large number who may be temporarily harmed thereby, are praying for some final formal basis upon which may rest the whole system of promotion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Dozens and dozens of officers have talked to me along exactly the same line as that indicated in the letter read by the Senator from Wyoming, and they have also talked to other members of our committee. They realize the very unfair condition which exists to-day among the several branches of the service and believe that for the good of the whole Army, not for the good of two or three men here and two or three there, but for the good of the whole Army, the system should be changed and changed now.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had about concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question about the single list. Even as proposed to be established by the committee, the single list is subject to exception, is it not? For instance, it does not equalize conditions; it is not dependent entirely upon length of commissioned service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. "As nearly as practicable," it says.

Mr. McKELLAR. Take the young men who served as volunteer officers in the Spanish-American War and subsequently became officers in the Regular Army. There is an exception in that case. One hundred and fifty or more such officers now in the Army were preceded by young men who were in the Regular service. This bill does not equalize their rank according to length of service. I am rather inclined to think that if the single list can be adopted according to the length of commissioned service in the Army and applied to all alike, with the exception, of course, of the Medical Corps, which ought to be excepted, it will afford the best method of adjusting the matter. Aside from the Medical Corps, I think that there ought not to be any exceptions; but I am afraid, from my examination of the Senator's bill on this subject, that it certainly excepts about 150 officers who served in the Spanish-American War and that they will be discriminated against.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Tennessee ask that as a question of me?

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the bill discriminate against officers who served in the Spanish-American War?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Here is the situation with respect to them. In 1901 or 1902——

Mr. McKELLAR. In 1901.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In 1901, in legislation enacted by Congress, provision was made for the admission into the Regular Army of volunteer officers who served in the Spanish-American War. A question then arose as to where they should be placed in the respective lineal lists for promotion in the different branches of the service in relation to the Regular officers of the same grade. The question arose as to whether they should be given credit for the time that they have served as volunteer officers before they were commissioned in the Regular Army. The Congress at that time inserted a provision in the legislation stating that they should not receive credit for their service as volunteer officers in computing their position in relation to the Regular Army officers in the same grades with them. That provision was placed upon the statute books of the Congress of that day, I assume, because the Congress of that day thought that that was the best provision to make. It has never been disturbed since. I have never heard any suggestion that that provision of the act of 1901 be amended; I have never heard of any demand from those officers that it should be amended. I have only heard from one officer upon that subject. He wants that act, in effect, under this bill repealed.

The committee went into all that; and we thought that act of Congress, which was a legislative act, an act of discretion, and which had stood for 20 years, and in accordance with which these officers have moved along through the different grades in the flow of promotion without any audible complaint, the whole service having accepted it for a generation—we thought that we ought not by implication repeal that act of Congress. If it is done, we are going to jump some men 300 numbers over the heads of others. I have only heard one officer in that category ask that it be done, while I have heard of other officers in that same category express the hope that it will not be done. That is all I know about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, I call his attention to the bill, on page 52, line 2, where, after enumerating those who shall be put in the single list, it provides that they—shall be placed on the list without changing the present position of any officer on the lineal list of his own branch, but otherwise, as nearly as practicable, according to length of commissioned service.

That makes a clear and distinct exception that it shall not change "the present position of any officer on the lineal list of his own branch" and, of course, prevents to that extent a definite fixed promotion according to length of commissioned service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The adoption of a single list is going to effect changes throughout. There is no doubt that it will make changes in one way or another in the case of a great number of officers. If we are going to effect change, if we are going to adopt length of commissioned service as a rule in order to obliterate inequality in promotion, we ought to make it apply all along the line; we ought not, in my judgment, to continue by legislation the very inequalities that are attempted by the bill to be ironed out.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me ask if it is not true that, with one or two exceptions, practically all of the Army officers upon whom the subcommittee called to advise them with reference to this subject were in favor of the single list as it was finally incorporated in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do know that is so; I can not remember the one or two exceptions. As a matter of fact—and I say it subject to correction, of course—my impression is that the whole Army is delighted with the prospect that finally all officers will be treated alike in the matter of promotion. They want a square deal, and they want it to start now and not be postponed in some instances 10, 15, or 20 years, until those officers who received unfair advantages 10 or 15 years ago have been retired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from New York speaks of unfair advantages. Did not these officers when they entered the Army, or when they graduated from West Point, have the opportunity to choose the particular branch of the Army in which they desired to serve?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They did.

Mr. HARRISON. And some branches gave them a greater opportunity for promotion than others?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; that was not always so; it turned out to be so later.

Mr. HARRISON. There are certain branches of the Army that certain men as they graduated from West Point could not enter. Is not that so? For instance, could a cadet at West Point who graduated away down in his class get into the Engineer Corps?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I forget the regulations about that, but I think not.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that he could not get into the Engineer Corps, but that those assigned to the Engineers came from the graduates highest on the list?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not state it as a fact, but that is my recollection. I am afraid to say definitely that that is the case, but I think it is so.

Mr. HARRISON. It is the Senator's recollection, then, that the very best men, the men who displayed the greatest ability as students and graduated highest in their classes, entered the Engineer Corps, for instance?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not always.

Mr. HARRISON. Could they enter the Infantry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They could enter the Infantry; they could enter any branch.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but could one who graduated away down in his class enter the Engineer Corps?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think not.

Mr. HARRISON. Then at that time the Engineer Corps was considered to be the highest branch of the Army service, was it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator need not cross-examine me. He can tell his own story.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just wondering about the matter concerning which we were speaking. The Senator says it is unfair——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. Then it is unfair that a man who graduated, say, in 1899, went into the Engineer Corps, for instance, received promotion, and is now under the old system No. 331 on the relative list should become No. 711 on the single list as proposed in the pending bill. The Engineer officers who graduated in the class of 1899 will be demoted, under the terms of the bill, 380 files; those of the class of 1900 who entered the Engineer Corps will be demoted 722 files; those in the class of 1903 will be demoted 1,139 files; those in the class of 1904, 1,183 files; those in the class of 1905, 1,142 files; those in the class of 1906, 1,206 files, and so on down. I ask consent to insert in the RECORD the entire table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Approximate effect of present mode of making up the single list, as proposed in Senate bill 3792, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, based upon Army register of Dec. 1, 1918.

ENGINEERS.

Class.	Approximate number on single list.	Approximate number on relative list.	Number of files demoted by Senate bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think, considering the peculiar qualifications which they showed as students and the ability which they displayed, that, because they entered this particular branch of the service, they should now be demoted as shown by the table under the terms of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator indulges in two expressions which I can not agree are correct. In the first place, they are not "demoted"; they do not lose anything they have to-day; they are simply asked to wait a little while until other officers just as good get that to which they are entitled. The other expression I think the Senator used was that these men were "especially qualified." I do not know that they are. How can we tell?

Mr. HARRISON. They displayed ability, did they not, to get into that particular branch?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know; but why should promotion in the Engineers be faster than in the Infantry?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know. The law made it so, did it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We want to cure that.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator wants to go back and violate the law and make a retroactive law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The provision in the bill does not violate any law.

Mr. HARRISON. It is a pity the Senator was not here at that time to see that the law did not pass.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are changing law.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the Senator's bill is changing law, but he is making it apply 20 years back. The Senator says it does not demote anyone. It is true it does not demote a man from a major to a captain, but I was talking to an officer only yesterday who told me that he was a major—he had been a colonel, I think—and he stated: "If this bill does not pass, I will be a lieutenant colonel in about six weeks, but if the single list is applied it will be five years before I am a lieutenant colonel."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all right.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think that that is indirectly a demotion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; I do not; I think that is a square deal for the other men. There is no reason why he should reach the grade of lieutenant colonel so fast by the accident of the branch in which he serves.

Mr. HARRISON. I had intended to propose an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee touching the single list, but I shall not do so. I intend to vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, because I do not think any exceptions should be made. I shall at the proper time, however, offer an amendment to prevent this law from being retroactive, so as to make the single list apply to the future.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the substitute amendment offered by me I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	McCumber	Smoot
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Spencer
Calder	Harris	Myers	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	Nelson	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Comer	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Keyes	Sheppard	Warren
Dillingham	Lodge	Smith, S. C.	Watson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. SWANSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. HALE and Mr. NEW entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hope we can get a vote on this matter before adjournment to-day. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. KIRBY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee, and on that the Senator from Tennessee has demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr.

SMITH], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before of my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before of my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]; but under the arrangement which I have with him I can vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Borah	McKellar	Smith, S. C.	Walsh, Mass.
Comer	Nugent	Sterling
Dial	Overman	Swanson
Kenyon	Simmons	Trammell

NAYS—36.

Ashurst	Edge	Kirby	Sheppard
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Hale	McCumber	Smoot
Capper	Harris	Myers	Spencer
Chamberlain	Harrison	New	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Page	Thomas
Cummins	Kellogg	Phipps	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kendrick	Pittman	Warren
Dillingham	Keyes	Pomerene	Watson

NOT VOTING—47.

Ball	Fall	Gay	Gronna

So Mr. MCKELLAR's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, before the word "Vacancies," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in making the original appointments of officers in the Judge Advocate General's Service who served during the World War, as provided in section 42 of this act, not less than 6 such officers shall be appointed in the grade of colonel and not less than 16 in the grade of lieutenant colonel.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask the Senator from New York whether the amendment as I have now presented it would require the appointment of 6 colonels of the emergency service and of 16 lieutenant colonels?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It certainly would.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon being assured of that construction, I offer the amendment without any change. That is what I intend to accomplish, and I think the amendment accomplishes it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what is accomplished by the amendment, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday we increased the force of the Judge Advocate General from 80 to 120. Is this in addition to that number?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no. This merely provides that of the emergency officers assigned to the Judge Advocate General's Service by reason of being commissioned in the Regular Army in the usual way, as provided in section 42 of the bill, at least 6 of them must be colonels and at least 16 lieutenant colonels. They are included in the general total of 120.

Mr. HARRISON. How many were there in that department before the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Thirty-two.

Mr. HARRISON. Officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my recollection.

Mr. HARRISON. How many were lieutenant colonels and colonels and majors?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There were 4 colonels, 7 lieutenant colonels, and 20 majors before the war.

Mr. HARRISON. If the amendment is agreed to as offered by the Senator from Iowa, there would be how many colonels?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Six men appointed to the grade of colonel assigned to the Judge Advocate General's office from among the emergency officers of the war, and 16 to the grade of lieutenant colonel from among the emergency officers of the war.

On behalf of the committee I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the committee: Strike out line 6, page 1, of the amendment; in line 12, on page 1, strike out the word "captain" and insert the word "major"; in line 2, page 2, strike out the word "captain" and insert the word "major"; in line 4, page 2, strike out the word "captain" and insert the word "major"; in line 7, page 2, strike out the word "captain" and insert the word "major."

Mr. President, the committee amendment here offered makes a great change in the organization of the Judge Advocate General's Department. It makes that department of the grade of captain. Hitherto, as I understand it, the lowest regular grade in that department has been the grade of major, and that grade has sufficed for time of peace and for all the emergencies of war, practically, although I think there were some special assignments of men of the grade of captain to the Judge Advocate General's office during the war.

I do not believe it is necessary to reduce the grade to that of captain in the Judge Advocate General's office. The first part of the committee amendment, coupled with the latter part of the amendment limiting the age of a major to 34 years, would deprive the Judge Advocate General's Department of some of the very best men in the service. It would, at least, take away from them the rank which they now have and would probably mean their separation from the service.

There are men of the rank of major now in the Judge Advocate General's Department at the ages of 31, 32, and 33 years who have been in that department for a long time; and under the second paragraph of the amendment those men who have served abroad—some of them, and I do not know but all of them, below 34 years of age—will be reduced, after their long service in the rank of major, to the rank of captain.

I do not believe that is just. It is not a just recognition of their ability as lawyers, it is not a just recognition of their ability in the service of their country and what they have done in that service.

I voted for the McKellar amendment because it affects this question, but the McKellar amendment provided for the single-list theory, from which all appointments or assignments to the Judge Advocate General's office would be made. This does not destroy the single-list theory; that is yet preserved; but it does take away the right, as proposed by the amendment of the committee, to reduce these men to the grade of captain. What is the result? Here are men 33½ years of age who served long in the Judge Advocate General's office ably and efficiently.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Served how long?

Mr. STERLING. I know of one who served over a year, and he is there now after having served in France. He was one of the best and brightest young lawyers in the State of South Dakota and in the active practice of the law before he went into the service. He comes back after honorable service abroad and has served more than a year in the Judge Advocate General's office with the rank of major. It is proposed by the amendment to reduce him to the rank of captain. Captains may be assigned from the general list or the senior list to take his place and by virtue of length of service or by virtue of their age will be above him and have a chance of promotion better than the man who has served as major for this very long period of time.

Mr. President, I do not believe that we want to work any such injustice as that, and I am opposed to reducing this rank to that of captain. Really, I think the single list here should be done away with, so far as the Judge Advocate General's office is concerned, just as was proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and why? Because it is a highly specialized department of the Department of War, where professional services are needed upon most intricate questions that come before the men in the office of the Judge Advocate General for decision—legal questions of great import, difficult questions, and questions of great interest to the welfare of the country.

I must protest, as I feel we all ought to protest, against reducing to the position of captain men who have served as these men have served and who have gained the rank they have acquired in the service.

I want to follow this up with a further amendment striking out the age limit, and as what is proposed from the committee is offered as one amendment I think perhaps I had better complete my amendment so that it will apply to the entire amendment of the committee.

I move further to amend the amendment by striking out lines 22 and 23, on page 2, which limit the age to 34 years. I am aware of the fact that the last paragraph in which those words are found pertains to the service generally, but it seems to me that there ought not to be any age limit; certainly not as applied to the Judge Advocate General's Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I regret that I can not support the amendment to the amendment and thereby help the young man from South Dakota. I have no doubt he is an able man. He is 31 years of age and is now a major, and from the best information we can get he has been a major in the Judge Advocate General's Service for about a year.

Mr. STERLING. He is a little more than 31. I did not state that he is 31 years of age. He is 32½ years of age.

Mr. LODGE. How long has he been in the service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from South Dakota thought it was a little over a year.

Mr. STERLING. He has been in the Judge Advocate General's office over a year.

Mr. LODGE. All the time?

Mr. STERLING. After having practiced law for a long time before entering the service, he served abroad and comes back and is appointed a major in the Judge Advocate General's Service.

Mr. LODGE. Did he serve in the field abroad?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir; he served in the field abroad.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No doubt his service was excellent, and I honor him for it. The Senator from South Dakota complains that as a result of this legislation this young major, 32½ years of age, will not be able to be a major in the Regular Army; that he can only have a captaincy, and that that means reducing him from major to captain. As the Senator and all other Senators remember, the Regular Army officers who went abroad and who during the war were brigadier generals and major generals have since been reduced and have gone back to lieutenant colonels, majors, and even down to captains. If we are going to enact legislation here, Mr. President, that will provide that no emergency officer of the National Army is commissioned in the Regular Army hereafter at a grade lower than the grade he occupied as an emergency officer, then we had better legislate and say that every Regular officer who had a high grade in France will continue in that high grade for the rest of his service.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I suppose the reduction generally is for the reason that there is no longer any need for their services in the particular rank they occupied during the war, but no such reason will apply to the case in hand or to the cases to which I have referred. The services of these officers are still needed as much as they ever were, and in the particular places which they had occupied before.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Army of the United States can not find enough men over the age of 34 years to occupy the grade of major, it had better go out of business. Now, it is proposed to wipe out the minimum age limit completely and to let any man over 21 years of age be appointed to the grade of major—that is the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota—regardless of his length of service, provided he served during the period of the emergency. There are men who in France commanded brigades and regiments in action, men who have spent 15 years in the Regular Army, who would be outranked by this young man from South Dakota if the Senator's amendment was adopted, who have had to go back to a captaincy, and who during all the remainder of their career in the Army will be outranked by this young man of 32½ years of age because, forsooth, by act of Congress we are going to put him in the grade of major.

There must be some limit to this thing. We can not open wide the gates as far as they will swing and authorize the War Department to appoint men of any age to any grade. By doing so we are going to tear the Army to pieces, Mr. President. We could not hurt the morale more than by doing things like that. The committee, after weeks and weeks of study of these questions, came to the conclusion that no man should be commissioned in the Regular Army from civil life in the grade of major under the age of 34 years under any circumstances. In fixing the age at 34 years we have attempted to reach the age which is the average age, or at a little bit below the average age, at which a man in the ordinary course of events in the Army becomes a major. I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator from New York tell me the reason why a radical change in the organization of the Judge Advocate General's Department is proposed, allowing the grade of captain, which has never applied in the department before?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is nothing very radical about it. We simply widen the field of selection for judge advocates by one grade. Prior to this time they had been confined to colonels, lieutenant colonels, and majors; the department could not appoint anybody else to the positions but officers of those three grades. Now, we say, "you may have some captains." That is all.

We think they can use a few captains in that office in the years to come advantageously. They do not have to appoint the regular proportionate number of captains. They may have only two captains or three captains out of the 120 officers. There is nothing in the bill that compels them to appoint a number of captains which would be in proportion to the number of captains in the whole Army. The provision is elastic; there is nothing radical or drastic about it. Now, the Senator from South Dakota wants to wipe out the grade of captain in the Judge Advocate General's Service.

Mr. STERLING. No, I do not want to wipe it out; I merely want to prevent it from being established—that is the position that I take—because there is no such grade to-day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I mean he wants to wipe it out of this bill. The Senator wants to prevent the grade being established, and, apparently, he uses as an argument that there is a young major there who if he remained in the service would have to be a captain.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from New York continually refers to the one major to whom I have referred. I have no objection to that. He is a young man of whom any community might well be proud because of his ability as a lawyer and because of his conduct in the service. He is, however, a type;

there are more of them. I have been informed by men from that department that there are officers there, varying in age from 30 to 33½ years, who are majors and who, under this proposed law, will be demoted to captains.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am informed, according to the best authority I can get, that there are three majors in the department who are under 34 years, and that there is one lieutenant colonel of 29.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the series of amendments proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. STERLING. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to offer another amendment. In line 22, on the second page of the committee amendment, I move to strike out the compound word "thirty-four" and insert the word "thirty" in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2 of the printed amendment of the committee, on line 22, it is proposed to strike out "thirty-four" before the word "years" and to insert "thirty," so that it will read:

That no such person under 30 years of age shall be appointed to any field grade.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think it is fairly late, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

MERRITT & CHAPMAN DERRICK & WRECKING CO.

Mr. SPENCER. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9629) for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co., and I ask unanimous consent at this time for its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the bill?

Mr. SPENCER. It is a House bill identical with the Senate bill passed this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to know whether section 2 of this bill has been stricken out?

Mr. SPENCER. I intend to move that it be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will do so, I shall make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that section 2 of the bill be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that section 3 be renumbered to read "section 2."

Mr. SPENCER. There is no section 3 in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it is not the same as the Senate bill.

Mr. SPENCER. It is precisely the same, but they left out the last section.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 3294 was passed this morning.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 17, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 16, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, teach us how to enlarge our faith in Thee, in our fellow men, and in ourselves, for we realize that if distrust, doubt and uncertainty, selfishness, greed, profiteering, and evil shall pass away it must be based on the eternal principles of the larger faith.

And I John saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

To love mercy, do justly, and walk humbly with thy God was the creed, the principles, the life of Abraham Lincoln, who died a martyr to those truths.

So help us to live, and, if need be, to die for them that peace and happiness may blossom as the rose in the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, to His glory and to the good of mankind; in the life, character, and precepts of the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 19, and 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 21, 23, 25, and 28, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "materially"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For transportation of foreign mails by steamship, aircraft, or otherwise, including increases hereinafter provided, $4,700,000: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of this sum shall be expended for carrying foreign mail by aircraft."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "of which $500,000 shall be available immediately"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "Sec. 4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "Sec. 6"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) The commission shall investigate all present and prospective methods and systems of handling, dispatching, transporting and delivering the mails, and the facilities therefor; and especially all methods and systems which relate to the handling, delivery, and dispatching of the mails in the large cities of the United States.

"On or before March 1, 1921, the commission shall make a report to Congress containing a summary of its findings and such recommendations for legislation as it may believe to be proper."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(d) For the purpose of this section, the commission shall have power to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and to administer oaths."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the second paragraph of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, at his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to loan to any State of the Union, when so requested by the highway department of the State, such tractors as are retained and not distributed under the act approved March 15, 1920, for use in highway construction by the highway department of such State: Provided, That all expenses for repairs and upkeep of tractors so loaned and the expenses of loading and freight shall be paid by the State, both in transfer to the State and the return to the Army."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "Sec. 8"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreement of the House to the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 11578, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees as to each of said amendments:

The Senate recedes from amendments Nos. 15, 19, and 20.

Amendment No. 15 struck out the words "printing presses" in the appropriation for miscellaneous equipment under the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General.

Amendment No. 19 rewrote section 2, continuing the increased compensation under House joint resolution 151, and omitted the words "unless otherwise provided by law."

Amendment No. 20 authorized the property and equipment of the pneumatic tube companies in the post offices in the different cities where located to remain until June 30, 1921.

The managers on the part of the House agree to amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 21, 23, 25, and 28.

Amendments Nos. 1 and 2 merely corrected the phraseology in the appropriation for the purchase of land for the equipment shops.

Amendment No. 3 makes the appropriation of $25,700 for the purchase of land for the equipment shops immediately available.

Amendment No. 5 added a clause repealing the limitation of $500 for rent and $100 for fuel and light allowable for post offices of the third class.

Amendment No. 6 struck out "$60,000,000" in the appropriation for inland transportation of mail by railroads and inserted "$59,886,822."

Amendment No. 9 merely inserts the word "further" after the word "provided" in the paragraph relating to Railway Mail Service.

Amendment No. 10 strikes out "$932,156" and inserts "$1,032,156" in the appropriation for terminal railway post offices.

Amendment No. 11 strikes out the word "however" in the paragraph relating to the appropriation for transportation of mail by electric and cable cars.

Amendment No. 13 strikes out "$965,000" and inserts "$765,000" in the appropriation for manufacture of postal cards.

Amendment No. 14 adds a proviso to the appropriation for indemnity for losses or injury of domestic registered, insured, or collect on delivery mail, authorizing the Postmaster General to authorize postmasters to pay limited indemnity claims. This is designed to expedite payment of claims.

Amendment No. 17 strikes out a proviso to turning over motor vehicles, aeroplanes, etc., by the Secretary of War, which proviso in slightly different form is reinserted in section 4 of the bill as amendment No. 21.

Amendment No. 18 rewrites the provision of the House relating to the determination of the length of rural routes.

Amendment No. 21 is section 4 of the bill as amended in the Senate, and relates to turning over of motor vehicles and aeroplanes by the War Department to the Postmaster General and authorizes the use thereof in the transportation of the mails in which such vehicles or aeroplanes are used. The Senate provision remains unchanged.

Amendment No. 23 authorizes the Postmaster General to accept without postage stamps affixed mail matter of the first class under rules and regulations prescribed by him. This was section 6 as inserted in the bill by the Senate.

Amendment No. 25 authorizes the payment of the expenses of the commission created under section 7 of the bill.

Amendment No. 28 directs the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government, when directed by the President, to furnish the said commission with information and records in their possession.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 4, 7, 8, 12, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, and 30, with an amendment to each, as follows:

Amendment No. 4 rewrites the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the Postmaster General, whenever the office of postmaster becomes vacant through death, resignation, or removal, to designate some person to act as postmaster until regular appointment can be made by the President.

Amendment No. 7 strikes out the word "materially" in the proviso relating to contract Air Mail Service, the effect of which is to authorize the Postmaster General to contract for an aeroplane mail service between such points as he may deem advisable and designate, where such service is furnished, at a cost not greater than the cost of the same service by rail.

Amendment No. 8 reduces the appropriation from $1,415,000, proposed by the Senate, to $1,250,000 for aeroplane mail service from New York, N. Y., to San Francisco, Calif., via Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Nebr.

Amendment No. 12 changes the amendment of the Senate which enlarged the appropriation for the transportation of foreign mails by inserting the words "by steamship, aircraft, or otherwise," so as to read as follows:

"For transportation of foreign mails by steamship, aircraft, or otherwise, including increases hereinafter provided, $4,700,- 000: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of this sum shall be expended for carrying foreign mail by aircraft."

Amendment No. 16: In the appropriation for the equipment shop of $2,090,000 the Senate amendment proposed to make the whole amount immediately available, but this was modified so as to make $500,000 immediately available.

Amendment No. 22 simply renumbers section 5 to section 4 and rewrites section 3936, Revised Statutes of the United States, in regard to the disposition of dead letters.

Amendment No. 24 renumbers section 7 to section 6.

Amendments Nos. 26 and 27 modify the language of paragraphs C and D, relating to the creation of the commission to investigate transportation of mail and the facilities for distribution thereof.

Amendment No. 29: The amendment proposed by the managers on the part of the House strikes out of the second paragraph of amendment No. 29, which related to the loan of tractors by the Secretary of War to State highway departments, and inserts a new section, numbered section 7, on the same subject. The original proposition of the Senate related to 5 and 10 ton artillery tractors, but as amended the provision authorizes the loan of tractors generally to State highway departments for use in highway construction, such highway departments to pay the cost of transportation both for the shipment and return.

Amendment No. 30 renumbers section 3 to section 8.

The net increase over the appropriations as passed by the House is $1,046,178, making a total now carried in the bill of $462,574,546.

HALVOR STEENERSON,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
W. W. GRIEST,
JOHN A. MOON,
A. B. ROUSE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, the amount stated as carried in this bill, four hundred and sixty-two million and odd dollars, I desire to explain, does not include all the expense that will be estimated for the fiscal year 1921, for this reason, that the estimates submitted to the two Houses for railroad transportation of mail was based upon the rate of compensation that was in force in October last, when those estimates were prepared. Since last October—I think, on the 23d day of December, under the provisions of the appropriation act of 1916—the Interstate Commerce Commission rendered a decision which increased the compensation of railroads under the space plan about 50 per cent after March 1, 1920, and about 33 per cent between November 1, 1916, and March 1, 1920. I shall insert in the RECORD a statement of Mr. Praeger, Second Assistant Postmaster General, on this subject, which I have taken from the Senate hearings:

(Mr. Praeger's testimony, pp. 270–271, Senate hearings.)

Mr. PRAEGER. We will have less unexpended balance at the end of the coming fiscal year than we have now on account of the increase in the business and the additional transportation space we will have to buy. That does not take into consideration the increase in rates that the commission may fix.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you estimated what that increase would cost you on the basis of the business done this year?

Mr. PRAEGER. It is somewhere in the neighborhood of 50 per cent increase over the existing rate.

The CHAIRMAN. About how much would that amount to in dollars?

Mr. PRAEGER. Between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000 a year. The Postmaster General is preparing a motion for a rehearing on those rates, and until that is determined, and until the commission determine whether or not they will grant a rehearing and go into certain phases of the case that the department will point out, we are not getting ready to make payment to the railroads of the increases. We do not accept the rates as definitely settled until the commission disposes of the motion for rehearing. Then we will get into the work of restating the service on the new rate. Naturally, when that is done we will have to come to Congress and ask for a deficiency appropriation to pay the railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. You are making your estimate here on the basis of present rates?

Mr. PRAEGER. The present rates and a slightly increased service.

We did not know about these figures at the time the bill was before the House, and Mr. Praeger explained that they have made application for a rehearing, and therefore they were unable to submit the estimates that would be required until after the decision of the commission. He says, however, that the actual increase for 1920 and the compensation of railroads for carrying the mail over what is allowed in this bill will be between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000, so it is fair to say that the expenses of the Postal Service next year will be very close to $500,000,000.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. DYER. In the second conference, will the gentleman state whether the conferees made any changes except in reference to amendment No. 21? Is that the only change?

Mr. STEENERSON. The conferees receded on amendment No. 21.

Mr. DYER. That is in reference to the airplane mail service?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is in reference to this limitation that these airplanes they are obtaining from the War Department could not be used except on the transcontinental route.

Mr. DYER. Is that the only change?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; the gentleman ought to recall that he made a point of order on amendment No. 3 in reference to a building to be moved from Watertown, N. Y., for an equipment shop.

Mr. DYER. That is coming in a separate bill, is it not?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I am talking about this conference report now before the House. In view of the fact the point of order was good and conceded to be good, the House receded from this amendment. The gentleman is correct that the Post Office Committee took up the matter and recommended the passage of a bill to do what that amendment sought to do, and that is now on the calendar.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a brief statement and an inquiry combined with the statement?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. This is in reference to the provision as agreed upon between the conferees on amendment No. 4. There has occurred within a very few days the death of a postmaster in my district, in a large town, and the applicant for the position was the assistant postmaster. It appears that a bonding company had furnished the bond for the deceased postmaster, and that bonding company claims the right under the approval of the department to name the acting postmaster until the new nomination is made and confirmed. The bonding company named its own agent in this town, who demanded his right to assume the duties of the office, and by inquiry of the Post Office Department it seems that the appointment made that way was accepted by the department. The bonding company agent in Washington informed me that when such a vacancy occurs it invariably offers the position to their agent in the town or city, as the case may be. It seems to me, irrespective of the merits of who should be assigned to the post office—and that I will not enter into, because the assistant postmaster is a very competent man, and the gentleman who has been named as the agent of the bonding company is a highly esteemed citizen of the town—nevertheless, as the law now stands, is it a fact that the bonding company has that advantage in the possibility of naming a new acting postmaster in the case of the decease of the regular postmaster?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; under the law and the rules and regulations established by the Postmaster General they have that right.

Mr. TREADWAY. The bonding company has that right?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. As I read your amendment No. 4——

Mr. MOON. The bonding company has the right, with the consent of the Government. But the power still exists in the department to release the bonding company from its obligations, and they take a new bond.

Mr. TREADWAY. Unquestionably. But my point is this: Should a bonding company have the power of designating its own agents in preference to any other citizens in the community who might be acceptable to the community or to the department?

Mr. MOON. It seems to be true under the present condition; but I agree with the gentleman fully that they ought not to have such power.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is what I was coming to. Now, after this law comes into effect, after July 1, 1920, will that power cease to be given to a bonding company under amendment No. 4?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think so, because then the Postmaster General will have the power to appoint a temporary postmaster without any confirmation.

Mr. TREADWAY. Evidently the amendment has been offered in view of the fact of just such a situation as I am describing?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; that was mentioned in the committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I understand that amendment No. 4 is intended to remedy the situation I have described?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am therefore very heartily in accord with the committee in recommending that amendment. I thank the gentleman for his information.

Mr. STEENERSON. In reference to this appropriation for the inland transportation of mail that I referred to a moment ago, I desire to say that not only will it require a deficiency appropriation, which the Second Assistant Postmaster General says he intends to ask for when the figures are complete, of $30,000,000 to $40,000,000, but according to the best estimates that I can make the new rate of pay under the space plan will be about 8 per cent higher than we would pay if the old law, establishing the weight basis of railway mail pay, was still in force, which would be about between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 a year more that we will pay under the space plan than we would if the old weight basis were now in force. At least, that is the best calculation that I can make on the subject.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Was the gentleman among those who contended that the space basis would be more economical than the weight basis?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. I stated at the time that was up that I was willing to yield my conviction to the department's recommendation and therefore would vote for it, but I said distinctly I believed the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], then the chairman of the committee, was too optimistic. He predicted there would be a saving of $10,000,000 a year, and I said I doubted it; but, in view of the superior knowledge of the Post Office Department, I yielded and voted for the space plan.

Mr. WALSH. I recall some such statement being made, but I had forgotten whether the gentleman was one who made the contention that the space basis would be more economical than the weight basis or not.

Mr. STEENERSON. You will recall that the bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation for this item of $60,000,000, for the inland transportation of mails, but the Senate cut it down $113,178 and the House committee was not advised as to the reason until we got into conference. Some of us found out. The reason that they took out $113,178 from the $60,000,000 we appropriated for the inland transportation of mail was that under the original space-plan law the department is authorized to employ clerks to obtain statistics and data for the administration of the plan and have a trial of the question of which plan, weight or space, was the most economical and advantageous for the Government before the Interstate Commerce Commission. They employed these 78 clerks in that capacity in the department. Now, they have heretofore been paid out of the appropriation for inland transportation of mail, but the department desired that they should be placed on the same basis as clerks in that department, because now the decision has been rendered and the space plan is permanent. And therefore these clerks will be permanent clerks in the department. So the Senate Committee on Appropriations, on the recommendation of the department, made a provision for their compension in the legislative appropriation bill and at the same time the department transmitted a letter to the chairman of the Senate committee explaining that these clerks had been eliminated and that they would hereafter be carried as clerks of the department and that therefore it would justify a reduction of this amount, namely, $113,178, and that explains why the Senate reduced the $60,000,000 to $59,886,822.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a few questions and a little observation on amendments 7, 8, and 21?

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman does that, will he yield to me for just a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois first.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, the space plan is the more expensive plan?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is more expensive if we assume that the Government to-day will pay on the weight basis, as it did in 1916. In other words, the attorney for the department tells me that if the weight plan were now in force, under his calculations it would be 8 per cent less than we are paying under the new ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the space plan. But he states in relation to that that if annual weighing, instead of quadrennial weighing, were in force, under the weight plan, then the compensation would be about the same. Of course, the old law provided for quadrennial weighing, which was a difference against the railroads of about 8 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. We are going to stick by the space plan, anyhow?

Mr. STEENERSON. That remains to be seen. It may be that there are economies sufficient to justify that.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield there for just a minute?

Mr. STEENERSON. In a minute. It may be that there are economies sufficient to justify the continuance of the space plan.

Mr. MOON. The space plan was intended primarily not merely to reduce the cost of carrying the mail, but to establish an accurate and successful system of computation of pay, which could not exist under the quadrennial weighing.

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not hear the last statement.

Mr. MOON. I was going to suggest right there that it was impossible under the old weight system to tell, as the Postmaster General said, within $15,000,000 per annum what the compensation of the railroads ought to be. Of course, the railroad service has grown, and the expense has grown, and it must be expected that there will be more compensation paid than has been paid heretofore to the railroads. The new system, in my judgment, has been very efficacious in holding down that gradual increase, which was abnormal, of from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 per annum which we had heretofore.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would say no. The Interstate Commerce Commission is considering a motion for a review of the basic rates, and it is possible that if they review that and make a decision more favorable to the Government, this space plan will be as economical as the old weight basis. It is not now.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. My attention is directed to amendments numbered 7, 8, and 21, relating to aerial mail service. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota as to the provisions of the House and Senate bills, respectively, regarding this aerial mail service. Were there not provisions in either of those bills regarding aerial mail service along those lines that are established in this conference report?

Mr. STEENERSON. First, as to amendment No. 7, that was a Senate provision. It was inserted in the bill——

Mr. MILLER. In the Senate bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. It is a House bill, but it is a Senate amendment to the House bill.

Mr. MILLER. Now, if I understand the situation correctly——

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman want me to answer?

Mr. MILLER. I understood the gentleman had answered.

Mr. STEENERSON. No. If the gentleman will excuse me, the original proposition was a Senate amendment. The House managers struck out the word "materially" in that proposition.

Mr. MILLER. That was in the last conference report. The word "materially" was in the conference report at the time the report was brought out on last Thursday?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. It was not. I moved to strike it out in the first conference, and it was stricken out, and the motion was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman will find it in the report.

Mr. MADDEN. I know exactly what was done.

Mr. STEENERSON. Wait a moment. I think these gentlemen are both mistaken, because the effect of the action of the conference was to retain the word "materially" in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL of California. No; it was stricken out last time.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; "materially" was stricken out.

Mr. MADDEN. I know I am not mistaken.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; the gentleman is not mistaken.

Mr. MILLER. Then under the conference report the only aerial mail service that can be established in the United States, except where it competes in cost with railway transportation mail, is on the New York to San Francisco route?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman will bear in mind that there are two kinds of aerial mail service possible under this bill. One is the directly authorized aerial mail from New York to San Francisco; that is, authorized as a Government-operated aerial mail service.

Mr. MILLER. That is the only one, is it not?

Mr. STEENERSON. The only one. But at the suggestion of the department this clause was added to the section of the bill, that the department could establish contract aerial mail service between such points as they might designate, provided that the expense thereof should not exceed the expense of carrying the mail by rail.

Mr. MILLER. Now, to carry any quantity of mail by aerial service will in all human probability increase the transportation cost over that by railroad.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I will tell you: I stated before, when this matter was up, that I believe it is a great deal more expensive to carry first-class mail by airplane than by rail.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the Second Assistant Postmaster General has stated that they can carry it as cheaply, and, in fact, more cheaply, by airplane. I will recite the testimony in the RECORD when I extend my remarks.

Mr. MILLER. Then, why was not the New York to San Francisco line established on that basis, and why is it necessary to appropriate $1,250,000?

Mr. STEENERSON. Let me say that the House committee did not originate that proposition. It originated in the Senate, and we agreed to it by reducing the amount of the appropriation to $1,250,000. We agreed to that proposition because we were unable to get the Senate conferees to recede. It was a close vote, but rather than have a deadlock between the two Houses the majority of the conferees agreed to yield.

Now, then, there is this to be said: That the proposition was urged mainly on the ground of military reasons, and they cited the testimony of Gen. Mitchell before their committee; and I will, if I get permission of the House to extend my remarks, insert those remarks of Gen. Mitchell in these remarks of mine. After enumerating all these advantages of this transcontinental route, the principal thing in his testimony was this: They asked him if it was thought advisable under the economic conditions to establish more than one transcontinental route, and if the Government felt obliged to limit itself to one route across the continent, which route would be selected. And he said, "By all means, the direct route from New York to San Francisco." Now, I am just as sorry as the gentleman from Washington is that he did not say "Seattle," because if he had said "from New York to Seattle," it would go right through Crookston, Minn., my town, every day. But when you are legislating for the American people, when you are legislating for the public safety and for military reasons, then we must disregard these local considerations. The gentleman probably is familiar with the testimony of Gen. Mitchell?

Mr. MILLER. I am familiar with his testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs on that same point, and his testimony, if I am not mistaken, is that the air currents of the northern line and of the southern line are entirely dissimilar from the air currents on the central line, and there is some military significance of an aerial mail service on the central line, and none on the northern and southern lines will yield anything in the military aspect of the situation, because the air currents are entirely different.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I am not going to enter into a scientific discussion of aeronautics; but the gentleman must concede that it would be unwise, and it would not be fair to the people, to authorize the establishment of aerial mail routes to be operated by the Government all over the country—to Seattle, St. Paul, Omaha, or St. Louis, to Atlanta, to Los Angeles, and to every other town that wants an aerial mail route. We compromised on this theory, that if the Department states what is true—incredible as it may seem—that so far as first-class mail is concerned, it requires so much space in expensive distributing cars, these railroad post-office cars, that they can actually carry just as cheaply and more cheaply by airplane, because they say then they work the mail and sort it, and make it ready for delivery on the route to the cities of destination before it is loaded on the airplane, and therefore the space occupied in the distributing cars is saved. You do not have to pay that expense. I have repeatedly said that I doubt it, but, assuming for the sake of the argument that it is true, then the air route will be established to the gentleman's satisfaction and not cost the taxpayers anything, because we will pay the air-mail contractors more than we pay the railroads for the same service. Page 4961, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senator MCKELLAR read from the hearings as follows:

Senator STERLING. Do you recall now what the saving is, Mr. Praeger?
Mr. PRAEGER. Yes, sir. Take our present route New York to Washington, the cost of the service would be $120,000. The saving in car space and distribution is $162,000.
The cost of the service extended to Omaha—just the one line New York to Omaha—should be $575,920.
The saving on car space and clerical hire would be $811,430.

On the same page appears the following with reference to cost of aerial mail:

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, so far as being self-sustaining is concerned, I submitted in what I said previously the figures obtained from the department, which showed that it was practically self-sustaining now, and they feel satisfied, therefore, that it will soon be absolutely self-sustaining. I submitted that information to the Senate because I thought it might be of interest to them. I would state also that the testimony before the committee showed that 90 per cent of the schedule trips are accomplished.

Therefore we thought the best course to pursue was to establish one Government-operated line and authorize them to contract for as many as they saw fit, provided it did not cost any more than the ordinary service by train.

The department favors contract air-mail service rather than Government operation. Mr. Praeger at the hearings said:

Personally I do not believe a greater thing can be done for aviation than to grant us authority to make contracts with some of these aeroplane companies that are operating as private corporations. That would accomplish more than all the Government flying will do in the way of advancement of aeroplane service.

Mr. MILLER. Was the question of establishing an aerial mail route from San Francisco south to the Mexican border and from San Francisco north to the Canadian border as a part of this system discussed by the conferees?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, yes; it was pointed out by the conferees on the part of the Senate that it would be an advantage from the military point of view, looking toward our protection on the south and on the north, and they cited the testimony of Gen. Mitchell that when you have the flying machine at Omaha or at Ogden you can very rapidly reach the Canadian border in a few hours, or you can mobilize them on the Mexican border. It is equidistant between the two points; whereas if you had them in the State of Washington you would be very near the Canadian border, but you would be very much farther away from the Mexican border.

Mr. MILLER. I am not exclusively interested in the State of Washington, although, of course, I have it in mind, but I am interested in the entire Pacific seaboard, where the military aspect of this thing is of the greatest possible importance. That is the combined testimony of all the officers connected with the aerial service before the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman that no one can be more proud of the great Pacific coast country than I am. I take great pride in the city of San Francisco, and in the cities of Seattle, Portland, Los Angeles, and San Diego, and I would do anything in the world that I could do legitimately and fairly for each one of them; but seeing that San Francisco happens to be between the two northern and southern borders of the country and that the combined judgment of this military authority and of the Senators with whom we conferred was that this was the best line for military purposes, as well as for experimental purposes, we yielded. Of course, if I had been as well-informed on military matters as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] I might have held out, or probably the majority could have held out.

Mr. MILLER. I hope that when the next bill comes before the House or when next the conferees are considering the military aspect of this thing, they will give it to some locality where is will be of some positive, affirmative benefit to the Military Establishment.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am very glad to know that, and I was going to ask the gentleman to read the testimony that I will insert in the RECORD on this very point.

STATEMENT OF BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM MITCHELL, UNITED STATES ARMY AIR SERVICE.

Gen. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, in beginning the few remarks I have to make I would say that I think you will have to look at the question of air service from all standpoints. We, as a Nation, need an air service for three principal things. One thing is for military purposes; that is, as a defensive arm of the Government. Another is for civil purposes, and by civil purposes I mean for the use of the civil departments of the Government in the execution of their various lines of work which have been assigned to them. The Post Office Department service would come under that heading. Third is the commercial development of the proposition with a view to its use in the future as a means of communication and transport of freight and passengers.

As to the first, the military use, there is no question that you have got to provide for it in one way or another. It has simply got to be provided for.

As to the second, the Air Service has no competitor whatever where it is a question of delivering something at a terminal station in the air. Do you understand what I mean by that?

The CHAIRMAN. I am frank to say that I do not.

Gen. MITCHELL. If you wish to deliver cannon and machine guns at a place in the air to attack other aircraft or tanks on the ground or infantry marching on a road, aircraft must deliver them there; nothing else can. If you want to map a certain place by photography, the only thing that can deliver the camera up in the air is the aeroplane; this can cover the area very quickly. Where you come into competition with means of communication on the ground, there you have to contend with steamships, with railroad trains, with animal transportation, with dog transportation in the north, or with some other kind of transportation. In other words, you are coming into competition there as a carrier. That is a point I wish to make.

From a military standpoint you have no competitor whatever in the air. You are delivering everything at a terminal station in the air. In so far as mapping is concerned, some phases of life-saving work, the question of air patrol and things of that kind, you have no competitors.

With the Post Office work it is true that you have competitors in these various activities, but on account of the fact that our ground organization—by that we mean our organization of airdromes, communication between airdromes, dissemination of meteorological data between those airdromes, which has to be adopted as a system, can be used by all these activities that I speak of. I believe that in time of peace you will get more returns from keeping up this constant flying for the Post Office Service than you will probably from anything else, because in time of war we have to fly under any and all conditions and in any and all sorts of weather. In time of peace we do not have the same incentive in the Military Service. However, with the Post Office Department they have to keep a regular schedule, and they have to carry certain things right across the country, and they have to keep it up anyway. I believe that from the military standpoint, keeping up your ground organization, and from the navigation and scientific standpoint of making people fly, that it will give more from a standpoint of development than any other one aeronautical activity we have, or certainly as much. I think it is of the greatest importance that you should keep this thing up, and I believe every cent you put into it will be repaid more than two-fold from a national defense standpoint, if not anything else. It is of greater importance, and the longer you make the routes the better.

These in general are my ideas. I have diagrams which show very plainly the various air service routes that I have just mentioned. As to ground organization, we should have in this country, in the event of war or trouble, a series of landing fields throughout the country, which at the same time will do for the Post Office Department, to use in time of peace, for aviation required by any civil department of the Government or for commercial aviation in general. You can not help commercial aviation any more than by providing landing facilities for it, fuel stations and oil stations, certain repair facilities, and things of that kind. By extending the post-office work we will create that system of ground organization and it will be maintained so that it can be used by anybody, in addition to all the other things. I can not say too much for the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us more about it. Let us have your full views. For instance, you say the longer the route the better.

Gen. MITCHELL. By the longer the better, I mean this: If you take a short distance like Washington to New York or Washington to Atlanta or something of that kind the difference in speed between your carriers on the ground and your carriers in the air is not so manifest as it is at a greater distance. If you will remember, a long time ago everybody said you could not compete with the horse in short-haul work with a motor truck; that you had to go a certain distance before the thing began to tell. It is so to some extent with air transport, and that is simply from the standpoint of transportation.

Furthermore, a short flight of two or three or four hundred miles involves a very small ground organization, and you do not need to coordinate your meteorological work and your information work along that line to the same extent that you do if you are going long distances. So the reason I say the longer the better is because the farther you make these routes the more benefit you derive and the more service they will render from the standpoint of speed, which the aeroplane has on every other carrier, and the more we are going to get out of it from the standpoint of organization of all these places and coordinating them together.

Suppose we start with a flight from New York. We have proved that we can fly any number of aeroplanes clear across the whole United States in 25 hours' flying time. We have done it. We have flown them over every route that you see marked on the map before you. We can fly clear across the continent in 25 hours' flying time, provided we have a ground organization.

One of our greatest military uses for aircraft will be in an attack of any force, whether in the air or on the water, coming from across the sea from either the east or the west. We believe that we can put surface vessels completely under the water if they will give us a chance; in other words, make these big ships practically leave the surface of the sea. We believe that will be done in the future. We know that, with any sort of adequate air force at all, we can practically stop the debarkation of troops from ships by direct air attack.

Consequently, with our resources in this country of men and material, which make us practically independent if we are organized, so far as sustaining ourselves is concerned, that even if both seas were held by an enemy so that they could get to our coast, yet if we had an air force in the center of the United States so we could throw it to the west or to the east it would be the greatest strategical reserve we could have. But in order to have that efficient you have got to have a ground organization. You have to have landing fields, fuel stations, and your intercommunication and your meteorological system as applied to the air, which we have not got in this country to-day at all. That will benefit agriculture and all sorts of things if we ever get it organized, from the standpoint of the air—that is, the meteorological end of it.

So it is of the greatest importance, in my opinion, that we get these long routes, or particularly the route from New York to the Pacific coast, organized on this basis. One of the most important factors in the continued use of that is its being kept up and developed in the establishment of a post office system, and at the same time the Government otherwise would get a great deal out of it.

Once they establish that one across the continent we can go north or south or anywhere. Across the continent it is less than 3,000 miles, while north and south it is within range of a very quick and easy flight. Take any difficulty we might have along the Mexican border. We can shoot a bunch of aeroplanes down there in a very brief time. In the vicinity of Omaha, Topeka, Wichita, St. Louis, Kansas City, Rock Island, anywhere in there is a splendid place for the development of our air forces in case of trouble—that is, with a view to using it on the Pacific coast, the Atlantic coast, or south or north.

I am so much interested in this thing and I have seen what great benefits these long flights have amounted to in Europe, that I am confident this next summer we will push through to Alaska. We are going up through the Dakotas and through Canada to Alaska. We think we can get to Alaska in four days without any trouble. We think we can get, for instance, to Edmonton. We want to go through there. It is almost a straight shoot on a great circle. We are also going to develop a route from Puget Sound near Seattle to our southernmost island off Alaska. The trouble about this is the fog, which greatly interferes with us.

Senator HENDERSON. That is on the coast?

Gen. MITCHELL. Yes, sir. We have two ranges of mountains until we get to Alaska and then we have three ranges. We have the Coast Range and the Rockies, and when we get to Alaska we have the Coast Range, the Alaskan Range, and the Rockies.

The worst impediment to navigation in the air which we have is fog. That is the worst thing we have to contend with. It is the hardest problem for us to solve. If the mail service has to fly in any kind of weather, it will tend toward solution of that quicker than anything else.

Senator STERLING. Do you think there is a solution for it?

Gen. MITCHELL. There is no question about it. We are sure of it. This is just a way of working it out. In war we do not have time to work these things out. We had to put everything on the front and go to it. We have not begun really to work with this thing yet. These things that have been done have been with war equipment hastily adapted to the experiment, just for the sake of seeing what could be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any great present obstacles in the way of extending that line from Omaha to the Pacific coast?

Gen. MITCHELL. None whatever. We went right over this route from Chicago to San Francisco with a ground organization that we put in effect in about 14 days and had no trouble in getting across; but in order to maintain that on an economical basis and the way it should be maintained, it should be definitely organized with landing fields, with a meteorological system, and an intercommunicating system between them.

By organized, I mean that you have an airdrome at any one place, for instance, at Omaha. You have there a wireless station which can be used in fog or at any time. By that means you can steer the aeroplane for them just as a ship can steer for a lighthouse out in the ocean. That disseminates meteorological information. You can tell the crews of the aeroplanes what height to fly in order to get the best wind conditions, either helping them or against them.

For instance, the other day I got off the ground with a 36-mile wind, and when I got up 6,000 feet there was 85 miles of wind. On another day, when I went up, there was wind from the north of 26 miles on the ground, and when I got up 7,000 feet there was a wind from the northeast of about 55 miles. If a man in an aeroplane goes up without the means of being told from the ground what the air conditions are, he can not tell in the air himself, except in a very indefinite way. That can be told him from the ground, however, and he then takes his readings from the compass and direction readings so as to offset both, and keeps on flying in the direction the wireless impulses indicate.

A great deal of development is necessary for landing in clouds of fog. We can guide the plane toward the airdrome, and we have a means of telling the man in the air when he is over the airdrome. The question is to get down to the airdrome in that plane without stalling and falling or smashing the plane when it comes down. There are several different methods of doing that now which need a thing like the Postal Air Service to be applied in order to perfect it. Once you perfect landing in the fog, that solves the aeroplane business.

I mention these things in connection with the Post Office Department wholly because, in my opinion, that will form a continuous system of aeronautical development under all sorts of conditions which it will be difficult to get in any other way.

In flying from east to west you have, as I remember it, about 400 miles where the ground elevation is 6,000 feet.

Senator HENDERSON. From what point to what point?

Gen. MITCHELL. That is from about Sidney nearly to Sacramento; that is before you start going down into Sacramento. The highest point that one has to fly at is about 11,000 feet.

Senator HENDERSON. That is when you go over the Rockies and the Sierras?

Gen. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have serious trouble in rising from the ground to these high altitudes?

Gen. MITCHELL. It depends on the engine you use. With the old engines that we had, it was very difficult to rise from the ground in an altitude over three or four thousand feet, but with the present engines that has been very largely eliminated. We have some engines that can go higher, have very much more ceiling, as we call it, than others in this air, and we have to use the machines with a high ceiling to get the lift necessary. The best lifting engine that we have is called the 300-horsepower Hispano-Suiza engine. That has a very good altitude capacity.

Another thing we will probably use in the air mail is the turbo booster. It is an arrangement which is put on the motor. It is a turbine which is put on the motor and utilizes the exhaust gases to actuate the turbine, which in turn actuates an air compressor, which delivers compressed air back to the carbureter, and that allows you to get more altitude, because one reason for the inability of gasoline motors to go high is due to the lack of oxygen and air in their mixture.

The CHAIRMAN. Has anybody tried to get a patent on that for perpetual motion?

Gen. MITCHELL. It is a very interesting proposition. With that device we can get an altitude that before was absolutely impossible. As you get your altitude, on account of the rare condition of the air the resistance against the aeroplane is reduced and thereby you gain speed, so that we believe that within a comparatively short time we will get speeds of at least 300 to 500 miles an hour by getting the altitude.

Senator STERLING. An altitude of over 30,000 feet has been reached, as I remember.

Gen. MITCHELL. We have gotten, with the ordinary aeroplane—that is, very heavily loaded with two passengers in it—30,000 feet. We believe we will get 50,000 feet. We believe we will get that possibly this year. If you have an adjustable propeller applied to it, you can set it to climb until you get there, and then set it for speed horizontally and the speed you get is just a matter of conjecture. We know we will get tremendous speed.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state whether in your opinion the Post Office Department in its experiments during the last 20 months or during the time it has been operating under this law, has contributed anything of material benefit to the art of aircraft?

Gen. MITCHELL. I think it has. I think it has been more of an incentive toward commercial aviation than anything we have had in this country, in that they have maintained a constant air system between certain points.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the department made any improvement upon aeroplanes, in your judgment?

Gen. MITCHELL. I think that within that time they have not attempted to. That is too short a time with the problem they had to make any very great improvement, with the money they have. They have taken some of the war equipment and transformed it to some extent, which has rendered it very much better for their particular work; but as to getting out any new devices they have not had the opportunity to do that and they can not do it in the length of time they have had. They have adopted some existing equipment by slight changes; for instance, the DH-4 has been made into a twin-engine airplane.

The CHAIRMAN. That is of very high value, is it not?

Gen. MITCHELL. It increased the surface and puts in an engine that is more reliable, and in that respect it is a good thing. But remember that is only an adaptation. There is nothing new about it. It is an adaptation of existing things. If we had a development along this line, then we could devise entirely new things with the proposition. There is the question of speed for landing, which is the most destructive thing we have. It depends on the amount of loading per square foot of wing. If you had some method by which you could furl the wing and then unfurl it as you got down to the ground, or if you could block your downward flight in the air or parachute yourself, then you could begin to eliminate these troubles. On the other hand, coming back to speed, there are many other improvements that might be and probably would be developed if we had the opportunities that would be provided by the development of such a route as we have under discussion. We will have a chance to undertake to develop these in a flying route across the country, such as the Post Office Department have in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have in mind any such practical demonstrations where the use of the aeroplane as that proposed by the Post Office Department in its experiments? Are there any other agencies that are employed by the Government or by you that could accomplish the same things or better things than are being accomplished by the Post Office Department in this experiment?

Gen. MITCHELL. No; not in that particular line of work. There is no agency of the Government that could develop continuous flying like this service. All this talk about flights to India and South Africa are not as continuous and the total distance covered will not be as great as if you will establish a line straight across this country. This is a big proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any idea as to the practicability of this for mail-carrying purposes?

Gen. MITCHELL. That can be better told by the Post Office Department. They can tell much better than I. I believe that all scientific developments and all this overhead of the stations—in other words, all the administration overhead—should be carried in one place so as to economize the cost to the Government. If you keep this stuff—and by stuff I mean the development and this administrative overhead, including a technical section, a finance section, a contract section, and everything that goes with it—under all these different departments of the Government you will, in my opinion, get a minimum development in proportion to the amount of money you put into it.

The CHAIRMAN. A minimum amount you say?

Gen. MITCHELL. I think you should have all these organizations—the ground stations, the procurement of material and personnel, their training, the inspection of the aircraft, the inspection of pilots, the question of international police and regulations—under one scheme of control. Then when any of these are assigned for work under any department of the Government they ought to pass under their exclusive control. If you could apply, for instance, the money that is appropriated to-day for all these departments of the Government, the Army, the Navy, the Post Office Department, and lump it together and cut out all this unnecessary stuff and put it under people that knew something about it I believe you would get 30 per cent more out of it in efficiency and development than you do to-day.

Senator STERLING. Your theory would be that there should be a separate department?

Gen. MITCHELL. There is no question about it. The more you think about it the more you will realize it. People do not know enough about it yet to be able to appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any jealousy between the War Department and the Post Office Department in reference to the aircraft work?

Gen. MITCHELL. I can not see why there should be. Anybody who looks at postal aviation on a very broad plane of development for the country can not feel any jealousy. It ought not to be allowed to interfere in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. I am pleased to hear you state one thing, because if I understood you correctly it meets with my approval. Whatever arrangement we made, whether we had a central aircraft department or not, if we provide the Post Office Department with equipment, that department ought to be supreme?

Gen. MITCHELL. It has to be; it can not be any other way, because they have to operate on schedule, and in order to do that they have to have discipline among their personnel. They have to get the people best qualified to do that particular work. On the other hand, all these people ought to be available for war in case of necessity, and all the aircraft ought to be so constructed that they could be quickly converted.

Senator HENDERSON. They would be, would they not?

Gen. MITCHELL. Yes, sir. Take the Post Office Department right now—we could help them vastly if we only had authority to do it and were allowed to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. How could you help them?

Gen. MITCHELL. In the first place, by keeping up all their repair and salvage and not requiring them to have a separate department of repair, supply, and salvage. We could overhaul all their motors in our regularly constituted repair and supply depots. In fact, we have started to do that at Indianapolis for them. We could salvage all their ships for them. That is a thing that is very important in the air business. If you have an efficient salvage department you save tremendously, and if you do not, you lose a great deal. A big ship crashes out here, and you must have an organization that will go there and take the things off that are worth saving and leave the things that are not worth saving. Often it is not worth the freight charges to ship them to a certain place.

On the other hand there are certain instruments and parts of motors and all that sort of thing that are very necessary, and we can save them very easily. We always have to have three elements in that portion of any airdrome. One is supply, the other is salvage, and the third is repair. Those three things have to go hand in hand. These could do work for all departments using aircraft. There is no use in the Navy maintaining one, the Post Office Department maintaining one, the Army maintaining one, the Geological Survey maintaining one, and the Agricultural Department maintaining its forest patrol. There is no sense in it at all.

Senator HENDERSON. Have they aeroplanes in the forest-patrol work now?

Gen. MITCHELL. Yes. The Army planes are being used for that purpose, and they can very well do it at this time when they are not doing any other things in time of peace. We consider that the second most important thing of advantage in the several departments of the Government. I believe the Department of Agriculture is ready to tell you that in the first six weeks we put that into operation it saved them more money than the combined appropriation for all the air services of the Government.

Senator HENDERSON. When was that put into operation?

Gen. MITCHELL. The 1st of July, I believe, last year.

Senator HENDERSON. There may be requests made for an appropriation in the Agriculture bill?

Gen. MITCHELL. It is very important indeed.

Senator HENDERSON. This will mean another air service under another department,

Gen. MITCHELL. The Coast and Geodetic Survey will want the same thing and the Geological Survey will want the same thing. You will have those requests for appropriations coming from all sides, and once you get somebody practical and responsible for the Air Service in the Government, then you can put your thumb on him, and you will have accomplished something very practical. It is very difficult to start an air service. The air service that has been started by the Post Office Department has been started on personnel trained by the Army and on material furnished by the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. Have they reconstructed it very largely?

Gen. MITCHELL. They have reconstructed it and modified it and fixed it up very considerably; but do not forget, that stuff came largely from the central pool, and alone and unaided an air service is very difficult to get going.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Post Office Department put it in shape and used it?

Gen. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Senator HENDERSON. If Congress should decide they would adopt one of the recommendations made by the Post Office Department as to aerial routes, which one do you favor, and which one do you think would bring the greatest benefit to the military organization?

Gen. MITCHELL. The longest one—that is, from New York to San Francisco—absolutely and unquestionably. That would show you more than all the rest put together, because you get all the conditions of climate and all the altitudes that are encountered in this country, and, of course, all the temperatures. We get meteorological data across here as the air currents vary, and that data would be invaluable. I personally think you can deliver mail in 36 hours from New York to San Francisco. I think we will find night flying is best all through the whole middle part of the country, from the Alleghenies to the Rockies.

Senator STERLING. Awhile ago you spoke about 25 hours.

Gen. MITCHELL. That is, 25 hours of straight flying. In order to get 25 continuous hours of flying we would have to fly at night. If you have an organization very strong and capable of having these aids to air navigation, you would do it in 25 hours. I believe to-day—that is, I mean within two or three months—that the organization we could put in there would be able to deliver mail from New York to San Francisco ordinarily in 36 hours. We relayed a message from Nogales to Brownsville the other day in eight hours. Only an hour and a half or two hours from that would carry it from Nogales to the Pacific coast. It is interesting to do those things. We want to begin to try these things out, but we have scarcely made a beginning yet at all.

Senator STERLING. It is a very fascinating field.

Gen. MITCHELL. The great thing is that you go out and try these things, and you find that you can do them.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything further you wish to suggest to the committee?

Gen. MITCHELL. Nothing in particular; however, I would be very happy to answer any questions.

Senator HENDERSON. Are there any other maps you wish us to see?

Gen. MITCHELL. There are many things dealing with the air organization and military use of air forces that might be interesting but would take some time to explain.

The CHAIRMAN. We are particularly interested in laying out this line from New York to San Francisco.

Senator STERLING. You have not gone into the question of cost, I suppose, of maintenance?

Gen. MITCHELL. I think the Post Office Department are better qualified to speak about that than I am, because they know the comparative cost from an air standpoint and with respect to the class of carriers that they come into competition with on the ground. I think when you begin to compare costs between the air and ground it does not actually show the benefits that come from the air on account of the time factor and the development factor and the asset that it is to the Government, which you can not measure in money value.

The CHAIRMAN. I quite agree with you on that. Personally, I would not consider the question of carrying mail by aeroplane if the whole object was to make it of use in the mail service. I think there are other and larger questions which can be developed at the same time, and that is the reason why I am looking with some degree of favor upon the continuation of this service.

Gen. MITCHELL. I think if you would try to look at all our questions from the standpoint of the air, they are all connected up with each other and all of necessity connected up, their use, their upkeep, their scientific development, and their regulation from a national standpoint and from an international standpoint—I do not see how you can divide it and get any efficiency out of it. Your right hand will not know what your left hand is doing unless you do that.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask, Gen. Mitchell, what you are doing now?

Gen. MITCHELL. I am in charge of operations and training in the Army Air Service. I formerly commanded the Air Service with our armies on the front in Europe.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how many men have been assigned to the Post Office Department in the Air Service?

Gen. MITCHELL. The Post Office Department are better able to tell. I think they have 21 pilots and 150 men.

The CHAIRMAN. They came from your service, did they?

Gen. MITCHELL. They were all either trained in our service or practically so—that is, all the pilots and the majority of the mechanics, because so far the Governments have been the only ones that could give very much training. It is a very expensive proposition. I see frequent references in the debates in Congress as to what became of the $640,000,000 in this country appropriated for air purposes. It must be realized that a navigating personnel of about 15,000 people is either fully or partially trained. That is, 15,000 pilots and observers received training in the service, and that takes a great lot of equipment and a great lot of money, both from a financial standpoint and from the standpoint of the time, which is of vast importance when you get into war.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any control over the men in the Post Office Department?

Gen. MITCHELL. None whatever. They are hired by the Post Office Department and used as civilians. I think that is a very good way to use them.

The CHAIRMAN. They are no longer connected with the Army Air Service at all?

Gen. MITCHELL. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They are discharged men?

Gen. MITCHELL. Yes; just the same as any other activity of the Post Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is all, General, unless you have something further to suggest. We are very much obliged to you for coming here. I think you have given some information with reference to the particular branch of the air business that will be of benefit to us. We are not considering the consolidation of the Air Service or any of those large questions, but are merely considering a direct appropriation. We wanted to submit to you the situation for such information as you could give us on these projects that have been in contemplation by the Post Office Department.

Gen. MITCHELL. I think it is a very, very important thing, and I personally not only think we ought to use heavier-than-air craft in it, but I think lighter-than-air craft ought to be used in it also. That has not been brought up yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Just what do you mean by that?

Gen. MITCHELL. I mean large, rigid airships, to not only carry first-class matter, but second-class matter and all sorts of traffic. They are perfectly practicable. They have gone away past the point of development. The first one appeared in Europe some 20 years ago, and we have not got one in this country yet. We could use them all or part of the time for carrying mail.

Senator STERLING. With reference to the heavier-than-air craft service, what do you think about the possibility of developing it beyond the mere matter of carrying mail and developing it so as to allow the transportation of passengers, etc., for long distances?

Gen. MITCHELL. I think it has a great future, but I think if you ever want to make it practicable, to develop the means of navigation I have just spoken of, including the solution of the fog problem, you will have to work on certain safety devices. We are getting the safety end of it solved a little bit more all the time. This division I spoke about last should take care of the flier in the air, and things of that kind unquestionably will be solved if we have an opportunity of keeping at work on it all the time, which this will give us. That is the proposition. The question of military preparedness in this country is always a political question, because the menace against us is not as constant as it is, for instance, in Europe, with the result that our appropriations go up and down and we can not have the same continuity of development that we might get in Postal Air Service. We have to have continuous work for development. With reference to the automobile, if they had had no continuous work for it and if it had been experimented with for awhile and then had to take a big long recess until another war, we would not have been anywhere with motor vehicles. That is the point about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is all, Gen. Mitchell. We are very much obliged to you.

Gen. MITCHELL. I am very glad to have been able to come before the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What makes you shut out St. Louis and all that great southwestern country?

Mr. STEENERSON. We plead not guilty to shutting out anybody. We had to draw a straight line from New York to the Pacific coast via Chicago, and that is what we did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are they going on a straight line?

Mr. STEENERSON. Practically so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How fast do these machines go on a long trip?

Mr. STEENERSON. About 120 miles an hour.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this supposed to be entirely for the benefit of the Army?

Mr. STEENERSON. Not entirely. It is supposed to have some value as a mail-carrying proposition. To my mind it would be an indefensible expense unless it had its military value, which has been pointed out.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman if he does not know that if we make this appropriation Congress will continue to make one every year as long as the world lasts?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that this is just the beginning.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman will certainly remember that I have been against this whole proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for that exhibition of good sense.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman need not shake his gory locks at me and say I did it, because I was not in favor of spending the public money on this aerial postal route.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What made you agree to it, then?

Mr. STEENERSON. The majority of the managers agreed to it.

Mr. DYER. The people want it and Congress wants it, in my judgment.

Mr. ROUSE. It was the best thing we could suggest. That is the reason we agreed to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has it ever been demonstrated that this carrying of the mail by flying machines is a successful performance when you consider all the circumstances—the cost and all the rest of it?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think it has been demonstrated that it is not a success, and that is the reason why we have not continued this route from here to New York, because I have evidence in my possession from men who have taken the books and recorded the facts that the mail was actually delayed by the aerial service from New York to Washington.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You said it is cheaper than by rail?

Mr. STEENERSON. I said the department claimed it was cheaper.

Mr. DYER. The department is the best authority on the subject.

Mr. RANDALL of California. The gentleman said the records showed that it was a failure.

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not say the records of the Post Office Department. I said the records in my office, compiled by employees.

Mr. RANDALL of California. The records of the flying with the mail from Chicago to New York show an efficiency record of 92 per cent deliveries, and as compared with the railroad time tables that is a very efficient service. The railroads are on time about 65 per cent of the time, but the airplane deliveries of the mail between Chicago and New York are on a 92 per cent efficiency basis.

Mr. STEENERSON. It depends on what you call an efficiency basis. If you call it efficient when they do not kill the aviator and burn up the mail, I presume that is true. But there are many other accidents delaying the mail.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNBAR], a member of the committee.

Mr. DUNBAR. Does not the record show that the transportation of the mail between New York and San Francisco by airplane shortens the time something like 58 hours, and that, too, in the face of the fact that no traveling is done during the night, and that the two extremes of the country are brought that much closer together in point of time?

Mr. STEENERSON. I regret that I am unable to admit the statement made by the gentleman.

Mr. DUNBAR. The transmission of mail by aeroplanes covering long distances is greatly facilitated by aeroplane service, and the transmission of mail from New York to San Francisco is a good thing, yet for short distances it would not be so acceptable.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have no answer to make to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. When we had this question up before in the House, the distinguished chairman mentioned his opposition to the matter and incidentally stated that he called to the attention of the department the fact that they had left out the gentleman's Twin Cities in Minnesota from this aeroplane mail service. Thereupon the department promised the chairman that it would establish this service in the Twin Cities within 60 days, and thereupon the gentleman stated that that got the Minnesota vote. I want to ask whether or not the department has again promised this service to the Twin Cities in Minnesota?

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will excuse me, I will say that the recital of the conversation by the gentleman is not correct, and although he has tried two or three times, he is still incorrect.

Mr. BLANTON. I will put the exact remarks of the gentleman in the RECORD:

[Excerpt from speech of Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON, on page 1578 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Jan. 15, 1920.]

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a year ago last month we held hearings on this item. It was then carried at $100,000 for the year, and they asked for $850,500. Before it was granted we examined Mr. Praeger with regard to it, and I mention this simply to show the methods employed by the Post Office Department to increase this appropriation.

* * * * * * *

I want to call your attention to the fact that a year ago, when we granted the increase of 800 per cent, I asked Mr. Praeger if they were going to extend the service to St. Paul and Minneapolis. I said I did not believe in the service except as an experiment. I said, "If you are going to extend it, are you going to carry it to the Twin Cities?" I will read from page 54 of last year's hearings on the appropriation bill:

"Mr. STEENERSON. You have not gotten to Chicago yet?

"Mr. PRAEGER. Sunday week we will get there—on the 15th of December.

"Mr. STEENERSON. And then what time will you get to Minneapolis and St. Paul?

"Mr. PRAEGER. In the spring. That is the only promise we can make, because we have problems to solve connected with winter flying which we are going to solve on the New York-Chicago route. If that swings well and we have fairly reasonable weather, we will get into Minneapolis in March, 1919."

That, of course, got the Minnesota vote for the appropriation. He has never extended it to Minneapolis. But under his statement the people have purchased an aviation field for $25,000, and the board of trade are bombarding me with telegrams.

Mr. STEENERSON. In the bill which the gentleman refers to in the last Congress an appropriation was made of $855,000 for aerial mail. When that was before the committee I did ask the department if it included an appropriation sufficient to take care of the Twin Cities, and they said that it would by March 1 a year ago. That bill, however wrong it may be, was reported by the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee [Mr. MOON], and it was voted for by the gentleman from Texas, voted "no" on motion to recommit the bill, and the conference report passed unanimously—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 3790, February 19, 1919. If there was any pork barrel in it the gentleman from Texas is as responsible as anybody. The bill went through unanimously, and thereafter it was signed by a Democratic President. If there was anything wrong in the bill, I think it can be fairly charged to the majority of the House at that time.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman deny that he stated at that time that when the department promised the service by March 1 that got the Minnesota vote?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I did not say any such thing.

Mr. BLANTON. I will put the exact remarks of the gentleman in the RECORD. And then to-morrow, on reading same, the gentleman from Minnesota will see that in his speech on January 15, 1920, wherein he quoted a colloquy he had with Second Assistant Postmaster General Praeger, he asked when the service would get to Minneapolis and St. Paul, to which Mr. Praeger replied, "In the spring—probably to Minneapolis in March, 1919." The gentleman from Minnesota then stated:

That, of course, got the Minnesota vote for the appropriation.

Mr. STEENERSON. What the gentleman from Minnesota said was said facetiously, that when the Assistant Postmaster General stated that this appropriation would include the service of Chicago to St. Paul and Minneapolis that got my vote, the Minnesota vote. I did not refer to anybody else. The gentleman from Texas has misrepresented me three or four times by saying that I pledged the other Members from Minnesota, and if he had a spark of fairness in his heart he would know that I was talking only about myself and I was not referring to the other Members from Minnesota. I said I would read and I read from page 54 of last year's hearings before the committee on the Post Office appropriation bill. I was the only Minnesota man on the committee. I only referred to myself.

Now, I refuse to yield any further. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will not the gentleman withhold that for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will withhold it.

Mr. OSBORNE. I wish to get out of the stormy atmosphere that prevails at the present time and get down into the equable climate of the southern part of California. [Laughter.] I wish to ask if the committee in considering this matter of aerial service took into account the more comfortable, the more reliable air lines along the southern part of the country which terminate at the principal city on the Pacific coast of North and South America in population and wealth, namely, the city of Los Angeles?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; and we were very sorry that we could not bring Los Angeles and San Diego in.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Can not the gentleman suggest something in the report by which the aeroplanes will go over Danville, Ill., every day? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON. I certainly will, and you can get it under this bill if they can carry as cheaply as by rail. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 90, noes 5.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, leave to extend remarks was granted to Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. MILLER.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a public interview with the Secretary of State, Mr. Colby, and a Delegate of Congress, on the freedom of political prisoners in Ireland.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. On yesterday an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE], to which a point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. The question depended upon the facts of the case, in the judgment of the Chair. It was impossible to know at that time just what the facts were. The Chair has had an investigation made and is now ready to rule upon the point of order.

The paragraph of the bill under consideration to which this amendment was offered is as follows:

For shelter, grounds, shooting galleries, ranges for small-arms target practice, machine-gun practice, field-artillery practice, repairs, and expenses incident thereto, including flour for paste for marking targets, hire of employees, such ranges and galleries to be open as far as practicable to the National Guard and organized rifle clubs under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $50,000.

There is no question but what the amendment offered is germane to the paragraph. The amendment provides for an appropriation of $88,880 for the acquisition of land as an addition to the Leon Springs Military Reservation in Texas, heretofore authorized and now in use as a target range at Camp Travis in Texas.

Whether the point of order directed against the amendment should be sustained or overruled depends upon the facts in the case. If the purchase proposes the addition of a separate and distinct tract of land not adjoining and appurtenant to the Leon Springs Reservation, the point of order should be sustained; if the addition is adjacent to the Leon Springs Reservation it is in order as a continuation of a public work. There is no method of enlarging any public work that is situated as it must be upon lands except by amendment to existing law. It has been held that any continuation of an existing work is not subject to that point of order. This has been extended to include lands which are adjacent to that which has already been authorized by an act of Congress. The Chair has been informed in this case by the War Department that the land appropriated for in the amendment is not only adjacent to but is in fact within the present boundaries of what has been laid out and denominated the Leon Springs Reservation. Under those conditions the point of order must be, and is, overruled.

The question now arises on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, which, without objection, the Chair will ask the Clerk to again report for the information of the committee.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEE: Page 40, line 25, at the end of line 25, add the following:

"Provided, That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $88,880 for the acquisition of land as an addition to the Leon Springs Military Reservation in Texas, heretofore authorized and now in use as a target range for Camp Travis, Tex."

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEE. When this matter was up yesterday I made a statement of the case under the reservation of the point of order in respect to the merits of the question. Subsequently I discussed the point of order from a parliamentary status. I want to know whether I will be permitted to make a statement under this amendment as to the merits of the case, or am I precluded by the statement that I made yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yesterday was authorized and, as a matter of fact, used five minutes in a statement in support of his amendment, but, of course, he can ask unanimous consent at this time if he desires to proceed further.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I care to make any further statement than what I made yesterday. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HUDSPETH offers the following amendment: Amend the bill, page 43, after line 15, by adding, after the figures "$80,000," the following: "That the sum of $356,700 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of 2,000 acres of land adjoining and to the east of the present military reservation at Fort Bliss, Tex., and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make said purchase of said lands, to be used for a rifle range and other purposes which the Federal Government may determine, said land now being used by the Federal Government for Army purposes."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to reserve the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California reserves the point of order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state to my friend from California that the facts in this case are identically the same from a parliamentary standpoint as those just passed upon by the Chair.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that the cases are not exactly identical.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state that they are identical. This land adjoins the Fort Bliss Reservation, right against it, and is now being occupied by the Army stationed at Fort Bliss as a drill ground and aviation field and rifle range.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Texas desires to be recognized on the merits of his amendment, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do; but I wanted to state that the facts are identical with the facts in the case just passed upon by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the point of order when it is made.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I anticipated there would be a point of order raised against this amendment and I waited for the ruling in the other case. The reservation at Fort Bliss, Tex., comprises 1,280 acres of land; 640 acres were donated by the citizens of my home town to the Government and 640 acres were donated by the State of Texas. The Federal Government has never purchased an acre of land in the Fort Bliss Reservation or adjacent thereto. The Army of the Federal Government stationed at Fort Bliss has used this identical land for 10 years and has paid the magnificent sum of $1 to the people of that city. I want to state further that this land was appraised by a committee appointed by certain Army officers and a committee appointed by the chamber of commerce, and the price that was fixed upon the land was almost double the amount the citizenship there are asking the Government for it to-day. I would state to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who I believe is in full sympathy with me in this amendment, for I have discussed it with him, that in all fairness to these people, where the Federal Government has used their lands for 10 years, it ought to buy this land at a sum of about one-half of its present value. Why do they want to sell it to the Federal Government? Because everybody in my town recognizes that Fort Bliss is the most important military post on the border. It supplies the division posts for 600 miles on the east side and 500 miles on the west side, and as long as there is disturbance in Mexico—and there has been for many years and probably it will continue for many years to come—this post must be maintained at its present standard. This land ought to be purchased.

The people should be paid some remuneration for lands which could be cut up to-day and sold in city lots, because it is right up against the city, for $300 an acre. That is what the citizenship said, that is what the board appointed by the Army officers say, and I say to you in all fairness that I think the Federal Government ought to purchase this land at this sum, that has been fixed by two boards at a reasonable—a very reasonable—value. I do not believe that they ought to continue to use our choicest land there. It is necessary that they should have an aviation field and that they should have a drill ground and a target range. I have seen it used for a target range for 10 years. Why should not the Government purchase this land at the price fixed? The citizenship did not fix the price. All that the private owners ask is a reasonable sum, not its full market value.

It is not a town-lot scheme, gentlemen, but simply the citizens there who own this land that the Federal Government has been using for years and years ask some remuneration from the Federal Government. And bear in mind, gentlemen, that magnificent post which has been built there, and which has cost millions of dollars, the land upon which those buildings are situated never cost our Government one cent. Now, can you point to any other place in this broad land where the people donated every acre of land or which was donated by the great State of Texas out of its private lands, for when Texas, as you know, went into the Union, she reserved her public lands? When it became necessary to enlarge the post Texas generously donated 640 acres of land to the Federal Government, and I ask you gentlemen, in all fairness to our people, that have just as much pride in building up that post as any other place in this Republic, yet we do not feel we ought to donate this land for Army purposes. That is shown by the Secretary of War, by the commanding general of the Southern Department and the commanding officer at Fort Bliss to be in the interest of the Federal Government. Gentlemen, I want you to bear in mind this is not a town-lot scheme. It is not brought here on the part of certain energetic real estate men because they feel they might induce the Congress to purchase it.

Mr. YATES. What is the amount?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Three hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars, $178 an acre, and the appraised value of this land runs up from $250 to $300 an acre. I certainly trust that my good friend will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I must make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon what ground is the point of order made?

Mr. KAHN. In the first place I do not think it is germane to this section of shooting galleries and ranges, and then I do not understand that this land is in the territory occupied by Fort Bliss. The previous land transaction was in connection with the land at Leon Springs—it was, in fact, a part of that area—and I find that the Leon Springs property was under option of contemplated purchase by the Government for three years. This I have not been able to find is under option by the Government.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman will yield, I will state to my good friend that the Government took an option on this land a little over two years ago.

Mr. KAHN. Is there any contract?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; in the War Department there is a contract. I have seen it. I will say to my good friend from California I know and feel that he believes in exact justice in this matter.

Mr. WELLING. Is the War Department occupying this land?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, yes, sir; and has been for 10 years.

Mr. WELLING. How much has it paid for that privilege?

Mr. HUDSPETH. One silver dollar.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I am not an expert, I will state to my friend, the Chairman, on parliamentary procedure in this House. It joins the land that is owned by the Government, right against it; has been used for years by the Federal Government, and the Government has had an option on this land for two or three years. The contract is in the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a decision rendered by a very distinguished and expert parliamentarian in the House—rendered no longer than yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE] upon this question. The identical question was up yesterday, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania held that it was not subject to the point of order, although it involves the question of buying land. I find myself not in accord with the said decision of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I always try to obey the rules and precedents of the House; and I cite his decision as authority for the present Chair overruling the present point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] is as follows:

That the sum of $356,700 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purchase of 2,000 acres of land adjoining and to the east of the present military reservation at Fort Bliss, Tex., and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make said purchase of said land, to be used for rifle range and other purposes which the Federal Government may determine, said land now being used by the Federal Government for Army purposes.

It will be observed that this amendment is solely for the purpose of purchasing land. If it had been offered to the section that we had under consideration on page 40, which includes the acquisition of grounds, it would be within the rule laid down by previous decisions of the Chair. The Chair desires to call the attention, however, of the gentleman from Texas and of the committee to the fact that this paragraph now under consideration is under the general title of "Quartermaster supplies and services for rifle ranges for civilian instruction." That, of course, does not imply the acquisition of land. The language of the paragraph is as follows:

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges.

The Chair presumes the gentleman from Texas would urge upon the Chair the argument that that establishment would include the purchase of land?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has given that idea some consideration. However, if the gentleman will read the remaining portion of the item, he will understand, the Chair is quite sure, just as the Chair now understands, that that could not be held to include the acquisition of land. That is all under the Quartermaster Department and is intended for the purpose of establishing a range upon any land that has been acquired and for the provision of those things which may be necessary, for clerical service, for baggage and other insignia, for the transportation of employees, for the purchase of material, supplies, and services. Everything included in the paragraph would exclude the idea that it was intended to add the purpose or object of the acquisition of land. For that reason, the Chair holds that the objection that has been made to the point of order suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], that it is not germane, is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 40, so that I may offer this amendment.

Mr. KAHN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Texas that we ought to finish up the bill, and then——

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to my good friend that I think it will not take more than a moment. I will make no statement about the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 40, the last paragraph, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, is this amendment the gentleman wants to offer?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill, page 40, after the amendment adopted, which was offered by Mr. BEE, by inserting:

"That the sum of $356,700 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of 2,000 acres of land adjoining and to the east of the present military reservation at Fort Bliss, Tex.; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make said purchase of said land to be used for rifle range and other purposes which the Federal Government may determine, said land now being used by the Federal Government for Army purposes."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest a point of order should be made to that, because the Secretary of War is directed to authorize and purchase land. It is not on all fours with the other case, because there was a contract there. Therefore, in the present condition of our finances, with all the burdens the country has to bear, I do not believe we should appropriate this sum at this time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that there is a contract now in existence giving the Federal Government an option on this land.

Mr. CANNON. By authority of law?

Mr. HUDSPETH. By authority of law.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman the contract?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is on file, as I understand it, here in the War Department.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman understands it to be so. Then why is it necessary to authorize the purchase of this land? Or is it a bare option?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is an option, as I have already stated to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. An option? I can option off the whole State of Illinois if the State of Illinois were willing that the Government should purchase it for military purposes. That does not amount to a contract.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to page 40 for the purpose of offering the amendment?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Massachusetts has objected. I should oppose it if it was in order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I trust the gentleman will let me put it to a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the procurement and issue, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to institutions at which one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained, such public animals, uniforms, equipment, and means of transportation as he may deem necessary, and to forage at the expense of the United States public animals so issued; for transporting said animals and other authorized equipment from place of issue to the several institutions and return of same to place of issue when necessary; for the maintenance of camps for the further practical instruction of the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for transporting members of such corps to and from such camps, and to subsist them while traveling to and from such camps and while remaining therein so far as appropriations will permit; for the payment of commutation of subsistence to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, at such rate, not exceeding the cost of the garrison ration prescribed for the Army, as authorized in the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, $2,500,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a statement.

I want to say that I sympathize somewhat with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH], who has just taken his seat after making an effort to get an amendment onto this bill providing for the purchase of real estate. My sympathy goes out to him, not because I favor the purchase of real estate but on account of the fact that after our committee had decided that in view of the condition of the Treasury, and in view of the uncertainty in regard to the amount of land that is now owned by the Government for military purposes and the large number of fields and camps that are costing us millions and millions of dollars in overhead expense to keep up from year to year, on yesterday we yielded in that understanding that we had that we would not buy any real estate, and decided to buy Selfridge Field up on the Canadian boundary. And one of the great arguments made in favor of the purchase of that flying field was that there was water in the lake, where the men would fall, if they came down, in the water, rather than on the land, and that it was necessary to keep boats there to go out and bring them in. That it is a good flying field, I have no doubt. I do not question that, but I do question the continuing of the expense of this Government of ours in maintaining all the numerous flying fields that we have and all the numerous camps that we have.

Another thing: After doing that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] comes forward with his proposition, having perhaps just as much merit as the other, and it was necessary for us, in order to be consistent, to allow him to get his amendment onto this bill for the purchase of more real estate. And I want to simply say to the members of this committee that in my judgment we ought to call a halt until the Military Establishment of this country can come to Congress with a plan and with a map, showing us the number of camps and fields that we have and the number that will be required to take care of the Military Establishment of our country, and then we can buy those locations and go to work and put permanent buildings and equipment on them, and get rid of the enormous expense of maintaining all these temporary camps throughout the country. I say that it is with regret that I see my friend from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] go down after others have been favored by getting their amendments in.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman, I judge, refers to my remarks of yesterday in discussing the Selfridge Field. I incidentally referred to the advantages that that field had.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and then the gentleman can make his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I incidentally referred to the advantages that this field had, advantages that are not had by any other field, but I base my support of that proposition upon the fact that the Federal Government has expended $2,300,000 upon that field; that its option expires July 1; and that if it does not take title to it by July 1 it will lose that $2,300,000, except what it may recover through the salvage value of the plant; whereas, by expending the additional $190,000, the Government can acquire title. And I do not believe there is a business man in this country with a spoonful of brains in his head that would throw away $2,300,000 rather than expend an additional $190,000 and acquire title to this land. And then we can sell it if we decide to do so. But if we do not acquire title by July 1 the Government will lose what was put on it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes in which to finish my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am a little bit surprised that my good friend from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] should sing the same siren song that has seduced the Members of this Congress, and perhaps of every other Congress, to invade the Treasury of the United States for the expenditure of money that is unnecessary. And I want to say——

Mr. BEE. I wanted to say that I intended to make a few remarks, but in view of the seductive references of the gentleman from Kentucky, I do not think I will say anything.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, I wanted to say this, that it is all a mistake to talk about it being economy for the Government simply because they have spent a million dollars in some place on some property to take the property over for fear it otherwise would lose something. At Selfridge Field the contractor got $95,000. What will it cost to maintain it each year?

Gentlemen, the time has come when you must understand that when the Government of the United States buys land or buys a plant there is a very different rule operating from the rule that would operate when an individual buys it. When the individual buys it he begins to get an income from it, but when the Government buys it it immediately means an outlay on the part of the Government, and a continued outlay. Therefore I maintain that we ought only to keep such plants as are necessary to maintain our Military Establishment.

I want to say to my good friend from Texas [Mr. BEE] that, notwithstanding I am in sympathy with him, I am against his proposition, because a man who visited that camp told us that they had 200 acres for a drill field there, while at Camp Gordon they did not have enough land for a company to drill on. Yet they wanted to get more additional land than they have at Camp Gordon, and the gentleman from Texas knows they do not need this great plant there to drill on when they already have 200 acres now. I am against this proposition, and I think we ought to call a halt now to buying any more land until we know "where we are at."

Mr. FIELDS. This Camp Selfridge proposition was included in this general camp purchase, and I do not recall that I heard the gentleman from Illinois raising any thunder about it when it was included in that bill, and he was a member of the committee; neither do I recall that he offered any opposition to it in the House when it was considered.

Mr. McKENZIE. Go back and look at the RECORD.

Mr. FIELDS. Did the gentleman, or did he not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Not specifically to Selfridge Field, but I was opposed to that proposition.

Mr. FIELDS. Why did not the gentleman oppose it specifically at that time?

Mr. McKENZIE. I opposed the whole bill. I did not think it was necessary. I feel that way about it now. We have many flying fields already in America. They may be necessary; they may be necessary in Michigan. But before we buy them I do say we ought to have a comprehensive plan. As it is, gentlemen come in here without information, and some Member offers an amendment to buy 2,000 or 200 acres of land in some locality in this country, and we vote it in without knowing anything about it. We ought to know the facts, and we ought to know whether it is necessary for the Military Establishment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL DEPARTMENT.

For the manufacture and purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants, for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships and transports, for laundry work for enlisted men and Army nurses while patients in a hospital, and supplies required for mosquito destruction in and about military posts in the Canal Zone, $3,500,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, select types and makes of motor ambulances for the Army and authorize their purchase without regard to the laws prescribing advertisement for proposals for supplies and materials for the Army; for the purchase of veterinary supplies and hire of veterinary surgeons; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals, of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided further, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Army Nurse Corps, and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignments, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the enlisted force of the Medical Department; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, printing, binding, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to ask a question. On page 45, lines 9 to 13, why is the proviso inserted authorizing the purchase by the Secretary of War of select types and makes of motor ambulances, authorizing their purchase without regard to the law prescribing advertisement, and so forth?

Mr. KAHN. The idea in placing that language in the law—and it has been carried in the law for some years—was to induce the manufacturers of motor vehicles to try to make improvements on ambulances. If the Medical Department were to advertise, probably it would not result in their getting the types of ambulances that they would desire. Of course, under this provision they can meet manufacturers of motor vehicles, whose men and engineers are constantly trying to make improvements. When one of these engineers suggests an improvement in the matter of an ambulance, the Medical Department under this language would be enabled to allow the experiment to proceed, with the object ultimately of getting the ambulance, provided it met with the requirements of the department. They do not buy them ordinarily; they simply try to get the most improved ambulance they can.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Chair desires to call the attention of the committee to the fact that on page 45, at the commencement of line 13, there is a mistake in the spelling of the word "supplies."

Mr. KAHN. Yes. The first syllable on line 13 is misspelled.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOSPITAL CARE, CANAL ZONE GARRISONS.

For paying the Panama Canal such reasonable charges, exclusive of subsistence, as may be approved by the Secretary of War for caring in its hospitals for officers, enlisted men, military prisoners, and civilian employees of the Army admitted thereto upon the request of proper military authority, $60,000: Provided, That the subsistence of the said patients, except commissioned officers, shall be paid to said hospitals out of the appropriation for subsistence of the Army at the rates provided therein for commutation of rations for enlisted patients in general hospitals.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting the RECORD straight. While the Post Office conference report was under consideration to-day, after being yielded to, I asked the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] the following:

Mr. BLANTON. When we had this question up before in the House the distinguished chairman, Mr. STEENERSON, mentioned his opposition to the matter and incidentally stated that he called to the attention of the department the fact that they had left out the gentleman's twin cities in Minnesota from this aeroplane mail service. Thereupon the department promised the chairman that it would establish this service in the twin cities within 60 days, and thereupon the gentleman stated that that got the Minnesota vote. I want to ask whether or not the department has again promised this service to the twin cities in Minnesota?

Whereupon, Mr. Chairman, the said gentleman from Minnesota stated that my recital was incorrect; and when I told him that I would put his exact remarks from his speech of January 15, 1920, in the RECORD showing that my recital was absolutely correct, the gentleman still maintained that I was incorrect, and he went off into a discussion of the subject of "pork barrel" when I had made no allusion to such a question. And when I asked the gentleman if he denied stating in his speech of January 15, 1920, that when Mr. Praeger promised in December to give the twin cities aeroplane service by spring, he stated:

That that got the Minnesota vote—

The gentleman from Minnesota replied:

No; I did not say any such thing.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me just a suggestion. I do not know anything about the difference of opinion between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], but I do not see the gentleman from Minnesota here.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if the gentleman prefers, I will wait until he comes back. But he may not be here to-day. He is not always here.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that if by unanimous consent the gentleman wishes to proceed, he should be here.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to insert this in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman has leave, all right.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the gentleman from Texas obtained leave, while the Post Office matter was under consideration, to insert this language.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. I do not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I read from the RECORD of January 15, 1920, page 1578, where the Post Office appropriation bill was under discussion:

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a year ago last month we held hearings on this item. It was then carried at $100,000 for the year, and they asked for $850,500. Before it was granted we examined Mr. Praeger with regard to it, and I mention this simply to show the methods employed by the Post Office Department to increase the appropriation.

* * * * * * *

I want to call your attention to the fact that a year ago, when we granted the increase of 800 per cent, I asked Mr. Praeger if they were going to extend the service to St. Paul and Minneapolis. I said I did not believe in the service except as an experiment. I said, "If you are going to extend it, are you going to carry it to the Twin Cities?" I will read from page 54 of last year's hearings on the appropriation bill:

"Mr. STEENERSON. You have not gotten to Chicago yet?

"Mr. PRAEGER. Sunday week we will get there—on the 15th of December.

"Mr. STEENERSON. And then what time will you get to Minneapolis and St. Paul?

"Mr. PRAEGER. In the spring. That is the only promise we can make, because we have problems to solve connected with winter flying which we are going to solve on the New York-Chicago route. If that swings well and we have fairly reasonable weather, we will get into Minneapolis in March, 1919."

That, of course, got the Minnesota vote for the appropriation. He has never extended it to Minneapolis. But under his statement the people have purchased an aviation field for $25,000, and the board of trade are bombarding me with telegrams.

That is just exactly practically word for word what I said this morning, that the gentleman asked when the service would reach the Twin Cities, and being assured that it would go there by spring, he then said, "That got the Minnesota vote." Now, note right after his colloquy with Mr. Praeger, the gentleman from Minnesota did say:

That, of course, got the Minnesota vote for the appropriation.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit me, of course he explained that by the "Minnesota vote," he did not intend to mean the whole Minnesota vote.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not claim that he meant the whole Minnesota vote. I do not contend that he meant anything whatever, more than his words conveyed, in their usual meaning in English. But he did say exactly what I said he said, and though he denied it, he did say:

That, of course, got the Minnesota vote for the appropriation.

And before the gentleman from Minnesota denies passages in his speeches again, and before he accuses anyone of being incorrect, he ought to review his speeches and know that he is himself correct. The record of his speech of January 15, 1920, which I have placed in the RECORD, shows that I quoted him verbatim, almost word for word, and that I did not place any improper construction whatever upon what he said, but merely asked a question.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a question about the care of our insane soldiers. You are making appropriations here for the Canal Zone.

Mr. KAHN. We have not read that section yet. I would suggest that the gentleman withhold his pro forma amendment until later.

Mr. McKEOWN. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMY MEDICAL MUSEUM.

For Army Medical Museum, preservation of specimens, and the preparation and purchase of new specimens, $20,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs what provision is made for our insane soldiers, and how they are cared for as to their pay, allowances, and so forth? This section refers particularly to the insane soldiers in the Canal Zone.

Mr. KAHN. The item to which the gentleman referred a while ago, on pages 46 and 47, makes the appropriation for that matter.

The Army has a contract agreement with the officials of the Panama Canal. When our soldiers on the zone become ill or go insane they are placed in the hospitals of the Canal Zone. There care is given them by the doctors and the nurses of the Canal Zone, and finally the Canal Zone officials present a bill to the Government for that care and attention of the insane and sick on the Canal Zone who are connected with the Army, and the bills are paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. McKEOWN. May I ask the gentleman what provision is made for the care of insane soldiers in continental United States?

Mr. KAHN. Our soldiers are generally brought here to St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington and cared for there, the Federal Government, of course, paying for their care and maintenance.

Mr. McKEOWN. I call the attention of the gentleman and to his committee to a circumstance as to which I take it the jurisdiction would be with the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. I have learned that there are over 100 insane soldiers in St. Elizabeths Hospital for whom guardians have been appointed in Washington, and charges are being made for collecting their allowances from the War Risk Insurance Bureau. It occurs to me that these unfortunates ought not to be required to pay the expenses of these guardianships, which the Government has left entirely under the control of the courts.

Mr. KAHN. I understand that what the gentleman says in connection with the appointment of guardians is true, but I do not know that the fees exacted by the guardians for that purpose amount to any considerable sum. The insane person, of course, is not able to conduct his own affairs.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand that.

Mr. KAHN. And I imagine that it is necessary to appoint a guardian.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; but the Government of the United States owes it to these soldiers to see that no unusual charges are made, and it occurred to me that the United States could appoint its own officer to distribute these funds without any cost to the soldiers.

Mr. KAHN. That may be true, and it is a valuable suggestion. I have in mind a case with which I was very familiar some years ago. An enlisted man of the Navy had been placed in St. Elizabeths, and a guardian was appointed here in Washington; that man's pay was saved and cared for by the guardian; and finally the insane man expressed a desire to go back home to California, and through the good offices of the officials of the Government he was sent home. There was practically little taken from his funds for the guardianship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Are any other insane cared for in St. Elizabeths except from the Army or Navy, or is it a general hospital for the insane?

Mr. KAHN. All the insane from the city of Washington are also cared for there, but those who go insane while serving in the Army or Navy are taken to St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman know whether they are kept separate or whether they are mixed with other patients?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think they are kept separate. Of course, many of them are simply kept under observation. I presume that a great many cases have arisen in the war through shell shock, and, so far as I have been able to learn, those men are being well cared for.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to make a statement along that particular line.

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I have been informed, and I believe reliably informed, that sometimes exceedingly mild cases are confined in wards with very desperate cases, and their mental condition has been very distressing on account of that fact. I have been instrumental in rescuing one or two of the boys from that institution who were being held there. I took them in my automobile and drove them around the grounds and talked with them and studied them from every possible viewpoint and found them wholly competent and capable, and in taking the matter up with the proper officers there they assured me that they were just about ready to let one patient go when certain papers were fixed up, and this, that, and the other, although there had been no indication that that boy was going to be released at any early date, and I found everything to satisfy my mind that the boy had been in the condition in which I found him, a competent condition, for weeks before the time that I made the personal investigation.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I move to strike out the last two words. I do this for the purpose of making a statement. I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. KAHN] to the fact that when this St. Elizabeths Asylum was originally established it was established solely for the insane of the Army and Navy.

Mr. KAHN. That is true.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But as time has rolled along its jurisdiction has been enlarged, until now it takes in not only the insane of the Army and Navy but the indigent insane of the District of Columbia and also criminal insane from all over the country. I do not know just what the conditions now are, but there have been cases where these insane soldiers and sailors have been confined along with the criminal insane; and I wanted to suggest to the gentleman that if his committee would investigate the matter he might find it to the better interest of the insane of the Army and Navy to eliminate these other classes of patients and leave that hospital entirely for the insane of the Army and Navy.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think the Committee on Military Affairs has any jurisdiction over that institution. I know they do not appropriate for it. It is under the jurisdiction, I think, of the Interior Department.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What committee has been reporting legislation covering that institution?

Mr. KAHN. I presume the appropriations are carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not investigated to see what committee reported legislation to the House.

Mr. KAHN. I think the District Committee legislates for the institution directly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to was that we ought to have somewhere a hospital for the treatment of the insane of the Army and Navy separate and apart from all other insane.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The appropriation for the maintenance of the St. Elizabeths Hospital is carried in the District bill.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words for the purpose of laying a little more information about the St. Elizabeths Hospital, the Government hospital in this city, before the committee, hoping that it will reach a point where it will do some good. A service man who was confined there for a considerable period of time stated to me with tears in his eyes, after he had been out of the institution several weeks or months, the following facts: He is an expert accountant and a well-educated man, and was perfectly sane at the time. He told me that he could not think of the treatment that was given to the poor insane soldiers over there without weeping; that he had repeatedly seen an attendant when he would come to help a patient to bed or to feed him, or something of that kind, a man whose mind was so blank that he did not know that he had hands or feet, the attendant would tell him to sit down, and if he did not sit down he knocked him down. He said he had seen that sort of brutal treatment meted out to these boys for many weeks and months, and that it had aggravated his own condition. But he was pleading that some one would look into that matter and see that that brutality was stopped for the sake of those still in the institution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes. Attacks from time to time have been made against St. Elizabeths Hospital. It would be impossible for a great hospital like that, I suppose, to be conducted without some infraction of the rules and everything be in apple-pie order. It is so easy to say that a man who is insane is mistreated.

I think it is due to the St. Elizabeths Hospital and to the man at the head of it to say that my information is, after considerable inquiry, that the man at the head of it has no superior as an insane expert in the United States. I am well acquainted with him, have met him time and again when investigating appropriations to care for the maintenance and support of that hospital, and so far as I know and believe, he is as kind a man in the service as any of my acquaintance, and I believe of any engaged in similar duties throughout the United States.

In a large institution of that kind so many things happen; somebody gets up and reads a letter; somebody gets up and takes the say-so of somebody else. If there are abuses of the kind that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] speaks of, there should be a committee of investigation. There have been two or three committees of investigation in former years, and, while I have no brief to defend Dr. White, I think I am justified in saying, from the inquiries I have made and the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, that I believe he is a perfectly competent man, and as kindly a man as you will find anywhere in the hospital service in the United States.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. That is the opinion that I have gleaned from my casual investigations.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say that, as far as my remarks are concerned, I was making no attack on anybody. I was calling attention to the conditions that exist there. I say that the three classes ought not to be in the same institution.

Mr. CANNON. I quite agree with the gentleman that we are short of hospitals to care for these people. St. Elizabeths will not hold one-half part of the soldiers who are insane and are detained in hospitals. In many instances some can not get into hospitals at all, as I am reliably informed, but are cared for as best they can be by friends.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I was making no attack on the superintendent of the hospital of St. Elizabeths. I am not acquainted with him. He may be the best-equipped man along that line that it is possible to find, but I do believe that there are conditions over there that ought to be changed. I believe that there are men over there who are in such condition that they are not able to take care of themselves, and that their condition ought to be investigated and something done in their behalf. I am fully persuaded that there have been great unkindnesses there to men in that condition, to put it as mild as possible.

Mr. CANNON. The expense is negligible so far as St. Elizabeths is concerned. There are multiplied thousands of soldiers under the Public Health Service. Hospitals are being constructed, hospitals are already in existence at cantonments that I believe ought to be utilized, and I think attention is being paid to the matter.

Mr. KAHN. New hospitals are being leased for these unfortunate men.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph in order to say something in connection with this matter. I think it is only fair to men in charge of the hospitals for insane for us in speaking of this subject to take into consideration the fact that the line of demarcation between intelligence, the normal condition, and the insane is sometimes so small that even the experts have difficulty in determining the true state.

When a man is sent to an insane asylum with a diseased mind, his condition may be caused by a great many different things. It may be from undernourishment, or from shock, or from disease in the blood; it may be from trouble brought on by overwork or overstrain; it may be one of many things. In many instances insanity is followed by hallucinations and in others by delusions. Where paranoia develops there is always an effort on the part of the insane person to ascribe his unhappiness or his discomfort to some outside cause other than the ailment from which he is suffering. Every paranoiac in the world imagines that he is sane. Every one of them is able in the first stages of the disease to simulate sanity, except when he is questioned upon the particular subject concerning which he has delusions. A man is frequently diagnosed as a paranoiac who has not paranoia. It is a medical fact that no person who ever had paranoia ever got well, and when a person is sent to an insane asylum and the diagnosis is paranoia, the people in charge of the insane asylum, as long as they believe that he has paranoia, will never release him, regardless of how much he looks like an intelligent, normal man, nor how much it appears he has recovered, because any apparent recovery in paranoiac cases is necessarily temporary, and as soon as the patient is released and is permitted to go into society he will certainly develop his mania and will again become a dangerous element in the community in which he resides. A notable case of that was the well-known case of Harry Thaw. When he was in the insane asylum in New York dozens of experts examined him, and some said that he was perfectly normal.

When he made his escape, he was tried in the courts and he was judged to be sane, and yet as soon as he was given the opportunity to associate with people in private life, where he had the liberty of doing as he pleased, to follow out his natural bent, he developed the same trouble that he had at the time that he committed the murder, and again he became a menace to society. Never again will it ever be that any doctor will be fooled by his apparent recovery, because all physicians and all experts know that he will never recover. If a diagnosis of paranoia is made in a patient sometimes erroneously, and that patient does get well, it is a very foolish doctor who would give that man his liberty until he has made absolutely sure that the patient did not have paranoia, and that the diagnosis in the first instance was wrong; because if they released him, and he did have paranoia, they would be to blame when he goes back into society and again becomes dangerous.

Therefore, in examining these cases to determine whether or not they have held a man in a hospital for the insane longer than he should have been kept, we should carry in our minds the knowledge that it would be perilous to release a man who had apparently recovered and yet who had not recovered. Therefore, the doubt in all these cases should be resolved in favor of the medical officer in charge of the hospital; and I think if you will examine into these cases concerning which we have all had letters at one time or another, you will find that in each of these cases some such situation as I have described has arisen. When a man is insane, his natural inclination is to find some cause outside of his disease for his discomfort, and in his mind he will build up a case in which he honestly and sincerely believes, but the case is based absolutely upon a state of facts that are the creation of his own mind.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I was speaking of a case that the hospital had discharged as cured, and consequently he could not have had paranoia.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Care of insane soldiers of Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry: For care, maintenance, and treatment at asylums in Porto Rico of insane soldiers of the Porto Regiment of Infantry, $100.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 40 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I believe will be in order. I hope this committee will treat me as fairly as others have been treated and give me this opportunity.

Mr. CANNON. Is that for the third of a million appropriation?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I thought the House would treat me as fairly as it did others, and give me an opportunity to present my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. If I had understood it, the others would not have gone in.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer equipment of troops: For pontoon material, tools, instruments, supplies, and appliances required for use in the engineer equipment of troops, for military surveys, and for engineer operations in the field, including the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of the necessary motor cycles; the purchase and preparation of engineer manuals and procurement of special paper for same, and for a reserve supply of above equipment, $150,000: Provided, That the services of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed only in the office of the Chief of Engineers to carry into effect the various appropriations for "Engineer equipment of troops," "Engineer operations in the field," and other military appropriations, to be paid from such appropriations: Provided further, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year 1921 shall not exceed $100,000. The Secretary of War shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons who are employed, their duties, and amount paid to each.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the portion of this paragraph beginning with the word "Provided," in line 25, page 49, and ending with the conclusion of the paragraph in line 11, on page 50.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and it is providing for an appropriation to pay expenses of skilled draftsmen and civil engineers and other services in the office of the Chief of Engineers, which is for the defraying of clerical expenses in the District of Columbia, the office of the Chief of Engineers being in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with what those civilian employees do. I know the item has been carried in the appropriation bill for many years, and it is not a new provision by any means. I presume that these employees are draftsmen who have special and important work to do in connection with engineering problems.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and the legislative appropriation committee gave them a great amount of money for this same service. There is no question but that the point of order is well taken, because it is for clerical services.

Mr. KAHN. No; it is for services of skilled draftsmen.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In the office of the Chief of Engineers in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KAHN. The services, as I understand it, that these skilled draftsmen perform are practically military duties, duties that probably would have to be done by officers of the Army if these civilians were dispensed with.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If that is the case, we will have something for those officers to do.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman seems to have taken a great dislike to Army officers.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; but I have taken a great dislike to a superabundance of Army officers here in Washington, where they are not needed.

Mr. KAHN. I contend that the Army officers that we have to-day are performing an exceedingly useful duty to the country. Although the law authorizes 18,000, we have 16,500, and of those many are in the hospitals, wounded and disfigured. The other officers that we have, I take it, are well and constantly occupied in serving the Government of the United States.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And we have 2,000 of them in the city of Washington.

Mr. KAHN. I presume they are needed here or they would not be here.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The evidence of gentlemen who claim to know is that there is no necessity for more than 200 here.

Mr. KAHN. And that sort of statement is usual in the Army, I suppose, as in the Navy and other public services. But, after all, let us be fair about the thing. If we have too many, let the attention of the War Department be called to that fact, so that the number can be reduced; but to take the statement of every disgruntled officer, I submit to my friend from Indiana, is entirely unfair.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If I did not know whereof I speak, I would not make the accusation. I know it is a fact that there are hundreds and hundreds of these officers who do not go to their office three times a week. I know that last week a stenographer in one of these offices came to see if she could be transferred to some place where she would have something to do; that she did not write on an average of more than three letters a week, had not seen the officer at her office but once or twice in that time, and in addition they had a clerk helping around doing nothing. That is typical of what is going on.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I unfortunately did not come in when the point of order was made. To which branch does the gentleman refer?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That case came under the Ordnance Department.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not mean in this particular instance, but where——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The point of order I raised is against the provision on page 49, the last line, in reference to the employment of civil engineers——

Mr. KAHN. Skilled draftsmen.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, it is skilled draftsmen and civil engineers in the office of the Chief of Engineers, District of Columbia, which is clearly beyond the jurisdiction of this committee. It is within the jurisdiction of the legislative committee making appropriations for all services of this character in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say further about these officers that we have been speaking about that a good many of them attend the General Staff School in the District of Columbia. They receive instruction in Army work during certain hours of the day. When they finish that work they are at liberty for the rest of the day. It is possible that some men that the gentleman has referred to are connected with those schools right here in the District of Columbia, and I take it that if there are cases where a man is superfluous, the War Department's attention ought to be called to the fact, in order that the man may be relieved of his commission.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the point of order. I do not think the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana will lie against the service of these skilled draftsmen and civil engineers. I admit if the point of order were made against the provision for clerical help for administration in the War Department here in Washington it might lie, but they are absolutely military duties and do not solely pertain to the District of Columbia, but apply to the activities of the Army as a whole, and so I think they are properly provided for in this appropriation bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in answer to the gentleman that all of the civil service of every one of these departments except the Agricultural Department is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and the work, whether clerical or professional, or what not, that is done in the office of the chiefs of these bureaus within the District of Columbia is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and can by no stretch of imagination be brought within the jurisdiction of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is not within the province of the Chair to determine as to the rightfulness of the employment of these men or anything in regard to their pay or anything in regard to whether they earn their money. Those questions are entirely outside the consideration and the passing upon the point of order. Neither is it proper for the Chair to consider as to whether or not the rules governing these appropriations are wise or unwise. They exist, and the Chair is compelled to follow them. The Chair thinks it is very clear, at least it seems so to the Chair, that the employment of all of these officials in the District of Columbia is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and that being the case, it will be the duty of the Chair to support the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just to make a very brief statement. This language, I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana, has been carried in the Army appropriation bill since 1899 and no objection was ever made to it heretofore.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to say, in opposition to the amendment, that it is unfortunate it should not have been made heretofore, not because I care to be captious but you will find under this same item in the legislative bill an appropriation for this service. It results in duplication of appropriations, and if there were a little bit more attention paid to the duplication and overlapping of these bureaus it would result in a saving of a great deal of money to the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVILIAN ASSISTANTS TO ENGINEER OFFICERS.

For services of surveyors, survey parties, draftsmen, photographers, master laborers, and clerks to engineer officers on the staffs of division, corps, and department commanders, $40,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which I intend to address myself does not, strictly speaking, come under this paragraph. It is involved in the whole bill, but I hope that what I have to say will not be objected to on account of the place where I am making the remarks. At the time when our troops were sent into Russia I characterized that proceeding as an act of folly. I said that they eventually would be withdrawn, without accomplishing anything except to entail upon this country a large amount of utterly unnecessary expense and bring to an untimely death some of our brave boys. I believe that everybody will now admit I was correct. We have at this time a large number of our troops in Germany, at an expense, as I understood the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill to say, of something like a million and a quarter a day.

Mr. KAHN. No. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield.

Mr. KAHN. The Secretary of War informed me subsequently that that was the expense immediately after we went in, when, of course, we had three or four divisions there, but since the troops in large number have been withdrawn the daily expense, I find, is about $175,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, even that is a large sum.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield, with pleasure.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa, if he does not know, that under the terms of the armistice Germany pays the entire expense for the army now occupying that territory.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I take it that everybody knows that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think it is pertinent. I beg the gentleman's pardon for suggesting that, but I think it pertinent to his remarks here complaining about the expense of the Army in occupied territory.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Everybody knows that Germany agreed to pay, and everyone ought to know that she is not keeping her agreement.

Mr. KAHN. We are paying the expense at the present time.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will suggest to the gentleman from Iowa further, that he will recall, when he was in Coblenz last March or April, the Army officers stated at that time that at the end of each month Germany was making settlements. The United States advanced the money, and Germany at the end of each month was making settlement for the expense of the Army. I do not know what the facts are now, but at that time the Army officers stated, to me at least, that that was the fact.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They did make the statement in the gentleman's presence and in mine, but in not quite that way. They stated that Germany was making payments, and I think they said something about the amount that had been paid, but I have forgotten it now.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield? Germany at that time was making some payments on account, but subsequently she made no further payments.

Mr. CANNON. Was she paying in marks at par?

Mr. KAHN. She was paying in marks, but they were taken, I presume, at the rate of exchange which prevailed at that time.

Mr. CANNON. That left no pay, practically.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; we had $2,000,000 that was put into our Treasury on account of it—$2,000,000 of our money.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Do I understand that under the terms of the armistice Germany will pay for the cost of maintaining the Army in Russia, to which the gentleman from Iowa is addressing himself?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; my remarks will take a much wider scope than that. I was speaking last of our Army in Germany, the expense of which Germany agreed to pay.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The expense incident to the Russian campaign is to-day paid wholly out of the Treasury of the United States, I understand?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. It has been paid wholly out of the Treasury of the United States. Nobody knows how much it costs, except we know it ran way up into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Do you know how much greater the expense is of keeping the troops over there than the expense of keeping the same troops in this country would be?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean in Germany or in Russia?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. In Germany. If the troops were returned to this country they would still be a part of the Army.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My understanding is, in a general way——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My understanding, in a general way, is that it costs about twice as much. Probably the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] can speak more accurately than I can.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, every soldier abroad gets 20 per cent increase in his pay for foreign service; and, while these men are a part of the Army of the United States, the great expense is in keeping eight transports going between American ports and European ports so as to carry supplies to these men over on the other side; and the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs is that the cost of those transports is from $1,200 to $1,700 a day.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. What would be the difference in cost? Would it be twice as much over there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would be more than twice as much, counting in that.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will; but I am yet getting down to the real matter to which I want to call attention.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman favor bringing the troops back immediately from Germany?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. You expect by that means to be able to collect the amount that you say Germany agreed to pay?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I expect that the amount which Germany has agreed to pay will never be paid, and I do not think any gentleman who has studied the situation expects we will get any substantial sum more out of Germany.

Mr. KAHN. I so stated on the floor day before yesterday, and I am quite in accord with the gentleman's views.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But the matter on which I particularly wanted to address the committee is one of far greater importance than the loss of half a billion dollars which will eventually be the result of keeping our troops in Russia and in Germany.

Several members of the Military Committee stated the other day that, in their judgment, it would not be constitutional to insert a provision in this bill to the effect that no part of the appropriation contained therein should be paid for troops on foreign service, specifying the service; or, in other words, to provide that no money should be paid out for troops kept in some country where they were stationed against the will and purpose of Congress. I would favor a provision that no part of the money appropriated by this bill should be spent to maintain troops in Europe, but the mere fact that the bill contains no such provision is not so important as the establishment of the principle that it is unconstitutional for Congress to attempt to control the disposition of our Army by refusing appropriations when it is used by the President in a manner which Congress does not approve. If it is conceded that such a provision would not be constitutional, then the President can send our Army wherever he pleases, keep it there as long as he pleases, involve us in unnecessary and improper wars, and exercise a power that never before was given to any but the most arbitrary monarchs that ever ruled any portion of the earth, and Congress can do nothing about it. The King of England has no such power. He has always been subject to the will of Parliament in refusing to give appropriations to carry or to keep troops in portions of the globe not approved by Parliament. Strictly speaking, even the Kaiser could not do that. As a matter of fact, however, he did it, and his grandfather before him, under the advice of Bismarck, proceeded for several years without any appropriation for the army, but afterwards got a bill through the Reichstag sanctioning the proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not believe that the construction placed upon the constitutional powers of the President by the Military Committee is correct. The President, of course, under the Constitution is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but I think the term "Commander in Chief" as used in the Constitution has the same meaning it has in military affairs. In other words, it means the immediate commander of the forces, who is superior to all other generals, and, in the absence of direction by the civil power, can order the troops wherever he sees fit and just as he sees fit.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will kindly remember that I have only two minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Could you divide that authority?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; very easily. The Commander in Chief is subject to the civil power. If not, what sort of a Government do we have if the Commander in Chief of our Army is entirely independent of our civil power? It means that the military power is superior to the civil power, and that never exists in anything but an autocratic and tyrannical government. Subject to the direction of the civil power, the Commander in Chief has, as I was about to say, the power to order the troops where, when, and how he may see fit. But beyond that, in my judgment, the Constitution did not intend to give him any power.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not a declaration of war automatically under our Constitution vest the supreme power in our President to direct the troops and conduct war, and it is not in the power of Congress to recall it until a treaty has been negotiated?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. The gentleman is not exactly correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Iowa be granted two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Answering my friend from Oklahoma, the breaking out of war gives to the President no more powers than he had before. He is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy then, as he is now in time of peace.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am very much interested in the gentleman's discussion, but perhaps unfortunately for the logic of it—although that may very easily be explained—is the fact that the President is not only the Commander in Chief of the Army, but he is the Chief Executive at the same time of the civil power. Now, then, I would be very much interested, indeed, to find out how, save through the passing of a law by a two-thirds majority in both Houses, or by impeachment, you could reach effectively the control by the President of what you are pleased to call the civil power.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That applies to all laws that we pass. We may restrict neither the President nor anyone else without the approval of the President, unless we have a two-thirds majority; so that, of course, the President, through the exercise of his veto, can and may prevent a restriction of his own powers. But that has nothing to do with the question I am discussing. I claim that Congress has the right to provide by law that appropriations made for the Army shall not be used to keep troops in any specified country or to make war upon any specified nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have one minute more. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think this is a very important question. But let me ask: Does the Committee on Military Affairs contend that the House of Representatives, where all appropriations must originate, or where it could refuse to make any appropriations at all, has no authority to place restrictions on this appropriation bill, providing in effect that none of the money appropriated in this bill shall be used to support troops on foreign soil? Now, if it takes that sort of a position, while I am not on the Committee on Military Affairs and while I have not looked up the constitutional provision in the last few days, I am clearly of opinion that this Congress has that right, because it can refuse to appropriate any money at all if it wants to, and why, then, can it not put such a restriction on this bill? I would like to have the gentleman answer that question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think I have answered it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. KAHN. Let us read one paragraph.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the very remarkable and interesting remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], who has just concluded—and I hope he will not go away—illustrate the length to which gentlemen will permit their feelings and their passions to carry them, even to the extent of affecting their views of government and the basic principles upon which this Republic is founded.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have made the remarkable discovery here that feeling and passion and politics are all on this side. There is never any on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes; there is. There are passion and politics enough on this side, so far as the gentleman from Texas is concerned, to impel him always when he feels that an unjust and unfair attack is made, even by the gentleman from Iowa, to rise in his place here and express his repudiation and denunciation of that action. I did not intend, however, to show any feeling on this occasion, but I wanted to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that when he complains of the power of the President under the Constitution as Commander in Chief of the Army and compares it unfavorably with the system of Great Britain and with the system of the Kaiser his quarrel is not with the person who occupies the White House, but his complaint is really against the Constitution itself. The authority of the President and of Congress is founded upon the Constitution, and if that distribution of power does not comport with the gentleman's views it can not be the fault of men now in office. The gentleman from Iowa in effect expresses on the floor of this House his preference for the British constitution, which denies to the King the power which he says ought not to be vested in the President.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. The gentleman from Iowa in effect expresses on the floor of this House his preference for the system of the Kaiser when he says that even the Kaiser did not have the power which the President has under the Constitution. I want to accord to the gentleman credit by saying that I do not believe that he really intended to express his preference for the Kaiser's system; but the irresistible conclusion from what he said is that in that respect at least he prefers the German system.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Iowa

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman would be much more fair and do me much more credit if he would quote my remarks as they were. I stated that that was not a correct construction of our Constitution, and that I do not believe that the President has any such power.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then the gentleman's quarrel is with the Committee on Military Affairs. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that anyone who reads the Constitution, it seems, would agree with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] when he announces the proposition that Congress may refuse any appropriations to the Army if it sees fit. It may limit those appropriations by placing in the bill a provision that no part of the moneys carried should be used to pay troops in Europe or in Russia or at any other point on the face of the globe. That seems clear, in view of the precedents. While I have not carefully examined them all, it seems sound, and if that is what the gentleman from Iowa meant, I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, it has been customary for the Presidents of the United States, regardless of their party allegiance or their party politics, to send American troops where American interests were threatened; and so President McKinley, in his day, sent the forces of the United States into China during the Boxer revolution to protect American lives, and no question was raised.

Mr. CONNALLY. And without a declaration of war.

Mr. KAHN. Without a declaration of war.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the gentleman from California for his suggestion. I pay him the honor of saying that on this and many other occasions he has exemplified a breadth of view and a breadth of thought that is commendable to him. The bulk of authority on constitutional power and limitations is favorable to the view that as Commander in Chief of the Army President McKinley had authority to take action in the case of the Boxer uprising.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow a single suggestion?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. It is true, is it not, that President Polk ordered the Army across the Rio Grande?

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand the history of that time to be that President Polk did that on the theory that United States territory had been invaded by Mexican troops, and that he took action to repel invasion; and in the exercise of his constitutional power to repel invasion that he had employed the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. I am not criticizing President Polk. The present President sent the Navy to Vera Cruz, sent the Army down onto the border, and ordered it into Mexico. I am not saying that he did wrong.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand the point made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield a little further, in order to get this matter straight?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understood it was the position of the Committee on Military Affairs that a provision to the effect that none of the money carried in this bill should be appropriated for troops on foreign soil could not be enforced, or that it was at least of doubtful constitutionality, and I understood that some of the Members thought it would be absolutely unconstitutional.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that from the nods of gentlemen on the Military Affairs Committee, of which I am not a member, I assume that his statement as to their position is correct.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DENT. I would like to state that I do not know of any action whatsoever having been taken by the Committee on Military Affairs to that effect, and I do not think they ought to be quoted as a committee. Individual expressions of members of the committee may have been to that effect.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The only time the Military Affairs Committee had this question up for consideration was in connection with the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] to bring the troops out of Siberia. At that time the committee went into the question, and the constitutional precedents were placed before the committee and are in the hearings, and the committee took no action on the resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Perhaps the distinction in that case was this: Congress has no power to direct the President to take affirmative action as Commander in Chief. Congress would have no power in an appropriation bill or elsewhere to say that the President should withdraw the troops from Russia. The only power that Congress has is through control of the purse—that is, to deny appropriations. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama and to the gentleman from Iowa that perhaps the gentleman from Iowa arrived at the conclusion that the view of the Military Affairs Committee was that as a matter of policy it was unwise to tie these limitations and restrictions to the Army appropriation bill, when, as a matter of fact, the war is not yet over and your peace resolution has not become law, and when, according to the law of nations, to-morrow or next day or next week hostilities might possibly be renewed between the United States and Germany; and the Military Affairs Committee did not want to be put in the foolish, unwise, and unpatriotic attitude of tying a string to this appropriation, which would make it impossible for the President properly to employ the Army and the Navy in defending our interests on foreign soil. I suggest that to the gentlemen. I do not know that that was the motive that prompted the Military Committee, but I would suggest that it would have been a very wise one if the committee did base its conclusion on that view.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I heard the remarks that were made in the general debate on this bill, and I take it that possibly my friend from Texas did not.

Mr. CONNALLY. I heard some of them. I do not recall all of them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to put the matter just as I have stated it. If I have stated it incorrectly, I will be glad to yield to them.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that as one member of the Committee on Military Affairs I would be opposed to putting the committee in an embarrassing position, and in my humble judgment any such limitation as has been suggested on this appropriation bill would be absolutely void.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that I thoroughly and heartily agree with the suggestion of his view in so far as it expresses a policy as to the matter, and I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that I am sure he does not really want to put such a limitation upon this appropriation bill, in view of the fact that our Army is occupying German soil under the terms embodied in the armistice which is still in force and which is recognized by section 5 of the resolution which you passed here the other day. You are claiming benefits under that armistice, and I want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that whatever other considerations may be suggested, he would not want to place his country in the position of withdrawing our troops from that zone without some agreement or some settlement with the Allies as to the occupation. And I want to say to the gentleman furthermore that when he and I were in Coblenz last year there were 240,000 American soldiers occupying that territory, and that was what the gentleman from California had in mind when he first presented the large amount of expenditure in the occupied zone. To-day there are something like 18,000 soldiers only, as I understand it, occupying that territory.

Mr. KAHN. There are 17,455, to be exact.

Mr. CONNALLY. There are that many in the occupied territory. Now, the gentleman from Iowa certainly would not want to come in here and try by legislative action to direct the military affairs of this Government. When the thirteen Colonies were conducting the War of the Revolution they undertook for a while to direct military operations through the Continental Congress, but they had at last to come to the point where they gave Gen. Washington practically supreme power. And the same was true in the case of President Lincoln. In prosecuting the Civil War as long as the Secretary of War undertook to direct military operations in the field your armies were scattered and overwhelmed by the Confederates. At last he came to the conclusion that a civilian was not fit to direct military operations, and he gave Gen. Grant supreme authority in the field and limitless resources and men, and then victory perched upon the banner of the Union.

I want to suggest in reference to putting soldiers in occupied territory and sending soldiers to Russia, that though now it may be questioned by the Members of the House as to the wisdom of that action, that action was taken at a moment when we, alongside the Allies, were faced with a triumphant and unwhipped Germany. The action of sending soldiers to Siberia was the result of a general agreement with the Allies. The United States was but carrying out its part of another agreement when we sent troops into the occupied territory of Germany. We did not go in alone, but under an agreement and with a common purpose and with a common desire that we should put our armies along the Rhine River and hold the enemy at bay until a treaty could be signed. Had we not sent our soldiers there, had we not taken part in that enterprise, we would have been recreant to our duty, and America would have imperiled absolutely the great purpose for which we were engaged in the war. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

ORDNANCE SERVICE.

For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, typewriters, and adding machines, including their exchange, and office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; for incidental expenses of the Ordnance Service, and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores; for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office; subscriptions to periodicals, which may be paid for in advance; and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance; and for maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, $4,000,000: Provided, That all material purchased under the appropriations in this act for the Ordnance Department of the United States Army shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment that is similar to the one I offered the other day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, line 17, after the figures "$4,000,000," insert: "Provided, That no money appropriated herein shall be expended for the maintenance, repair, or operation of any motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle employed wholly or in part for personal, social, or other similar use, or for any use except for military official business."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on line 17, page 52, after the word "provided," insert the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, line 17, after the word "provided," insert the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE STORES, AMMUNITION.

For the development, manufacture, purchase, and maintenance of airplane bombs; of ammunition for small arms and for hand use for reserve supply; of ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and of ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' State homes, $1,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has not the time come when we can do away with the old military custom and incident expense of firing a cannon every morning and every evening at the various military posts of our Nation? We are not keeping up with the old militaristic spirit that actuated our forefathers years ago. Why can not we substitute something that will cost nothing and will remind the boys of peace in this country? There is good reason for the ceremony of raising and lowering the flag, but there is no necessity whatever for this expense of accompanying it with the firing of a cannon.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, of course it is the hope of the Committee on Military Affairs that when the reorganization bill shall have been passed the wording of the military appropriation bill will be changed. All these matters will be taken up with the idea of presenting a bill that will be entirely modern and up to date.

In regard to firing the sunset and morning gun, there are many citizens who set their timepieces by that gun just as the merchant in the great cities in this country looks for the falling of the time ball at noon on the merchants' exchange building, or some other building of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Surely the gentleman does not mean that the people in the United States need the firing of a cannon morning and night by which to set their clocks and watches to carry on business. I know it has been going on since 1869, but the time is now ripe to stop it.

Mr. KAHN. Sometimes it takes a cannon to wake people up.

Mr. BLANTON. And it sometimes takes one to put them to sleep. We ought to wake up and take this obsolete feature out of our appropriation bill and do away with these war-time matters that have been so long a burden on the people. We are appropriating a million dollars in this item.

Mr. KAHN. But a very small part of this item is to go for the firing of the morning and sunset gun.

Mr. BLANTON. When is the gentleman going to give us the modern bill of which he speaks?

Mr. KAHN. I hope to get the Army reorganization bill through this House in a comparatively brief time.

Mr. BLANTON. After the convention?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no, no. That is a matter that we propose to try and get through this House before this House shall adjourn at this session.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to stop these morning and evening salutes. They cost lots of money and are an additional tax burden on the people. Let the flag be raised and lowered without firing cannons.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to carry on the controversy about firing the morning and evening gun, but I would like to make this suggestion: Almost ever since this Government was established it has been the custom in the Army circles at the raising of the flag, the raising of the Stars and Stripes, in the morning to fire a morning gun. Ever since, almost, the Government was established it has been the custom when the flag was lowered in the evening to fire an evening gun. It is a custom, and it is sanctified and glorified by the blood and heroism of the men who have helped to make this country great. Of this item carrying $1,000,000 probably an infinitesimal part of it is spent in the carrying out of this custom, memorial in its character, patriotic in its purpose, inspiring in its effect, and conducive to the love of country and the respect for the flag. [Applause.]

That is carried in the thought that as the sun rises in the morning and Old Glory floats to the breeze, the symbol of a brave and patriotic and mighty people is announced by the firing of a gun. Then as the evening shadows fall and night comes and slumber is about to envelop the people of this great Nation Old Glory is lowered from its station, where it has floated in the breeze, and the inspiring and beloved symbol of a great people lowered for that slumber by the firing of a gun. Let me say to my good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that whatever this Army bill may do I hope the time will never come when we will cease in Army posts, amid the soldiers of the Republic who guard the rights of the Government and of the great people who stand in the front of its dangerous enemy, to continue to pay this respect to Old Glory in the morning and to Old Glory in the evening. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Old Glory is raised over this Capitol every morning without the firing of a gun, and is lowered every evening without the firing of a gun, and here in Washington my distinguished colleague has no cannon to wake him in the morning at Congress Hall. Why does he need one in San Antonio to wake him up?

Mr. BEE. Oh, I never participated in a discussion of clock or a discussion of San Antonio. I am talking about a great national question, and I want to say to my colleague from Texas that as a rule the flag is raised over the Capitol in the morning and lowered in the evening as they raise it over every schoolhouse in this land, and I hope the Army of the United States, the symbol of the defense and the strength of the people, will continue by the firing of a gun to pay its respect to that flag.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

MANUFACTURE OF ARMS.

For manufacturing, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $700,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Just what kind of arms are now being manufactured at the arsenals?

Mr. KAHN. I am informed that a small number of rifles are being manufactured at the various arsenals for the purpose of keeping intact the working organizations.

Mr. TILSON. They are only skeleton organizations that they are keeping going there?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I understand, of course, that it is necessary to produce a number of spare parts to keep the rifles now in use in good condition.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Especially those that went through the recent war.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I suppose that they will need the replacing of a number of parts.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman knows that it is the intention to go ahead and increase our stock of Springfield rifles as time goes on. This will serve two purposes, namely, to keep the organizations in shape to manufacture them and at the same time to gradually increase our stock of Springfield rifles.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the only rifle that is being manufactured in the small-arms manufacturing arsenals is the Springfield; but the country has in its possession millions of rifles that were manufactured during the war for the use of our soldiers.

Mr. TILSON. About two and a half millions of those will be put away as a reserve for future emergencies.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I have wondered if we were developing any new arms or whether this expenditure is simply to continue the manufacture of additional arms of types that we now have.

Mr. KAHN. That is the only purpose of this appropriation.

Mr. TILSON. With respect to the item before this, concerning which there was so much discussion in regard to the small items, blank cartridges for firing the morning and evening guns and salutes over the graves of dead soldiers, what kind of ammunition is it intended to manufacture with the remainder of the million dollars?

Mr. KAHN. Of course, it is intended to use that for the manufacture of ammunition for the Springfield rifles.

Mr. TILSON. Was there not a pretty large reserve supply of service ammunition left over after the war?

Mr. KAHN. There is a great deal of that ammunition left over, but we were told that experiments were being made in connection with aeroplane defense, and that new sizes were being developed in connection with the tanks, and experiments of that kind.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know whether the Ordnance Department is going forward with the .50-caliber gun we heard so much talk about being developed just about the end of the war?

Mr. KAHN. I understand that that gun is still being experimented with by the officers of the Ordnance Department.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, as I entered the Chamber I heard the beautiful tribute that was paid to the American flag by one distinguished Member from Texas [Mr. BEE], and then later on it was even more glorified by another Member of Congress from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. Both gentlemen talked about how Old Glory was unfurled in the morning and taken down in the evening from over the Capitol. As a matter of fact, I will state to these two enthusiasts from Texas, whose love for the flag is so great and whose historical knowledge of a certain fact is so deficient, that the flag over the Capitol is never taken down; that there are four places that the flag floats on continuously and forever, namely, in front of the Capitol, in the rear of the Capitol, over the House Office Building, and over the Senate Office Building.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And they do not need any gun to keep them there.

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, no; only plenty of noise from Texas. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE STORES AND SUPPLIES.

For the manufacture, test, purchase, and maintenance of sighting devices for airplane bombs, of carrying and releasing devices for airplane bombs; for overhauling, cleaning, repairing, and preserving ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and at the arsenals, posts, and depots, $1,000,000.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 3, after the word "depots," change the comma to a semicolon and insert "for purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this does not add any amount to the appropriation carried in the bill, but the ordnance officers claim it is absolutely necessary in order that they may manufacture certain materials that are in constant use by the Regular Army and by the National Guard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUTOMATIC MACHINE RIFLES.

For the purchase, manufacture, test, repair, and maintenance of automatic machine rifles or other automatic or semiautomatic guns, including their mounts, sights, and equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, the funds appropriated to remain available until June 30, 1922, $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What is the idea of making this appropriation available for 1922?

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the gentleman knows that under the Constitution it is not possible to appropriate for the Army for more than one year unless Congress takes action. It is found that in manufacturing machine guns and tanks it is necessary to enter into contract with those who manufacture them, which contracts frequently extend over a year, and in order to make the money available for the payment of the bills under that contract this language is necessary. I want to say to the gentleman, further, that there are quite a number of items in the Ordnance appropriations in which that language is carried; it was found necessary because of the long time required to manufacture the ordnance articles.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, this would not prevent the manufacture of the articles if this money be not available until 1922.

Mr. KAHN. It would prevent the manufacture unless the manufacturer would wait for his money until 1922. In other words, we will be asked to make an appropriation in 1922 to pay the bills. But the purpose is to meet the situation by making it possible to pay the manufacturer his money as soon as he delivers his commodity to the War Department without having to come to Congress for a special appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I appreciate that that is very convenient for the manufacturer, but I do not quite see how it is going to hinder the War Department.

Mr. KAHN. We will not be able probably to enter into those contracts unless the manufacturer can be assured that he can get his money promptly.

Mr. WALSH. Well, if the manufacturer is in any doubt of Congress being here in 1922 to appropriate the money I have grave doubts whether he is the proper party with whom to make a contract.

Mr. KAHN. I want to suggest to my friend that it frequently happens that considerable sums are involved in these contracts. The manufacturer has not a ready supply of money, and in order to make immediate payments he has to go to some financial institution and make a loan and pay interest. Every time he has to do that the Government has to pay that interest. He makes an additional charge upon his commodity because he can not get prompt payment.

Mr. WALSH. Following out that argument, why did not the gentleman make all these appropriations that require manufacture by private concerns available the same length of time?

Mr. KAHN. Because there are no contracts just like these for manufacturing machine guns and tanks. The other concerns that furnish food and furnish clothing and other material for the Army can get their money generally just as soon as the goods are delivered, but this money is held in abeyance until the goods are delivered, and it takes over a year frequently to make deliveries to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point upon the language in lines 24 and 25, "the funds appropriated to remain available until June 30, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order against the language in lines 24 and 25—"the funds appropriated to remain available until June 30, 1922." The point of order is well taken, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TANKS.

For the purchase, manufacture, test, maintenance, and repair of tanks and other self-propelled armored vehicles, to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1922, $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order upon the language "to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the same reason for this provision applies as was given before with regard to the automatic machine guns. These necessary implements of warfare require a long time to manufacture, and therefore it was deemed advisable by the committee to make the funds for these implements available for two years.

Mr. WALSH. Well, now, does the gentleman know any case in his long experience upon this great committee where a contract was entered into by the officials of the War Department under an authorization in an appropriation bill which was not completed until the succeeding year where the contractor failed to get his money?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I know that we have had the matter up in discussion in the House on a number of occasions where the manufacturers had to wait a considerable time for their money. Of course, the tank is a new instrument of warfare. The ordnance officers who came before our committee explained that they were trying to simplify the manufacture, so that instead of being made up of a great many parts the tanks would be made up of just two parts, and in that way they could be turned out in great numbers in case we should again become involved in war. But the men who are manufacturing these implements of war are men of limited means, and it takes a long time to manufacture these implements. I submit that the provision that the money should remain available until 1922 would help the War Department, the Ordnance Department, and, I think, the men who are experimenting with these implements at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts raises the point of order to the language on page 55, "to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1922." The bill is an appropriation bill for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. Any provision extending beyond that period is legislative and subject to the exclusionary rule. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There was such a barrage and so much gas from Pennsylvania a moment ago that it obliterated the noise from Texas. I want to correct the gentleman's research in preparing for his flag speech. He got his data a little bit mixed up. If the gentleman had availed himself of the opportunity which was accorded every Member of Congress as well as the people of Washington to hear the splendid music which is rendered out here once a week by one of our marine bands, right here east of the Capitol during the summer months, he would have known that there is one flag upon this Capitol that at least one day in every week is lowered.

Because when that great Marine Band has played the Star Spangled Banner out here on the east side of this Capitol every Member of this Congress who has attended those exercises has seen that flag lowered during the playing of it at sunset.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. Why, now, the gentleman with his vociferousness only emphasizes his ignorance, because my assertion and statement here is well understood by every person of intelligence. I regret that the gentleman can not comprehend the statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield for that kind of a harangue. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, and fortunately, I have the privilege under the rules of the House of removing all this hot air and gas from my remarks, because I did not yield. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] upholds me in that position. There is one flag which, in looking up material for his flag speech, the gentleman overlooked, and that is the flag on the east end of this Capitol, that every time the Marine Band holds its concerts during the summer months here, has been lowered at sunset during the playing of the Star Spangled Banner, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania in that connection was incorrect. And I do not want to correct the speech that he made, his flag speech, but I do want to correct his remarks made here on the floor of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMS, UNIFORMS, EQUIPMENT, ETC., FOR FIELD SERVICE, NATIONAL GUARD.

To procure by purchase or manufacture and issue from time to time to the National Guard upon requisition of the governors of the several States and Territories, or the commanding general, National Guard of the District of Columbia, such number of United States service arms with all accessories, Field Artillery and Coast Artillery material, Engineer, Signal, and sanitary material, accouterments, field uniforms, clothing, equipage, publications, and military stores of all kinds, including public animals, and a reserve supply of such arms, material, accouterments, field uniforms, clothing, equipage, and military stores of all kinds, as are necessary to arm, uniform, and equip for field service the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, $8,000,000: Provided, That the Mexican border medal or ribbon issued to National Guard officers and enlisted men under the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, shall be issued to National Guard officers and enlisted men who at the same time served as such in the field under the call of the National Guard to such Mexican border service but were stationed for service at points other than on the Mexican border: Provided further, That such medals shall not be issued to men who have subsequent to such service been dishonorably discharged from the service or deserted: Provided further, That members of the National Guard who have or shall become entitled for a continuous period of less than one month to Federal pay at the rates fixed for the Regular Army, whether by virtue of a call by the President, of attendance at school or maneuver, or of any other cause, and whose accounts have not yet been settled, shall receive such pay for each day of such period; and the 31st day of a calendar month shall not be excluded from the computation: And provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue from surplus stores and matériel now on hand and purchased for the United States Army such articles of clothing and equipment and Field Artillery matériel and ammunition as may be needed by the National Guard organized under the provisions of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916. This issue shall be made without charge against militia appropriations.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont and Mr. DENT rose.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment. On page 57, line 16, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 57, line 16, strike out the word "or" at the end of the line and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me call the attention of the chairman of the committee that there should be a change in the spelling of the word "elisted," in line 17.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the change be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the spelling of the word will be changed to "enlisted."

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, before we conclude the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, I want to say just a word in appreciation of the work of the chairman [Mr. KAHN] and of the committee and all of the members of the committee, the minority and majority, in making up this bill. They have worked diligently, faithfully, and intelligently, and they have given us a bill that we can all support. I have said at one time and another that I hoped the Army bill would carry less than $400,000,000. I am very glad to be able to say that it carries considerably less than $400,000,000—some $23,000,000 less. And yet I am of the opinion that the committee has cared for the military service well and efficiently, and that it will not be necessary to add to the items of this bill. I want to thank the Military Committee for having given us such very valuable assistance in realizing the hope and expectation expressed at the beginning of the session, of being able to reduce the estimates carried in the Book of Estimates in excess of a billion dollars. The reduction below the estimates made in reporting this bill amount to over $600,000,000. That is a very large portion of the reduction we hope to make.

When I made my first statement I said we hoped to reduce in excess of a billion. When I made my second statement I said we hoped to reduce by a billion and a quarter. I think we may now confidently assert that there is no question but what in reporting and passing the regular appropriation bills at this session of Congress we will be able to show a reduction below the estimates as carried in the Book of Estimates of somewhat more than a billion and a quarter of dollars. In saying that I have in mind that there is reported elsewhere a naval bill which carries, as reported, I think, $45,000,000 or $46,000,000 more than was carried in the House. We all take a very great pride in the American Navy. A member of the Naval Affairs Committee has made some graphic charts, which are in the lobby, clearly evidencing the fact that the American Navy will be within the next year or two the greatest Navy that floats the seas, in number of ships, in tonnage, and, I hope, in efficiency. I am not prepared to say that this is necessarily a matter over which we should be particularly enthusiastic, and yet it is a matter of proper pride that we have developed not only a great Naval Establishment but an exceedingly efficient one.

But there should be reason in all things. Time was when we were urged to build and build and build for fear some one across the Pacific was going to exceed us in the number and in the fighting capacity of ships. And then we had the German Empire held up before us as the real menace. There is no menace on the seas. Our tonnage under construction will make us stronger than any navy afloat. But the American people are not, in my opinion, prepared to pay for the maintenance of the Navy, as much pride as they take in it, two-thirds as much money as they paid for the maintenance of all of the activities of the Government prior to the European war; and I hope we will all have that in mind when the Navy bill comes back to the House. It was a liberal bill when it passed the House, rather too liberal in my opinion, but we supported it because the committee had worked faithfully and had done its best to keep the bill within bounds in face of the everlasting and never-ending insistence of the department for larger appropriations. I hope that the House will stand against any and every increase in the naval bill. [Applause.]

Even at the best, assuming that this military bill is not increased, assuming the naval bill is not increased, we shall be paying over $800,000,000 for our Army and our Navy directly, in addition to very considerable appropriations carried on other bills, like the sundry civil bill, for these purposes. We want to, we must, we shall maintain a good Army and a good Navy, but it is highly essential that we shall remember the overburdened American taxpayer and that we shall remember that expenditures are in this fiscal year ending 18 months after the guns ceased to roar on the western front $300,000,000, approximately, more than our enormous revenues, including very considerable sums obtained from salvage.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. We can not go on that way indefinitely. We must curtail. Now I will yield if I have time.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand we are soon to take up the third deficiency appropriation bill, which means that on three different occasions it has been necessary for Congress to pass deficiency bills and give more money to the departments that have gone beyond the scope of their expenditures as allowed by Congress. Are we going to keep on allowing them deficiencies when they unlawfully exceed our appropriations?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am not blaming anyone——

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am blaming departments for exceeding——

Mr. MONDELL. For having taken over the railroads. There are a lot of folks who think that it was necessary. That matter is behind us. I am much inclined to blame those who had the administration of them, and yet I am not making that criticism now. But we did incur enormous obligations in connection with the railroads, and hence the deficiency bill which we are to consider within the next few days. As to other deficiency items, I am opposed to any and all estimates under the guise of a deficiency which in fact provides for larger expenditures for a given purpose than Congress contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to call the attention of the distinguished majority leader to the fact that when the body at the other end of the Capitol took up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill on the first day there were about three pages of Senate amendments increasing our appropriations that were adopted by the Senate without even a word of argument, without even a word said in behalf of them on the floor of the Senate. How much longer is the House going to permit that kind of proposition to go through our conferees without action on the part of the House in curtailing those appropriations? We are helpless; we have no point of order against any of them.

Mr. MONDELL. I certainly am not going to indulge in unparliamentary language in reference to the action taken elsewhere. Hence, I shall say nothing, as I might not express my opinion of the matter in a way that would be entirely parliamentary. But I do confidently expect the conferees on the part of the House to do their duty, and I have confidence that they will.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the majority leader kindly advise us, while he is upon the floor, what is expected to be considered in the House to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. To-morrow a special rule is to be brought in for the consideration of a bill increasing the allowance to injured men who are taking vocational training.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In stating the saving of $1,250,000,000, has the gentleman included the railroad bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I was discussing the savings within the estimates carried in the Book of Estimates. Outside of those more appropriations will have to be made. We can only measure our savings now by measuring the savings within the regular estimates.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Was the railroad deficiency in the regular estimates?

Mr. MONDELL. The railroad deficiency was not in the regular estimates. In fact, the railroad deficiency is for the past and present fiscal years, whereas the regular appropriation bills I have referred to provide for the next fiscal year.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. DENT. I have been a little afraid, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps the appropriation for the National Guard as contained in this bill was not sufficient. The Militia Bureau asked the committee for an appropriation for the National Guard for 175,000 officers and men, as I recall it. The committee decided to appropriate for an average of 100,000 National Guard. It occurred to me that if times should be restored to normal it might be possible for the National Guard to be builded up very rapidly, and if we made an appropriation for 175,000 as requested by the Militia Bureau it would certainly do no harm, because if the States did not raise the guard the money could not be expended. At the present time, as I understand it, there are some 42,000 national guardsmen organized since the armistice.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DENT. In view, then, of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that this bill goes into effect on the 1st day of July, and that the Committee on Military Affairs will begin the writing of another appropriation bill about the 1st of next December, I shall not make any objection to the provisions as to the National Guard.

Attention has been called, both in the report on this bill and also by the statement which was recently made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], that this bill reduces the estimates made by the War Department in support of the Army by something over $600,000,000. That is true, and the statement made in the report is a fair statement of the facts. But I think it is only fair to call the attention of the committee to the fact that when these estimates were made last fall—the law requiring them to be submitted in October—nobody knew what sized Army we were expected to have. A number of bills were pending for the purpose of reorganizing the Army of the United States, and the General Staff had prepared a bill for an Army of 576,000 officers and men and for universal compulsory military training.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the bill as sent to the committee did carry a provision for universal military training. But I want to submit to my colleague that the estimate sent by the War Department last year also contemplated an Army of 576,000, and had no provision for universal training, and the figures submitted by the War Department were practically like the figures submitted to us here.

Mr. DENT. The figures were submitted on a proposed Army of 576,000 officers and men. Those were estimates. Now, it is only fair for this committee to know that both the committee on the part of the Senate and the House Military Committee repudiated that size of an army, and that repudiation was not limited to any party in this House. So that the estimates that were made were not made for the Army as authorized by law, but only for a proposed army, which neither House has agreed to accept; I think it is only fair for this House to know that the reduction of something like $600,000 is based on a proposed army prepared by the General Staff, and one which the committee unanimously rejected. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am only going to take a minute or two. We are always delighted to have the majority leader [Mr. MON-

DELL] address the House, particularly upon the subject of economy. I want to suggest to him—I do not see him upon the floor now—that if he wanted further to economize he might do with reference to paying our railroad obligations as we do our Indian claims—just never pay them. After representatives of these Indians come around the committees for years and years and years, the claims are called stale, and no appropriation is ever made for them.

Then, when they come with a bill to allow them to go to our own courts, to have the courts say whether or not these claims are just, we will not even allow them to do that. I just want to call attention to the difference in treatment. In one case, in a deficiency bill we appropriate outright the amount that we ought to, and we pay our honest obligations, but when it comes to an Indian tribe we not only do not appropriate the money for them, like we do for the railroads, but we do not even let them go into our own courts, and give them a day in court so that they can be heard. I am in favor of paying our just obligations to all people, white or red. We should not be afraid to trust our own courts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in line 7, page 58, after the word "shall" insert the word "hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 58, line 7, after the word "shall" insert the word "hereafter."

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I understand this proviso is made necessary by some ruling of the War Department?

Mr. KAHN. By a decision of the comptroller.

Mr. WALSH. By a decision of the comptroller which excludes the 31st day of the month?

Mr. CRAGO. It excludes the 31st day of the month.

When men are called into camp on the 31st day of July or the 31st day of August, or the camp ends on that day, they do not receive pay for that day, as the Army pay tables are based on 30-day months. In any event they exclude the 31st of the month, and in July and August, when most of the National Guard organizations are called into service, each of those months has a thirty-first day, and therefore there is necessity for this proviso.

Mr. ANTHONY. Would not the gentleman's amendment make it impossible to pay those States that have heretofore been deprived of pay for the service of their National Guard on the 31st day of the month? Would not the word "hereafter" make this apply to the future and not to the past?

Mr. CRAGO. I am afraid it would.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am sure the gentleman does not want to produce that result.

Mr. CRAGO. No; we ought not to do that.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TANK SERVICE.

For payment of the necessary civilian employees to assist in handling the clerical work in the office of the Chief of Tank Corps, the various Tank Corps organization headquarters, and Tank Corps schools; and for the payment of the necessary mechanics to assist in repairing and preserving tanks in the hands of Tank Corps units, $50,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KAHN. I presume the gentleman from Indiana is going to make a point of order?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is my purpose.

Mr. KAHN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Tank Corps at Camp Meade are in Maryland and not in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Why are they not in the District of Columbia?

Mr. KAHN. Because the Tank Corps are operating at Camp Meade, and every time the chief of the corps comes before the Committee on Military Affairs he comes from Camp Meade and brings his assistants with him from Camp Meade. They are operating down there and not in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. On that statement I will not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users a supply of nitrate of soda.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 400) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPENCER, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCIDENTAL EXPENSES, TANK CORPS SCHOOLS.

Incidental expenses in connection with the operation of the Tank Corps schools, $5,000.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The bill is nearing completion now, and it carries a considerable appropriation for the purchase of supplies. I want to ask the gentleman if the committee gave any consideration to the surplus supplies that are now on hand?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes. The committee were very careful to investigate that matter, and on almost every item of supplies a specific inquiry was put to the officers of the War Department to this effect: "Have you any of those supplies on hand now; and if so, what quantity?"

Mr. MCKEOWN. I want to say to the gentleman that if we permit the War Department to sell our surplus supplies which we have ordered sold, and if they are sold to dealers in large quantities who resell them at retail at an enormous profit, and then if we have to buy back those supplies on a depleted market at a very much increased price, the United States Government is going to suffer, and the people are going to suffer both ways. We are going to lose money on the sale of this property and then lose money when we buy the supplies back again, to furnish the necessary supplies for the Army. To my certain knowledge, in one instance they are reselling these supplies at 100 per cent over what they paid the Government.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that as the Army is growing smaller the War Department will probably declare further supplies to be surplus. They have a surplus board. But I am told that reserves are being held so that there will be no need to purchase supplies, of which there is a surplus, for some time.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Has any method been proposed by which they can prevent unreasonable profits being made on the supplies that are being held?

Mr. KAHN. Of course, that is a question that has been up before the Committee on the Judiciary and other committees. It comes under the proposition of profiteering; but the Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction after the supplies have been sold and have gone into the hands of purchasers.

Mr. MCKEOWN. It has occurred to me that it might be provided as a condition precedent to the approval of the bid that such an article should not be sold at to exceed a certain per cent increase on the resale. It makes an embarrassing situation here.

Mr. KAHN. That is an administrative matter, of course, which rests with the officials of the War Department.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I understand, but I wanted to call the attention of the committee to that condition. The question was suggested the other day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] in a discussion over the sale of nitrates. I think that is going to be a very serious question, that the Congress has permitted supplies to be sold in large quantities to dealers who immediately go out and put an unreasonable profit on those supplies when they offer them for sale.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I rise in opposition to the gentleman's motion. I want to ask the chairman of the committee with regard to complaints that have been coming to me, and that may have been coming to him, with respect to the charge that thousands of automobiles have been kept at various military centers for months without any shelter over them, exposed to the rain and snow and weather, and not sold, because of protests on the part of automobile manufacturers that it would cause an oversupply of automobiles in the market. Is there an understanding between our War Department and the automobile manufacturers?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman makes a statement that I have heard, but I have not been able to investigate it. The fact remains that at the end of the war we did have many automobiles and autotrucks and other vehicles, and we had no shelter for them. The Congress since then on two or three occasions has passed legislation ordering the distribution of these trucks for road-building purposes and for the Postal Service. I understand the surplus is rapidly diminishing, if it has not entirely disappeared.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is speaking in regard to trucks. I have within the last month received complaints, not only from my own State but from several other States, that not a single automobile proper has been sold, unless it was a machine condemned by the department; that the great majority of automobiles have been held and are still held in military centers in weather, rain or shine, and are being damaged. They say that if the committee will investigate they will find that that is true, and that it is because of the claims of the automobile manufacturers that it will hurt the market and their business. These complaints come from substantial citizens, and I am sure the gentleman's committee ought to investigate it.

Mr. KAHN. The Committee on Military Affairs has written legislation into this bill forbidding the purchase of additional motor vehicles of any kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but we have at these camps now automobiles in large numbers that ought to be sold.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, is debate on this amendment exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is more than a rumor as to the course pursued by the War Department in permitting automobiles and material of one kind and another to go to waste. I am not disposed to criticize this committee or to suggest that it has not done its duty, but am surprised at the statement of its chairman that, in view of all the statements that have been made by those who evidently know what they are talking about, by men whose statements usually are correct and always entitled to credit—to hear him say his committee has made no investigation, but deliberately recommends appropriations which can be used by the Department of War for the purchase of great quantities of stuff of which it now has more than it can possibly use.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The chairman of the committee stated positively that there is language in this bill which prohibits the purchase of additional motor-propelled vehicles of all kinds.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The language will have to be ironclad, otherwise the department will find a construction by which it can spend the money as the committee does not intend.

Now, I wish to add another word. I know the chairman is anxious to finish the consideration of this bill, but while it is in my mind I wish to say that explanations have been forthcoming as to all features of this bill. The moneys appropriated in the bill, in total, amount to nearly four times as much as was ever carried in an Army appropriation bill previous to the war. The gentleman himself may be satisfied with the explanations, but I think he will have hard work to make people of the country accept them.

I had a little experience with the War Department. A statement I made on the floor of the House a few days ago came to the attention of the Secretary of War, and I received a letter from him. You will remember I told the House that the chief of the roads bureau and the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture had been before the Committee on Agriculture and had made a statement. The committee was considering whether or not $4,000 or $5,000 should be appropriated for the purchase of a new truck for the use of one of the bureaus of that department. They were asked why they could not use some of the trucks turned over by the War Department. It came out that the War Department, pretending to follow the law that had been passed directing the Secretary of War to turn over to the Department of Agriculture trucks which his department did not need to be used in the road-building program in cooperation with the States—that the War Department had deliberately removed the apparatus of trucks above the wheels and had turned over to the Agricultural Department little, if anything, beside the running gear and chassis. When I made that statement a few days ago the accuracy of it was questioned by a Member who asked if I had talked with the Secretary of War in order to determine whether or not my statement was true. I had not interviewed the Secretary—have not interviewed him yet; but he evidently read my remarks in the RECORD, and he wrote me a letter admitting the truth of what I had said, quoted the law under which he acted, in an effort to explain and to justify the remarkable course he had pursued. The law quoted by the Secretary is "that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways and so forth." The Secretary writes me that this law not only permits but requires him "to retain for use by the War Department any equipment which was needed for the supply of the Army"; and he adds that tanks and dumping apparatus of "some trucks were removed for installation upon standard Army chassis, and thus obviated the necessity of purchasing similar articles." He attempts to justify his destruction of trucks as far as their value to the Department of Agriculture is concerned, and says he thereby obviated the necessity of buying similar articles, in face of the indisputable fact that he had and now has thousands and thousands of trucks—the same kind of trucks—so many that he finds it necessary—from his standpoint—to permit them to be destroyed. The Secretary's letter very kindly acquits me of intentional "misstatement"; he says I am "not familiar with the law," else I would not have said what I did.

Mr. GARNER. Why not include in the bill a provision compelling the War Department to sell the automobiles and trucks?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] points out that we have a great many automobiles and trucks going to waste, that they have been permitted to remain out in all kinds of weather, the department refusing to put them under cover, permitting them to go to waste. There are statements, more than rumors, that the department has deliberately destroyed the property of the Government of this kind. They have thrown automobiles off railroad trains, have taken new machines and driven them around so that they would be second hand, so that they would have no new machines for sale. I do not believe such a course should be permitted to pass unnoticed; there ought to be an investigation. I do not see how the committee can come before Congress and ask for additional money, admitting all the time that they have made no investigation.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I want only about two minutes. I will say that there is a committee that is investigating this entire matter of motor trucks and motor vehicles. That committee is the committee of which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] is the chairman. He has made a full investigation of this matter. The Committee on Military Affairs recognizing that that committee had jurisdiction over the subject, did not attempt to take up the matter, but tried to take up new constructive legislation. The gentleman says that there has been a great increase in the Army and in the cost of the Army. If the gentleman had been here the other day when I made my opening statement, he would have learned that almost every article that is used in the Army has gone up from 100 to 200 and 300 per cent in cost since before the war, he would have learned that shoes that were then sold to the Government for $2.70 a pair now bring $7 a pair, he would have recognized the fact that the pay of the soldier before the war was $15 a month and that to-day it is $30 a month, and that the number of men who are classed as first-class privates receive $33 a month.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, that is all very interesting, but the query still comes back, Why do you not force the War Department by law to sell these automobiles?

Mr. KAHN. Because the other committee has jurisdiction over that matter, and we have been so busy preparing these constructive bills that we have allowed the other gentlemen——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. When the Reavis Committee comes in here there will be a resolution from the Committee on Rules that will provide for four hours of debate, and in the end we will have no resolution on the subject. The gentleman's committee has power to legislate, and the Reavis Committee will not undertake to legislate, and the result is just a question of tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman mean that this committee has had one moment of spare time since this session began?

Mr. GARNER. After we pass this bill the committee will have more time in which it can legislate and bring in more legislation. Have we any assurance that it will bring in legislation that will compel the War Department to do what every man in this House thinks ought to be done?

Mr. KAHN. I want to assure the gentleman that we will have some conference reports to go through with, and I want to tell the gentleman that the Committee on Military Affairs wants to take up the very important question of revising the system of courts-martial and the Articles of War, and that it will take up some additional legislation.

Mr. GARNER. Then, from what I gather from the gentleman's statement, he does not anticipate any legislation on this subject?

Mr. KAHN. If we have time to take up this matter outside of the regular work of this committee, we will try to formulate some legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not a fact that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff and the men in charge of the Military Establishment now have the power to declare any article in their possession surplus?

Mr. GARNER. According to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], who spoke just a moment ago, the Secretary of War says he has no such power.

Mr. KAHN. He has done it repeatedly.

Mr. GARNER. I am quoting the gentleman from Michigan. He said he had a letter from the Secretary of War in which the Secretary said, as I understood him, that he did not have the power now to do this thing. I am asking the gentleman why his committee does not compel him to do it.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman has answered my question in the affirmative, I take it. That being true——

Mr. GARNER. I did not answer the question. I say that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] says that the Secretary says that he has not that power.

Mr. McKENZIE. I insist that he has.

Mr. GARNER. But the Secretary of War says that he has not.

Mr. McKENZIE. And, furthermore, they have the power under the law to declare articles surplus, and whenever they declare articles surplus then they have the right to sell those articles. The people to get at, in my judgment, if the gentleman is anxious to get quick action, are not the people who are members of the Committee on Military Affairs but the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff and the men in charge down here who have control of the department.

Mr. GARNER. When it comes under the observation of the gentleman's committee and the House of Representatives and the Committee of the Whole House, as it is now, that the Secretary has that power, that he is not exercising that power, why does not the gentleman's committee compel him as far as it can by law to exercise that power? Why do not you put a provision in this bill saying that the War Department shall not have more than a certain number of automobiles, and that they must dispose of the balance of them?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say that in my judgment the men at the head of the War Department, including the Secretary of War, are men of ability and better able to judge whether they have a surplus or not than are the members of the Committee on Military Affairs. We do not know whether they have a surplus or not. They ought to know; and if they have a surplus they ought to declare it and sell it.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, if I catch the gentleman's meaning, it is that we have an inefficient Secretary of War.

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I did not say that.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman did not say that, but that is the inference, that we have a Secretary of War who is not carrying out the policy that the gentleman would have him carry out—or, at least, what seems to be the disposition of this House—and you have not sufficient knowledge or ability to put it into law and compel him to do it.

Mr. McKENZIE. In reply I would say that the gentleman from Texas has been indicting his own administration and his own Secretary of War and that I am insisting upon being fair to them.

Mr. GARNER. I do not hesitate to indict my Secretary of War when I understand that he is not performing the duties that this House thinks he ought to perform. I do not care who he may be, if it is true, as stated by the membership of this House on the floor—and the matter has not been denied—that these automobiles are going to waste; that the Agricultural Department does need them and ought to have them, and can not get them for the want of law, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] and by the statement of the Secretary of War; then, that being the case, this House and the gentleman's committee ought to function and give him power to do it, and if he does not do it compel him to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already directed the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the amount so advanced be charged to the proper appropriations and returned to "Army account of advances" by pay and counter-warrant. The said charge, however, to particular appropriations shall be limited to the amount appropriated to each.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We have heard a great deal of talk here to-day about what the Secretary of War ought to do and why he does not do it, and what this committee ought to do and why it has not done it. I am going to submit what I have heard and believe to be true. The War Department has a number of men in charge of the sale of surplus supplies of all kinds, and they have a combination of men to whom they are selling those supplies when they are declared to be surplus, and it is said they never make a declaration of surplus on certain supplies until they find that the men to whom they sell them have found a market for them; and the next day after these men report that they have sold the goods, whatever they may be, these goods are declared to be surplus.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Not yet. The result is that these men who are in the business of selling war surplus supplies on the market are making millions of dollars. Now, I make that statement as the result of information which comes to me. I make the charge that the War Department has not, except in instances where they have a large quantity of a particular supply that they can not dispose of in this way, declared a surplus until these favorites, if I may so state it, have reported to them that they have made the sale.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I hope I make myself clear.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to be distinctly understood as saying that the men in charge of the sale of war surplus supplies are playing favorites with men on the outside to whom an advantage is given, and that in no case, except such as I have mentioned, is anybody advised that war supplies are declared as surplus.

Mr. GARNER. Let me say to the gentleman I think it is his duty—and I think the gentleman will observe it himself—to present these facts to the proper authorities and have these people indicted and send them to the penitentiary. There is where they belong.

Mr. MADDEN. I make that statement on my responsibility as a Member of Congress, based on information which I think reliable, and I take this method of informing the War Department of the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want five minutes. I have said what I wanted to say.

Mr. GARNER. I will ask to be recognized.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FIELDS. I will.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois has made a statement here that is an indictment of the War Department that ought to be remedied. He makes it on his responsibility as a Member of Congress. Now, I say to him he is in the majority of this House. With that statement before the Committee on Military Affairs it is its duty before this bill leaves this body to put a provision in it compelling these people to sell these automobiles or this property and leave a certain surplus necessary for the conduct of the War Department, and compelling them to do it within 60 or 90 days. Why does not the gentleman and his committee or his side of the House put a provision on this bill which will compel them to protect the people of this country that they are robbing, as the gentleman says they are? I ask that question. Why does not the gentleman do it?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not a member of this committee.

Mr. GARNER. I want the gentleman to indict his committee just as he is indicting the War Departent, and I think the gentleman ought to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. I made a statement which I will be able to verify.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is a member of the steering committee, the boss of the House, and I think the gentleman ought to come across with this House by putting something on this bill that will remedy the situation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, but he is a Member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and in the protection of the Government his responsibilities are equal to the responsibilities of the Military Committee. If he has the information that he says he has, and I do not question the correctness or incorrectness of his statement, I am going to challenge him to put the names of the gentlemen whom he indicts into his remarks and invite the attention of the Department of Justice to the alleged offense.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the department has sufficient notice when it reads what I have said on this subject.

Mr. FIELDS. And introduce a resolution for an investigation. I have no sympathy for any officer, military or civil, who will rob the Government, and I contend that it is the duty of every Member of Congress when the facts are brought to his attention that some individual is robbing the Government to give the name of the individual or those persons guilty to the Government, to the Congress, and to the public and demand that they be prosecuted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was rather startling, and I think it but fair to announce to this committee that by reason of that statement the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will try to get in touch with the chairman of the committee that has been investigating this automobile and motor-truck business, and will try to cooperate with him so that we may have within a few days a legislative problem before this House on that entire question.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Is it not a fact that in the mail of each Member of this House every day there is a printed notice sent from the Sales Division, showing what is declared surplus, and when and where bids will be opened? It is in the mail every morning.

Mr. KAHN. I have not been receiving them lately, but it has been done constantly in the past.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman from California permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. We have been here since the 19th of May, and I would like to ask my friend if he ever heard this charge being made until this moment?

Mr. KAHN. I did not hear the charge made by anyone until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], on his own responsibility as a Member of this House, made it, and therefore I say it is serious enough, in my opinion, to be taken up with the committee that has been investigating these questions, with a view of getting some bill before the House without delay.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think the charge ought to be investigated, if I may interrupt the gentleman a moment further; but I make the prediction now that the truth of it will never be proved.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] misunderstood me, and he has, unintentionally of course, misquoted me. I did not say the Secretary of War had no authority to sell or otherwise dispose of surplus automobiles or other material. In fact there is a law directing the Secretary of War to turn over trucks, and so forth, to the Department of Agriculture. I was speaking to the proposition that the air is full of rumors, possibly, but some able-bodied rumors, to the effect that the Secretary of War is deliberately permitting waste of war material, and it looks very much as if he were conniving at its destruction. I spoke of matters which had come to my attention, and my statement is verified by a letter from the Secretary of War himself that in pursuance of the law directing him to turn over trucks to the Department of Agriculture, he, the Secretary of War, or some one acting under his direction, had deliberately removed from those trucks all their upper works, the very kind of paraphernalia needed on those trucks that are to be used in building roads. The law says expressly that these trucks were to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in highway construction throughout the country.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. As I said, the Secretary of War took notice of my remarks made a few days ago and wrote me a letter, in which he assumes to justify his course in doing the very thing I charged him with doing and points out the words in the law which he says authorize him to do that, namely, that he is authorized to keep whatever "can be of use to the War Department." Think of it! Under those words he attempts to justify the stripping of trucks, taking off all above the wheels and the chassis, taking off tanks and dumping machinery, taking off the tops and other paraphernalia, the very things which gave them value for their intended use—the building of roads in this country. It shows the length to which the Secretary of War will go not in observing the law but in violating it, getting in line with those who evidently are deliberately trying to destroy the property of the United States, so that it will not go into the market to compete with the original producers of it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Why do not you put a provision in this bill compelling him to sell the trucks not needed by the War Department? Why do you not compel him to do right when you know and say he is doing wrong?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Texas has already addressed his inquiry and made his suggestion along that line to the proper authority, the chairman of the committee having charge of this bill; it should not be addressed to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The Clerk will read.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman wait until we read further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has already been directed to read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any balances of existing Army appropriations now available for withdrawal from the Treasury, together with any unexpended balances now charged to disbursing officers or agents of the Army which, under existing law, are available for disbursement, shall at such time as may be designated by the Secretary of War, be transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to "Army account of advances" and shall be disbursed and accounted for as such.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that every one in the House was amazed to hear the charge made by the leader of the steering committee on the majority side in his protected capacity as a Member of the House, and upon that responsibility, as he says in no uncertain language—because he asked that it be so understood—does he not only inferentially charge, but does actually charge crimes and criminal transactions in the War Department on the part of persons therein and others he characterizes as "confederates" in the sale of surplus property.

Now, when a man in high authority does that, such a man as the leader of the steering committee in charge of legislation in this House of Representatives, and a man who says he speaks upon his responsibility as a Member of the House of Representatives, makes this serious charge, I call on him in the name of that responsibility to give this House the names of those persons, or the name of one of those persons at this time, and I await an answer.

It is an increasingly common thing, gentlemen, to hear a lot of light and loose talk, and one of the principal ways of inciting distrust of our National Government and of officers who honestly are administering their functions is to have some man in his protected capacity speak in innuendo or in direct charge concerning a thing, making a charge of crime, and then failing on challenge to respond in the slightest or give any evidence as to what that information is which he says he has. It is easy to say that a man is a criminal. It is easy to make a charge, but it is a fair thing for a man, even on his responsibility as a Member of the House of Representatives, to give his fellow Members of the House who want to do the fair thing, too, an opportunity of knowing just what that information is. He says he speaks with authority. Let us have the authority. Let us have the information, Mr. Chairman and Members of this House, and if a man has such information now and here is the time to speak and not sit in silence. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CODIFICATION MILITARY LAWS.

That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be prepared, with as much expedition as may be consistent with thoroughness, to be finished within two years, a revision and codification of the military laws of the United States, which shall conform in scope and character to the revision and codification of the laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature directed by the act of March 3, 1901. The Secretary of War shall submit to Congress a report of progress of the revision and codification herein directed upon the first day of the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and, when the revision and codification is completed, he shall cause a copy of the same, in print, to be submitted to Congress, that the statutes so revised and codified may be reenacted, if Congress shall so determine.

Mr. JAMES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph and also on the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. KAHN. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] has been recognized. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana later.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not want to debate it unless the provision is decided to be in order.

Mr. KAHN. I concede the point of order. It is clearly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For paying the expenses of clerical hire and printing and other expenses incident to the making of the revision and codification herein directed not to exceed $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended upon certificates of the Secretary of War that the expenditures were necessary therefor.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. KAHN. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TIME-MEASURING DEVICES.

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words concerning the item on page 61 regarding disbursing officers.

There should be some change in the system by which men who are discharged from the Army are paid. I know of a case where a young man was discharged from the Army on December 12, 1918. The disbursing officer sent him a remittance of $12 by registered mail, but as it was sent to the wrong address it was returned to the sender, Maj. Durkee. Maj. Durkee then sent another registered letter to the soldier, Clarence J. Vaughan, at his home at Marquette, Mich. The second registered letter was duly received, but contained no money. Mr. Vaughan took the matter up with Maj. Durkee and the War Department and explained that the registered letter contained no money, but receiving no satisfaction sent all papers to me.

After some correspondence I was given to understand that if Mr. Vaughan would furnish a bond, with two responsible bondsmen, he would be paid. I was also informed that—he should also be cautioned that the instructions attached to the bond of indemnity must be followed absolutely, as the bond when completed must be approved by the Treasury Department prior to the payment of the duplicate check.

Instructions regarding bond were "followed absolutely," red tape and all, and bond was executed and forwarded to the War Department on March 1, 1919.

On July 9, 1919, I was informed by the War Department that they had discovered that the disbursing officer, Maj. Durkee, had sent "currency" to Mr. Vaughan instead of a check, and therefore they were not responsible, and stated that the matter would have to be taken up with the Post Office Department.

After a good deal of correspondence and conversation with the Post Office Department I was informed that nothing could be done until Maj. Durkee could be located and interviewed by a post-office inspector. I was also informed that it would be necessary to get an affidavit signed and sworn to by Maj. Durkee that he had really sent the $12 in currency.

Very luckily Maj. Durkee had not been sent to Siberia to guard some railroad, or to Silesia to oversee some election, or Mr. Vaughan's grandchildren might be paid the money some day.

Maj. Durkee was finally located in Texas and stated that he had sent out thousands of letters and did not remember anything about the one sent to Mr. Vaughan. The Post Office Department said they "were sorry, but nothing could be done until the affidavit was secured."

Under date of January 8, 1920, or about 13 months after Mr. Vaughan had been discharged, I was told in part: "I have to state that the case is still under investigation, with a view to fixing responsibility for the rifling, if possible, in the event it can be definitely determined that the leter was rifled while in the custody of the Postal Service."

As this was as "clear as mud," I asked for further information, and I gathered the additional information that about the only way that they—the Post Office Department—could or would pay was to have the man who stole the money admit that he had stolen it. [Laughter.]

I was also informed that—

Inasmuch as the letter in question was mailed under cover of an official penalty envelope, without payment of postage, indemnity in this case is not applicable. However, if further investigation results in fixing responsibility for the rifling upon a postal employee, consideration will be given to the matter of attempting recovery of the amount involved from such employee in order that claimant may be reimbursed.

In other words, although the registry fee had been paid, the Post Office stated that they assumed no responsibility because the envelope was a "franked" one instead of carrying a 2-cent stamp.

We then called the attention of the War Department to the matter and was informed that they had sent out thousands of registered letters in franked envelopes, and it was their contention that the Post Office was responsible, and they would take the matter up with them at once and advise us.

This was several months ago, and I presume that there is still a debate between the War Department and the Post Office Department as to whether or not money sent a soldier by registered letter and stolen should be paid to the soldier and, if so, by what department.

Mr. Vaughan is not so much concerned about the amount as he is about the principle of the thing. I take it for granted that there are many others in the same fix.

I sincerely hope that before the next war that the War Department will have worked out a system that will be fairer to the soldier and one that means he will be reimbursed promptly in similar cases.

I would like to call attention to another matter. It has been stated many times by defenders of the "league of notions," most of them half-baked and none made in America, that the treaty ought to be ratified so that our business men could "resume trade relations with Germany." At the same time our own War Department had sold goods to Germans and claimed that they had the right to do so on account of a certain proclamation issued by the President.

The following explains itself:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 20, 1919.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES,
Twelfth district, Michigan, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of August 7 to Gen. P. C. Harris, Adjutant General of the United States Army, requesting a copy of the order by which provisions, etc., belonging to the Army can be sold to Germans has been referred to me.

The authority under which sales to Germans are permitted is not a War Department order. The solution of this question resolves itself into two inquiries, namely:

1. Who has authority to sell War Department materials?
2. Is there authority in such person or persons to sell to Germans?

1. WHO HAS AUTHORITY TO SELL WAR DEPARTMENT MATERIALS?

By virtue of the authority given in the act of Congress dated July 9, 1918, War Department General Orders, No. 24, dated February 11, 1919, was issued, creating, by the direction of the President, a "United States Liquidation Commission, War Department." The powers of the commission, so far as concerns this inquiry, are set forth in paragraph 3, subparagraph b, which reads:

"To sell or dispose of, upon such terms as it shall determine, any property of whatsoever kind or material acquired, constructed, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the participation of the United States in the war and now located beyond the territorial limits of the United States and its possessions."

By virtue of the same act of Congress the President directed that the War Department set up machinery for the sale of surplus War Department material situated in the United States. This was done, and the office of the director of sales, in the office of the director of Purchase, Storage and Traffic, was created.

Both of these organizations, namely, the United States Liquidation Commission and the director of sales, have, therefore, authority to sell surplus War Department property.

2. IS THERE AUTHORITY TO SELL IT TO GERMANS?

By an act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, known as "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," it was declared to be unlawful for any person in the United States, except with the license of the President, to trade with the enemy or ally of an enemy. As defined by this act, all Germans clearly fell within the term "enemy." By the Executive order dated October 12, 1917, the President established the War Trade Board and empowered it to take all necessary steps not inconsistent with the law to issue or refuse licenses for the exportation or importation of all material. This Executive order, issued under authority of the act of October 6, to which reference has been made, thus delegated the power of the President to the War Trade Board to determine the issuance of import and export licenses. By virtue of this power, on July 14, 1919, the War Trade Board issued ruling 802, entitled "Resumption of trade with Germany." This bulletin stated that a general enemy trade license has been issued authorizing all persons in the United States, on or after July 14, 1919, to trade and communicate with all persons with whom trade and communication is prohibited by the trading-with-the-enemy act, subject to certain limitations not material to this discussion. War Trade Board ruling 814, published July 20, 1919, amends the ruling of July 14 to a certain extent, but not so far as concerns the subject matter of this inquiry. The real result of the publishing of this bulletin is the resumption of trade and communication with persons residing in Germany and also with all persons with whom trade and communication was prohibited by the trading-with-the-enemy act. The issuance of the general license is the machinery whereby this is accomplished.

It is quite clear, therefore, that the War Trade Board bulletin, which is very broad in its language, permits the sale of all War Department materials to Germans. It follows, therefore, that both the director of sales and the United States Liquidation Commission are authorized to make sales of War Department materials to Germans.

I am inclosing herewith for your information a copy of the War Trade bulletin entitled "Resumption of trade with Germany," dated July 14, this year, and an amendment thereto dated July 20. I trust that this satisfactorily answers your question.

Very truly, yours,

CHESTER W. CUTHELL,
Special Representative of the Secretary of War.

If we are still at war with Germany, one wonders why the officials of the American Army are selling our supplies to the people with whom we are still at war.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all orders for manufacture of material pertaining to approved projects, which are placed with arsenals or other ordnance establishments and which are chargeable to armament of fortifications appropriations, shall be considered as obligations in all respects in the same manner as provided for similar orders placed with commercial manufacturers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa:

Page 63, line 20, strike out all after the word "otherwise" and insert: "That all orders or contracts for manufacture of material pertaining to approved projects heretofore or hereafter placed with Government-owned establishments, shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders placed with commercial manufacturers, and the appropriations shall remain available for the payment of the obligations so created as in the case of contracts or orders with commercial manufacturers."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. I did not catch the reading of it. Will the gentleman explain it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The amendment is simply to clarify the language in the bill. It strikes out the paragraph as it is in the bill and inserts a new paragraph, which has the approval of the committee. It is offered as a committee amendment. It has the approval of the Ordnance Bureau, of the War Department, and of the Secretary of War. It simply permits the arsenals or Government-owned factories to be placed on a parity with private manufacturers in the production of materials for the War Department. It is intended to be an economical step and to save the Government hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars of money.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. How does this compare with the language in the fortifications bill passed here the other day?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is practically the same language as that in the fortification bill.

Mr. WALSH. Practically the same—why should it not be identical?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because the paragraph in the bill was copied from the fortifications bill, and in the fortifications bill they use the words "which are chargeable to armament and fortification appropriations." This simply makes it read right for the fortification, but it does cover the Army bill as we are passing it, so the wording in the bill is to be struck out and this amendment substituted in order that it shall apply properly to this Army bill.

Mr. GARD. I understood the gentleman to say that the adoption of this proposed amendment would save hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars a year?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman inform us with greater accuracy than that how much it will save?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not say, because they are just starting in to do this work. You have never had a system by which the arsenals would produce all the things that the War Department needs.

Mr. GARD. It is a very valuable amendment if it will save hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars a year.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have saved over a million dollars in the last six months by doing this very thing, which can be shown by official figures. It will not only save millions but hundreds of millions of dollars in the future, because if you carry this out, when another war comes on you will have something to fight the war with and not be forced to spend billions to get munitions with which to fight.

Mr. GARD. In view of the gentleman's statement I am willing to try it once.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. HULL of Iowa was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAGO for the committee: Page 63, after the amendment just adopted, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"Transportation of wounded and otherwise disabled soldiers, sailors, or marines when traveling on furlough.

"The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, under such regulations and restrictions as they may provide, are hereby authorized to issue to all wounded and otherwise disabled soldiers, sailors, or marines under treatment in any Army, Navy, or other hospital, who are given furloughs at any time, a furlough certificate, which certificate shall be signed by the commanding officer at such hospital. This furlough certificate when presented by such furloughed soldier, sailor, or marine to the agent of any railroad or steamship company over whose lines said soldier, sailor, or marine may travel to and from his home during the furlough period shall entitle said soldier, sailor, or marine to purchase a ticket from the point of departure to point of destination and return at the rate of 1 cent per mile, and on presentation of such certificate on which such ticket has been issued the railroad or steamship company issuing such ticket shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States the difference between the amount paid for such ticket at the rate of 1 cent per mile and the regular scheduled rate for such ticket.

"The sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this paragraph."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 14 of the bill, for the purpose of offering a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to page 14 of the bill for the purpose of offering a committee amendment.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to say to the Chair and the committee that I have an amendment to offer on page 63. By returning to page 14 I want it understood that I am not to lose my right to offer my amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman would, unless he got unanimous consent.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, let us hear read the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 22, after the word "officers," strike out the words "mine planter service."

Mr. KAHN. I want to say that in view of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] desires to offer an amendment on page 63 of the bill, I will withhold my unanimous-consent request until his amendment can be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. KEARNS. My amendment is, on page 63, line 7, after the word "work," strike out the semicolon and insert a period and strike out all that follows, down to and including line 11.

Mr. KAHN. We have passed that paragraph.

Mr. KEARNS. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to offer his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 7, after the word "work," strike out the semicolon and insert a period and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KAHN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 14 for the purpose of offering the amendment which has been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California to return to page 14 for the purpose of offering the amendment which has been reported?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman's motion is to strike out the words "mine planter service."

Mr. KAHN. Yes; and the reason is this: Under the reorganization bill about 1,500 warrant officers are provided for. We have only about 120 warrant officers in the service at present. The appropriation contemplates the passage of the Army reorganization bill before the beginning of the fiscal year, and this would limit it to those in the mine-planter service.

Mr. GARD. This appropriation would be much too large.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; unless the reorganization bill is passed, and we confidently expect that the bill will be passed, so that it can take effect at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. GARD. This is to take care of the increase provided for in the reorganization bill?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from California think it is the proper way to proceed to presume that legislation will be enacted and that it will make it necessary to spend a million dollars?

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that in preparing the appropriation bill the committee took into consideration in many instances provisions of law in the Army reorganization bill and saved money by doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 40, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 40 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13587, the Army appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. FIELDS. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Does any Member who is opposed to the bill desire to offer a motion to recommit? If not, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FIELDS moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions that it report the same back forthwith with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended in payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall issue, or cause to be issued, any order, written or verbal, preventing social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of said Army while not on military duty, when such order was not authorized by law, or general Executive order: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to an officer who shall have acted in obedience to the mandates of his superior."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion to recommit.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to state the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, this matter was offered in Committee of the Whole as an amendment to the pending bill. The point of order was made upon the amendment being offered, and the Chairman of the committee declared that the amendment was not in order. I submit that it is new legislation, that it is not germane to the bill, and is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard. The gentleman is entirely wrong. This is not the proposition that was offered yesterday. This proposition eliminates the feature upon which the ruling of the Chair on yesterday was based. This provides a limitation upon an officer only to the extent that it prohibits him from issuing an order when such an order is not authorized by law or by general executive order. The amendment yesterday was not drawn in that form. The amendment provided a limitation or inhibition against the issuing of such an order, regardless of law or regulation, but that feature has been eliminated from this motion to recommit.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman offer this as a limitation on the appropriation?

Mr. FIELDS. I do.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How does the gentleman define the extent of the limitation when it is in such nebulous words as "social intercourse"? What is the definite, fixed, and particular basis of it?

Mr. FIELDS. If we get this in, we can fix a process for defining it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But I do not want to get it in until it is fixed.

Mr. FIELDS. The Comptroller of the Treasury will pass on it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We do not want to get this in until we know what it means.

Mr. FIELDS. We want to prevent this pernicious practice in the Army of officers posting up notices here and there that will prevent privates from attending church or a theater or a public gathering because an officer happens to be there. That is the object of this amendment.

That practice is pernicious, undemocratic, and has no place in the Military Establishment or any other establishment of this country.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. I am answering the gentleman's question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am trying to get at what the gentleman wants in here that is definite legislation.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman propounds a question and the gentleman would not deprive me of the privilege of answering it, would he?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The point about the thing, to my mind, is that if you are going to have a limitation upon the expenditure of money, the limitation ought to be definite enough so as to be understood, and if anyone can explain what there may be about the words "social intercourse" to establish a definite premise for a limitation upon the expenditure of money, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the Chair care to hear any further argument in support of the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to distinguish, it seems to me, this amendment offered in the form in which it is offered and the one in which it was offered yesterday. Under the guise of a limitation, it is a change of existing law. While it may not specifically change existing law, it does limit the discretion of an officer who is given that discretion by existing law. This precise point was argued yesterday and ruled upon by the Chair, the Chair thereby overruling the decision of a former occupant of the chair, so that the Speaker in this case, while overruling the decision of a former occupant, will be sustaining the decision of a very recent occupant. I think, Mr. Speaker, that a perusal of this amendment will show that it absolutely limits the discretion granted by law to certain officers, and therefore it is not a limitation.

Mr. FIELDS. It specifically states when not authorized by law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is not a limitation in the proper sense at all. It is the kind of attempt that is indulged in frequently to get legislation of some sort upon an appropriation bill. I think it is one of the vices of this House that legislation on appropriation bills should be permitted except in the most rare instances. There are two forms that are usually used, one under the so-called Holman rule, and one under the so-called limitation rule. This amendment offered by the gentleman is not a limitation at all but specific instructions as to how an officer shall fulfill his duty, and hence the point of order made by the gentleman from California is good.

The SPEAKER. It is not the province of the Chair to rule as to the wisdom of a provision. This motion, as the Chair sees it, simply provides that no funds shall be used for the payment for the salary of an officer who shall issue an order which is not authorized by law or by Executive order. It might appear that inasmuch as an officer had no right to issue such an order, any such provision was superfluous and useless. But the Chair has nothing to do with the wisdom or effect of the motion, but only considers whether it is in order, and presumes the gentleman from Kentucky has presented the motion in this form in order to avoid the decision of yesterday by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Whether or not the amendment as now drawn will have any effect, the Chair does not see how this is subject to the point of order, inasmuch as it simply says that an officer shall not perform an act which he is not authorized by law to perform. This relieves it of the objection made in committee and sustained by the Chairman then. So the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FIELDS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 56.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. FIELDS. If I do not lose my rights.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman will have the right always to make the point of no quorum later. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has a proposition that he desires to bring up for the accommodation of the Speaker, I will say, and if an arrangement can be made whereby the gentleman—of course the previous question has been ordered—can have unanimous consent to make such an arrangement——

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FIELDS. I am willing for the accommodation of the gentleman to withhold my motion if I shall not lose my right.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I beg pardon; I withdraw it.

APPOINTMENT OF A SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a privileged resolution at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to offer a privileged resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let us have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 524.

Resolved, That section 7 of Rule I be amended so as to read:

"He shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond three legislative days."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, at present the rules of the House provide that the Speaker may designate any Member of the House to perform the duties of the Chair over one legislative day, or over one adjournment. This provides that that substitution may be made for three days. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Rules and is for the accommodation of the Speaker. I think it is a wise provision to make in the rules.

Mr. GARD. It is a change in the written rules of the House. Do I understand you to say that it is a unanimous report?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it for three days or any time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is a permanent change in the rules—to substitute three days for one day in the rules of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is a good idea, of course.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The matter has been under consideration by the Committee on Rules for a considerable time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent for a minute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for a minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. I think that in order to avoid any possible confusion in the future touching the matter that has just passed the House, perhaps it would be well for the Members to understand that all that was asked by the Speaker and all that this change in the rules proposes to authorize is simply the appointment of an occupant of the chair for three legislative days unless the Speaker should sooner return. That will not authorize, as the Committee on Rules construed it, the signing of bills or resolutions or performing other functions of the Chair than the presiding functions without a special resolution of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] agree to that interpretation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The "gentleman from Kansas" certainly does; yes. [Laughter.]

MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. The question is on the motion to recommit. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 105, answered "present" 1, not voting 159, as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 17, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire to come to the tasks of this day with the inspiration of Thy name in our hearts, and to discharge the duties of the day with the power that comes to us with the touch of God upon our lives. May we not forget our divine obligations to-day. May we ever be lifting our hearts toward Thee. Abide with us as our guide and counselor and friend. May the work of the day advance the interests of the kingdom of righteousness and peace among men. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1920.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. SMOOT thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer for the day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, April 15, 1920, when, on request of Mr. WADSWORTH and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 1005. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa; and

S. 1222. An act for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial from the executive council of the National Civic Federation, New York City, comprised of Alton B. Parker, president; Samuel Gompers, vice president; V. Everit Macy, treasurer; Ralph M. Easley, chairman executive council; John Hays Hammond, commercial department, regulation of industrial corporations; William Jay Schieffelin, chairman committee on national defense; Louis A. Coolidge, chairman welfare department; Francis R. Mayer, chairman industrial training department; Miss Maud Wetmore, chairman woman's department; Louis B. Schram, chairman industrial accidents prevention department; A. J. Porter, chairman minimum wage commission; August Belmont, chairman workmen's compensation department; Warren S. Stone, chairman social insurance department; Emerson McMillin, chairman department for the regulation of public utilities; George W. Perkins, chairman department on profit sharing; Vincent Astor, chairman food and drugs department; Jeremiah W. Jenks, chairman department on industrial mediation; Talcott Williams, chairman industrial economics department; William R. Wilcox, chairman department on pensions; Gertrude Beeks Easley, secretary executive council; and D. L. Cease, secretary the National Civic Federation, remonstrating against the recognition of the Russian Soviet Government by the Government of the United States. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Orleans, La., praying for the repeal of the so-called Volstead law, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pittsford, Vt., praying for the recognition of the republic of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of sundry veterans of the Spanish-American War, inmates of the Soldiers' Home, Sawtelle, Calif., praying for the passage of the so-called Sells bill to pension soldiers of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Sebastopol Post, No. 39, American Legion, of Sebastopol, Calif., praying for the passage of the so-called Davey sedition bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Birchdale Farmers' Union, of Sauk Center, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for collective bargaining, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4238) relating to street car fares in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4239) providing for the reclassification of the hull and boiler inspectors of the collection district comprising Portland, Oreg.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 4240) granting an increase of pension to Byron Cuppernull (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4241) granting a pension to Thomas B. Beall; and

A bill (S. 4242) granting a pension to Delphine Chapin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4243) to extend the provisions of the retirement law for the Lighthouse Service to include Joseph P. Groux, former keeper of the Chefuncte River Range Light Station, Louisiana; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 4244) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to J. D. Calhoun, of Lincoln Parish, La., certain lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4245) granting an increase of pension to James S. Pendergast (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4246) granting a pension to William B. Lewis (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4247) granting a pension to Edgar L. Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

THE MEXICAN SITUATION.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, my colleague and I have received telegrams touching the Mexican situation. I should like to read one to the Senate.

It is as follows:

Associated Press dispatch states request made to Washington that Mexican troops be allowed transportation through Arizona. Granting that request will be against interest of United States and Americans in Mexico. We urge you make every effort to prevent Mexican troop movement through Arizona.

NOGALES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Mr. President, I am heartily in sympathy with the Nogales Chamber of Commerce which sends this dispatch to us.

I shall take only a minute. In the investigations on the border we found that in every particular the Carranza government has stood against every interest of the United States. While he has been guarding the border with his own men he has never returned a single one who has committed a depredation in the United States who has gotten across into Mexico. His own soldiers in his own uniform were killed in committing depredations in our country, and now the request is made of the United States to be permitted to send troops through the State of Arizona to assail the only one of the States of the Republic of Mexico that has been apparently in any sympathy with the efforts of the United States to bring about peace and order in that Republic.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I merely rose to suggest that I think the Senator from Arizona is making his address at the wrong end of the Avenue.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have attended to that already. As far as I could, I left my protest with the office of the Secretary of State by phone immediately on receipt of the telegram. I feel confidence in the State Department, and I merely wish publicly to call the attention of the country to the protest of the people of Arizona against sending Carranza soldiers through the State of Arizona for the purpose of subduing, killing, and carrying on, probably, in the State of Sonora the same depredations which they have carried on against their own people wherever they have found them out of sympathy with the Carranza government. Knowing something of the conditions in Mexico and the awful chaos existing there under the alleged Carranza government, my sympathy is with the people of Sonora, and I hope that our Government, so often contemptuously treated by Carranza, will not aid him in his efforts to brutally subdue the people of Sonora to longer wearing the yoke which his injustice and cruelty and graft have made unbearable.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, after what my esteemed colleague [Mr. SMITH] has stated nothing further need be said, because he has so thoroughly covered the ground, and I shall detain the Senate only for a moment on this subject.

My colleague and I have been to the War Department so many times that I shall not attempt to enumerate them, urging the War Department to maintain an adequate force of troops on the Mexican border, so that the lives and property of citizens of the United States, in the United States, at least, may be safe on the soil of their own country. We have asked for that, and I now warn the War Department that they have a totally inadequate number of troops on the Mexican border. The dispatches announce—and my colleague and I both have telegrams from Arizona to the same effect—that the Department of State is considering the advisability of permitting so-called Carranza troops to pass through Arizona and attack Hermosillo, the capital of Sonora.

Arizona some few years ago was made a highway through which such marauders might pass from El Paso to Douglas to attack troops of another faction, but now it is announced that the Carranza régime, which is so debilitated that I can not refer to it as a government, has asked permission for a large number of its troops to entrain at El Paso, Tex., pass through a part of the State of Texas, pass through New Mexico, and leave the train at Douglas or Nogales, cities on the Arizona border, and proceed thence southerly to attack the forces of the provisional government of the new Republic of Sonora.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ASHURST. Just let me finish the sentence, and then I will yield.

I hope the appropriate branch of our Government will decline to permit the gang of Carranza bandits to pass through Arizona; but the Federal Government is not the only authority that has a duty in this matter; the State of Arizona has a duty to perform, and I hope the governor of that State will show true American courage and manhood and repel with force of arms any marauders or bandits who attempt to pass through Arizona on a train or otherwise. The time has come when, if Arizona is to have no protection from the Federal Government, the State is going to protect herself with her own strong, good right arm. Now I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, my purpose in interrupting the Senator from Arizona was a merciful one. I merely wanted to relieve him of his just indignation by calling his attention to the fact that the State Department has declined to issue the permit to which he has referred.

Mr. ASHURST. I am immensely relieved, and I congratulate the State Department.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I wish to say that I tried to get information this morning in reference to this matter, and I left word at the State Department as to the wishes of the people and as to my own judgment in reference to the subject. I am particularly gratified to have the information from the Senator from Pennsylvania that the State Department has declined the request of the Carranza Government.

THE BUILDING SITUATION.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment the resolution submitted by me on the 15th instant, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 350) was read, as follows:

Whereas the general construction of houses, manufacturing establishments, and buildings necessary for the development of the Nation's resources, the production of essential materials, and the amelioration of present housing conditions, was curtailed by Federal action during the war and is now seriously hampered by an unprecedented demand for consumables and luxuries which has diverted capital, labor, and materials into nonproductive or nonessential fields: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, consisting of three members of the majority party and two members of the minority party, appointed by the President of the Senate, is hereby authorized to inquire into and report to the Senate on or before December 1, 1920—

(a) The existing situation in relation to the general construction of houses, manufacturing establishments, and buildings, and the effect thereof upon other industries and upon the public welfare; and

(b) Such measures as it may deem necessary to stimulate and encourage such construction work, to encourage popular investment rather than spending, to foster private initiative in building, and to insure cooperation between labor and persons or corporations engaged in transportation, banking, or other business necessary to the development of such construction.

Such committee is hereby authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Congress, at Washington or at any other place in the United States, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ experts deemed necessary by such committee, a clerk and a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before such committee, such stenographer's service to be rendered at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, the expenses involved in carrying out the provisions of this resolution to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, just a moment. Will the Senator from New York explain the resolution? It seems to cover a large scope. Is it the intention of the Senator to have an investigation going on with the idea of encouraging building when perhaps the result will be in the future to eliminate bonds from taxation? Is that the idea?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, there is to-day in the United States a shortage of about a million homes. We need investment to-day in buildings to the extent of at least $4,000,000,000. In every large city in the country there is a crying need for homes for people to live in.

Here in the District of Columbia we passed the Saulsbury resolution and the Ball Act. In New York State and other States the legislatures have enacted laws which seek to stop the profiteering landlords, but nowhere in the United States has there been anything done to bring about a coordination or cooperation among all the elements that have to do with increasing building construction.

I have had some experience with this subject. It happens to be a profession that I have followed all my life. I have had occasion during the past year to discuss this question with men who manufacture building material, who have to do with transporting, furnishing fuel for and financing building operations.

The Senator from North Dakota has perhaps in mind a suggestion made by me in a bill recently introduced in the Senate which would relieve from taxation mortgages on real estate and bring about the introduction of some banking system which would relieve the bonds from Federal taxation of banking institutions where money is loaned for housing purposes only.

I did not have that particular thing in mind in this resolution, but I thought perhaps that the Senate of the United States ought to give some consideration to this most important subject, except perhaps the producing of food for the people, of any others that come before us.

Clothes wear out, furniture wears out, and food is consumed by the people immediately after its production, but houses last for a century, and in these days, when prices are at the peak, it is the most hazardous business in the country. It is the one big problem in the great cities of the country, and it seemed to me, in relation to labor, material, and transportation, perhaps a survey of the whole situation might better be made by a committee of this body than by any other function of the Government.

It is in the spirit of cooperating and coordinating of all these elements that I am bringing forward the resolution, and I offered it after conference with men of wide experience who are very anxious that some effort should be made to relieve the present difficult situation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CALDER. With pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall not object to the resolution, but if the Senator deems it expedient for the Government of the United States to go into the housing question throughout our entire country—has the Senator taken into consideration the fact that to-day there is not only a possibility but a probability of a shortage of food, at least a shortage of cereals, in the country? Does not the Senator think it would be of just as much importance for the Federal Government to make an investigation along those lines as along housing lines?

Mr. CALDER. I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that I think the question of supplying food for the people is a preeminent one, much more important than the subject I am discussing. The production of food comes first, but housing the people is the second.

I might say to the Senator that in this country in normal times we construct each year about $3,000,000,000 worth of houses. I think it is the second or third largest industry in the United States.

I noticed in this morning's newspapers a statement made before the Committee on Immigration of the House that we were 40 per cent short of building labor in New York City, and those men urged that we pass no more restrictive immigration laws at this time. That is a subject the committee might inquire into, and the whole matter considered in its bearing on these questions.

I repeat that I am only interested in this subject from a constructive standpoint.

I trust the Senate will bear with me for a moment longer. Recently in New York I made inquiry about some building projects in which I am interested, and found that by purchasing standard plumbing material we could save 25 per cent in some lines. So having all these things in mind, it seemed to me some good would surely come from this investigation.

Now, just one word more. Great Britain during the past 10 years has found it necessary to go into the building of houses itself. It began, first, by loaning money to builders and then, second, by subsidizing builders to build tenements for people to live in, and now the English Government is actually in the business of building houses itself. I deplore that policy. I shall stand against it here with every power I possess. It is in the interest of preventing that situation and getting everybody interested working together that I have brought forward the resolution.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution. In my opinion, however, its passage will accomplish no useful purpose, and will only emphasize the limitless power which Congress is asserting over the domestic concerns of the people. When it comes up for consideration I shall ask the Senator from New York a question or two, and briefly comment upon the provisions of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the resolution which has just been offered by the Senator from New York is quite in harmony with the views of many people nowadays with respect to the duties, powers, and functions of the Federal Government. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has repeatedly called our attention to the fact that whenever any problem exists in any of the States or in any community, redress is immediately sought at the hands of the Federal Government. If the housing situation is acute in any community, immediately the attention of the people is directed to the Federal Government and appeals are made for Congress to legislate to furnish the desired relief. No matter whether the question is sociological or political or industrial or scientific or of a purely domestic and internal character, some people immediately conceive the idea that the Federal Government, in the plenitude of its power, may relieve the situation.

My good friend, the Senator from New York, has just alluded to the fact that Great Britain, because of the lack of housing facilities, has upon a number of occasions made appropriations for the purpose of erecting homes for the people. I hope the Senator from New York does not cite that as an example to guide the American Congress or to determine the course of procedure of a Republic such as this, where its powers are limited and are only such as have been granted by the States and the people residing therein. Too often we are referred to other nations for precedents to guide us in dealing with American questions. And the American people are being led into dangerous experiments and paternalistic legislation by the heretical and destructive doctrines so constantly advocated throughout the land. The policies of kingdoms and nations whose governments are entirely different from ours are appealed to in support of legislation fiercely championed by many Americans, legislation unconstitutional and hostile to the true interests of the people and the perpetuity of free institutions.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I would say to the Senator from Utah that I propose to resist with all the power I possess, here and elsewhere, any effort on the part of anyone to induce the Congress of the United States to go into the business of supplying houses for the people. I do not believe it ought to do so; and the purpose of the proposed inquiry is to bring about cooperation between all the elements interested in constructing houses and to interest people privately in the subject, for the purpose of offsetting a movement which I know is now in progress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad to have the disclaimer of the Senator from New York. However, I fear that his resolution will encourage many people to demand that which he says he will oppose. If his resolution expressed a denial of the power of the Federal Government to enter upon the scheme of housing the population within the States, it might have some efficacy in extirpating the view which he says he will oppose, that Congress shall provide houses for the people. But it appears to me that the resolution will be regarded by many as a recognition by Congress of both its duty and its right to enter upon the stupendous work of building homes for the people of the United States.

I regard with misgivings the attitude of so many public men, as well as so many of the people, with respect to the powers and functions of the Government.

I know that it is popular with many to secure Federal aid and great appropriations for the States and for local communities. The idea of a government of limited powers is not appealing to many of our citizens. They want a "powerful" government, one without limits; one that may enter the States and destroy them and assume the responsibilities which under our form of government they have assumed.

It is so easy to appeal to Congress for appropriations for local and State concerns, and it is so easy to believe that its Treasury is inexhaustible, and that it is supplied without imposing any burden upon the people.

Mr. President, in every schoolhouse throughout this broad land there should be instructions given to the boys and girls who soon will be called upon to bear the burdens of citizenship in regard to our Constitution and the powers and duties of the States and the people within the States. They should be taught that liberty can only be preserved by men and women who are independent and who will defend individualism and local self-government.

Mr. President, I shall be very glad to have some one point to the authority that the Federal Government has to make appropriations to build houses for individuals within the States. During the war we thought, as a war measure, that we were justified in making appropriations for the purpose of constructing houses, in order that the employees of the Government might be properly cared for and render the efficient service so indispensable to carrying the country through the great war in which it was engaged; but, as I understand the Senator, the inference is drawn that there is power in the Federal Government to appropriate money for the erection of houses for private individuals in the various States.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators desiring to interrupt the Senator having the floor will please address the Chair.

Mr. CALDER. I beg the Chair's pardon. I ask permission to interrupt the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I know of no law on the statute books permitting the appropriation of money for the erection of houses by the Government. I will also say to the Senator that when such a suggestion came during the course of the war I resisted it, because I believed then that the great war manufacturing plants of the country could provide their own housing.

I spoke then against it, and I will protest if it is ever attempted here. It is to prevent that very contingency that the resolution is introduced, and I am hopeful that will be the result of the inquiry to be made.

Mr. KING. The Senator has referred, and I also referred a moment ago, to appropriations made during the war for housing purposes. I then shared the views that were entertained by the Senator, and I felt that the appropriations which we were making at that time were unnecessary. I believe that such appropriations have resulted in waste and in extravagance and failed to accomplish any beneficial purpose. It is possible that some of the houses constructed in the city of Washington may have served a useful purpose, and yet I reserve my judgment with respect to that matter. But, Mr. President, I again invite attention to the heresy that is now so prevalent in the United States. I can not quite understand the reason why the distinguished Senator from New York offers this resolution; I do not quite understand what good he seeks to accomplish by the resolution or what avenues may be opened up legitimately or what instrumentalities may be invoked properly as a result of this resolution. Does the Senator think that the result of the proposed investigation will lead to the appropriation by Congress of money to the States or to corporations or to private individuals in the nature of loans to aid the States or corporations or individuals in the construction of houses?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. In reply to the Senator's statement, I will say that I have no such notion, and I shall oppose vigorously any effort on the part of anyone to have the Federal Government build houses in the several States or to lend money for home building. The purpose of the proposed inquiry is to obtain information in order to coordinate, if possible, all the elements that go into the construction of buildings; to secure cooperation, if we can, on the part of those who manufacture building materials, on the part of those who transport building material, on the part of the producers of fuel needed in the manufacture of building material, and on the part of labor and of capital.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me further, the Federal Government is responsible largely for the condition in which we find ourselves to-day. During the year 1917 the Treasury Department advised against building construction; during the year 1918 the War Industries Board forbade building construction. The purpose of this action was well intended, for it was believed that such action would tend to furnish labor and capital and material for war purposes. I felt then that it was not wise to take such action, that building construction was an important and essential business that should not have been stopped. The Government diverted business from its normal channels, so that many of those who formerly labored in connection with building construction went into other lines. We have not yet gotten back to normal times. It is my opinion that possibly as the result of the inquiry which will be made, and as a result of the information which will be obtained, nation wide in its scope, people may be induced to work again in the way they ought to work. I want to have a real, helpful, constructive inquiry that will accomplish the very object for which the Senator properly preaches on this floor.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator what he expects to be the result of the proposed investigation? What information does he seek? And, if I may be permitted to make a further suggestion, so that the Senator will get my attitude in respect to this matter, we know now, as the Senator has explained, that there is a great shortage in the United States of housing facilities; we know that during the war, as the Senator has said, capital was so necessary for the prosecution of the war that many industries were interdicted by Federal agencies and Federal instrumentalities. Whether that interdiction was wise or not, men, of course, will have various opinions, but the people know that they need more homes; men who have money to loan know that there is a shortage of houses. The investors, whether corporations or trust companies or individuals, know that there is a shortage of houses, and they know that real estate investments are frequently highly profitable. There is full information upon these matters, and, if not, the investors could quietly assemble the data bearing upon these and cognate questions. Does the Senator think that any information that this committee might obtain would further elucidate these questions or supply more convincing proof to the people of the country of the shortage of houses in the various municipalities and States? The people know the facts about the shortage of labor, the high prices demanded for building materials, the wages paid to the various crafts employed in building operations. They know the condition of the money market, the rental charges, the profits or losses on real estate investments. What is then to be gained by an investigation? Moreover, what can Congress do when the information is furnished which this resolution calls for?

What is proposed shall be done with the results of the investigation? Will Congress be asked to aid in the building of houses, or loan Federal funds to private persons? Nothing concrete or tangible is sought by this resolution, and it will be regarded as an entering wedge for Federal aid for housing purposes. The Senator knows that wherever capital sees a broad field that promises adequate returns for investment money will go there. There was a time when the surplus money available for investment went into railroads; at one time it went into irrigation projects; and so, from time to time, the money seeking invesment is diverted from one channel into another. Wherever the owner of money finds that he can invest it to advantage, there he will make the investment. If the erection of houses promises adequate returns to the landlord, money will be invested in the construction of houses.

How does the Senator think this committee is going to relieve the situation? What can it report that will relieve the situation? We know the shortage of houses. We know the shortage of labor. We know the acute conditions that prevail in many of the avenues of our Government. Now, what can the Senator suggest may be done in a concrete way to relieve the situation?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, there is to-day a shortage of building material of every character. There is a shortage of railroad facilities to transport building material. There is a shortage of fuel necessary for the manufacture of building material; and there is great need of additional labor for the construction of buildings. Although some building investments are attractive, there is a great shortage of money to finance building operations. I will say to the Senator from Utah that men of great wealth who formerly invested some part of their means in mortgages on real estate are rapidly calling in these mortgages, the reason being that the high income and excess-profits taxes on large incomes have reduced the net income on these investments to the neighborhood of 2 per cent, so that much money that formerly went into mortgages is now being invested in State and county bonds, for these securities are exempt from all Federal taxes.

The proper assembling of this information, a complete survey of the Nation's housing needs and of its building-material possibilities, can be accomplished by a committee of this body better, it seems to me, than by any other instrumentality in the country. There is some dignity to an inquiry by this body. If this information can be obtained, if the facts can be gotten together, it will be a source of help, it seems to me; and I may say, Mr. President, that in this view I am borne out by the opinion of gentlemen engaged in the construction business. Many of them have discussed the matter with me and urged that some such information be gotten together, so that we might cooperate with all the different interests and bring about a return to normal times.

If the Senator will permit me, I have made some study of this subject. To-day it costs 75 per cent more to build a house than last year and 150 per cent higher than prewar prices.

Perhaps the Senator is right; perhaps this investigation will accomplish no good purpose at all, but it seems to me it is worth trying. There is a pressing demand for homes for people to live in; this body can do no better work than to try to help relieve the situation. That is my purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senator from New York could justify the passage of this resolution, and I have listened sympathetically to the suggestions which he has made; but I confess that he has furnished, at least to my mind, no satisfactory reason that the passage of this resolution will serve any useful purpose.

I am told that in the Senator's State many tenants are being held up, not so much by the original landlords, the builders of the houses, but by corporations recently organized, which have taken over long-term leases from the owners of tenement houses, apartments, and so forth, which have been leased to and are occupied by thousands of families. These corporations as soon as they acquire control of these properties increase the rents in an extortionate way. It is a sort of a hold-up game that is being practiced, I am told, in the Senator's own State.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think that defeating or stopping this resolution will cure that condition?

Mr. KING. Oh, no; obviously not. I am merely alluding to that for the purpose of showing how unimportant this resolution will be with respect to solving this question. The Legislature of the State of New York has been in session for some time, and many delegations of citizens have appeared before the legislature for the purpose of securing remedial legislation. Let me add, the State has a right to deal with its domestic affairs, and the people of New York went to the body which has authority to consider this question.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the State has passed legislation in connection with the subject to which the Senator refers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the various States of the Union should consider this question. They have power to deal with their domestic problems; that power is denied, under our form of government, to the Federal Government. I consider the power of the States to adopt measures that will aid in the construction of houses to take care of the people within their borders. Many will think it savors too much of socialism, and yet, if the States desire, and are not hampered by any limitations in their constitutions, they may enact measures which will aid in the building of homes for their citizens.

When, however, it comes to devolving upon the Federal Government obligations and duties which rest upon local communities and upon the States, it seems to me that we are going too far. We may assemble information as to the shortage of houses in the United States. That can be very readily obtained by communicating with the various State agencies. The number of houses that are lacking in order properly to shelter the people can be very readily ascertained, and doubtless it is known by real estate investors in the various States. It is known that prices are high. The Senator has alluded to the price of fuel. The shortage of fuel is known, and the cause of the shortage of fuel. I can not conceive of any investigation that can be made that will be corrective, or that will enable the States or individuals—unless the Federal Government shall make an appropriation, and I deny its power—to correct the situation against which the Senator inveighs.

Mr. President, it seems to be the chief duty of Congress to investigate not national questions and concerns only but the most puerile and unimportant matters. Congress is supposed to be the guardian of the people—their lives and fortunes and domestic concerns. It may cross every threshold, take cognizance of every individual, order his life, and supervise his conduct.

We are no longer citizens of States. We no longer, under this new creed, owe allegiance to any State. Indeed, we no longer may order our own lives. The National Government is the omnipotent power which controls us and with increasing power rules individuals and undermines States.

The war has dislocated business, interrupted the orderly processes of peace. There is confusion in our thoughts as well as in our lives. We are still suffering from shell shock and hysteria. This is an hour for calm and rational thinking and for sane and patriotic action. More than ever we should defend the rights of the individuals and the States. We should weigh carefully the experiments and activities of the General Government. We want a democracy, not a paternalism.

Mr. President, this resolution, of course, will pass. It is in harmony with the views of the new federalism which is sweeping the country and which threatens to destroy the States and build up a centralized bureaucratic tyranny, whose oppressive hand will extend to every corner of the land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Senator from New York.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I submitted yesterday relating to the street car situation in the District of Columbia may be passed over without prejudice and remain on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. [At 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.] The morning business is closed.

DUTY ON PRINT PAPER.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are two bills upon the calendar which ought to be passed, and I do not believe they will lead to any discussion whatever. One is a bill to amend the revenue act so as to allow print paper to come into the United States free up to the value of 8 cents a pound. They are both House bills, and there is really a necessity for their passage or I would not ask at this time that they should be considered. I want to say, however, that if they lead to any discussion whatever, I will withdraw the bills from consideration. I am quite sure, however, the Senate will realize the necessity of the early passage of the bills. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12260) to amend section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 12260. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 600. That paragraph 322, schedule M, and paragraph 567 of the free list of the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1913, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"'322. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued above 8 cents per pound, 12 per cent ad valorem: Provided, however, That if any country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government shall impose any export duty, export license fee, or other charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, there shall be imposed upon printing paper, valued above 8 cents per pound, when imported either directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government, an additional duty equal to the amount of the highest export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government, upon either printing paper or upon an amount of wood pulp or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper.

"'567. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not above 8 cents per pound, decalcomania paper not printed.'"

SEC. 2. That this act shall expire by limitation at the end of two years from the date of its passage, and section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," as in effect prior to the passage of this act, shall again become operative in its stead.

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It will take just a moment. The only change in the existing law is that it strikes out "5 cents per pound" and inserts "8 cents per pound." In other words, the value of print paper in foreign countries exceeds now 5 cents per pound, and with this amendment increasing the amount to 8 cents a pound print paper from some countries, we hope, will come into the United States free, as the law provides now for paper below 5 cents a pound. This provision, however, is limited to only two years. That is all the change it is proposed to make in the existing law.

Mr. KING. Why would it not be a wise legislative enactment, in view of the great scarcity of print paper, and indeed all forms of paper in the United States, to remove all restrictions?

Mr. SMOOT. If we can remove the shortage of print paper, then there will be paper stock to take care of the making of other classes of paper. I have a diagram in my desk here showing the wonderful increase there is in the consumption of print paper. One can hardly realize what it is. I am afraid we can not get sufficient print paper from foreign countries in any considerable quantity, but if we can it will relieve the situation just as much as if we changed the entire law affecting the importation of all kinds of paper.

There are some kinds of paper now exported from the United States of the better grades upon which I have sometimes thought there ought to be placed an embargo. But there is a question, of course, in the mind of the officers of the department, and I think of all Senators and Representatives, too, as to whether we really have the power to place an embargo upon the exportation, unless it be done under the war power.

Mr. KING. I do not care to enter into a discussion of the powers of the Federal Government to place embargoes upon exports. That question was very fully considered more than a hundred years ago, and upon a number of occasions the power was asserted by men of very distinguished ability, and those who had to do with laying the foundations of the Republic.

Some time ago the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] invited the attention of the Congress and the country to this important question of paper in all of its phases. I opposed the bill which he then brought forward, because I felt that it was projecting the Federal Government into private business, and that it would not accomplish the end in view.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this would be a good time for us to apply a little common sense to the question of importations. There is not sufficient paper manufactured in the United States. I am not sure whether those who are engaged in the manufacture of paper are charging too high a price for the product, but my information is that they are. For my part, I would like to see paper placed upon the free list, so that we may bring into the United States as much paper as we possibly can for the imperative needs of the public. I regret that this bill does not go a little further.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF UNFAIR FOREIGN COMPETITION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 10918, an act to provide revenue and encourage domestic industries by the elimination, through the assessment of special duties, of unfair foreign competition, and for other purposes. This is the antidumping bill. The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance, and the object of the bill is to prohibit the dumping of goods in the United States at a price less than the prices for which they are sold in foreign countries.

The immediate need of the bill, however, Mr. President, is to prevent the dumping into the United States of airships which have been purchased from England, some ten thousand of them, some of which are on the way now. I understand they were purchased of the English Government by a concern which is advertising them for sale from one end of this country to the other, and not only in this country, but in all parts of the world. There are 10,000 planes; there are engines for nearly 30,000; and if they are dumped into this country under present conditions we might just as well abandon the making of American planes until they are all disposed of.

If there is any objection to the present consideration of the bill, or if it is going to lead to any discussion, I will not take the time of the Senate, because I know the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] desires to bring up the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. I think I shall object to the present consideration of the bill. I should like to have an opportunity to investigate it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I withdraw the request.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11892, the river and harbor appropriation bill. It is doubtful if a quorum could be obtained if a quorum call were made at any time to-day. So it is my purpose to proceed with the consideration of the bill and have adopted such amendments of the committee as can be adopted without any special objection, and any provision which any Senator desires passed over there will be consent given for that purpose.

Mr. KING. I did not hear fully the Senator's statement. Is this the first consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have proceeded a part of the way with the bill. Some amendments have been passed over.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator expect to have the bill passed to-day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No. As I said, I expect to have the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill, and any provision that any Senator desires to have passed over will be passed over, and any provision for the consideration of which any Senator would like to have a quorum will be passed over. So my only hope to-day is that amendments to which there is no special objection can be adopted, and then when we get the bill up again we will know what particular propositions are at issue.

Mr. KING. I have been absent for several days. I would like to have the attention of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. If the request of the Senator from Washington has his approval I will be very glad to accede to it.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that the bill has been under discussion here during his absence. There was one provision at least to raise the amount appropriated under the bill from 12 million to 20, which has gone over. So there will be no vote on that amendment to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it would take very long for the Secretary to read the amendments which have been reported by the committee. I understand the Senator from Washington to state that that is all he desires at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall not try to have any action taken on any provision to which any Senator objects and asks to have go over.

Mr. KING. I make no objection to the Senator's request.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the committee on page 7, to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23.

VALUE OF COTTON CONTRACTS.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 15, and in it there appears this item from the New Orleans Times-Picayune:

> Cotton grower and cotton spinner again have clashed, and Senator COMER, himself one of the Nation's wily spinners, is attempting further to fasten upon our great crop the fetters of a "spinners' contract." Thereupon the cotton trade, representing farmer and cotton banker, cotton factor, and cotton dealer of the exchanges, are up in arms to defend their very reasonable and logical position.
>
> Senator COMER'S assault is in the form of a "rider" to the Agricultural bill, designated as the "Comer rider," which, if adopted, will reduce the volume of tenderable cotton by many hundred thousand bales and will throw that amount of useful, spinable cotton into the class of low grades, refused admission to the exchanges and deprived of the "hedge" protection which has such great importance in all cotton dealings.

I read now from a circular issued by H. & B. Beers Cotton Co., a cotton factor, member of the New Orleans exchange:

> The absurdity of eliminating the grades above mentioned from delivery on contract is shown by the fact that middling tinged, which is at present untenderable, sells to-day at 475 points higher than low middling white, which is tenderable, or $23.75 per bale in excess.
>
> Notwithstanding the elimination in March, 1919, of the preceding grades and the narrowing thereby of a free market for the producer, the Comer "rider" now proposes to eliminate 50 per cent of the grades below middling now tenderable, which will still further restrict the amount of merchantable and spinnable cotton available for deliveries on contract to the absolute and certain detriment of the producer.
>
> The Comer amendment would, if adopted, make the contract entirely unsatisfactory to all interests except the spinner, who would be privileged to demand the best of grades on contract, thereby depriving the market of an outlet for the low grades, leaving the farmer, the southern spot holder, southern banks and merchants to carry the bag. In a word, the Comer amendment would place the southern cotton industry at the mercy of American and European spinners.
> In other words, it would outlaw and deprive of price insurance 75 per cent to 80 per cent of low-grade merchantable and spinnable cotton raised by the farmers, and make it impossible for them to find a ready market for their product.

In answer both to the statement of the Times-Picayune, New Orleans, and Messrs. H. & B. Beers Cotton Co., New Orleans, will state that I am a spinner; that our company has 200,000 spindles in active operations, and we consume 60,000 bales cotton, and in the different mills (we have eight) we manufacture all grades, from ordinary to strict good middling. Will further state that we have handled 25,000 bales cotton contracts within the past season as hedges; that we have never demanded or received a bale through the exchange, but each and every time have bought the spot cotton in the spot market and sold the hedges when cotton was so bought, and that is the ultimate design of the exchange.

Mark you, we ourselves have bought 25,000 bales as hedges through the exchanges, and in this business we have not received one single solitary bale of cotton. It was not intended we should receive a bale. We bought the spot cotton and sold the hedges.

Any proposition which makes the exchanges the protector of the farmer as against the spinner is preposterous. The spinner is the buyer and consumer of cotton and not the exchanges, and anybody can understand how the spinner had rather have a firm and advancing cotton market than a vacillating declining market. The buyers of goods are possibly the smartest people in the world, and whoever knew or heard of one of them placing a big contract on a vacillating or declining market. A spinner's contract, meaning by that one in which the spinner has the advantage over the farmer and dealer, is impossible. An exchange contract is protective alike to every legitimate handler of cotton, including the farmer, the dealer, the spinner; their interests are identical, and it is impossible to separate them. The Messrs. Beers state that the Comer amendment "would place the southern cotton industry at the mercy of American and European spinners," as it would give them all the choice cotton, leaving the merchants, farmers, and bankers to hold the bag, which is supposed to be full of low grade, undesirable cotton. Messrs. Beers should know that the spinners, both English and American, go on the market and buy the spot cotton of such grades as they can use, making such goods as their customers demand, notwithstanding the higher grades have not been used in the exchanges for years.

The exchanges have not sold a bale of middling cotton in years. They do not intend to sell that kind of cotton. There has not been any middling or above delivered to the exchanges for years. I say notwithstanding this, through the demand of the spinners for that class of cotton, the high grades are much higher relatively than the low grades which do pass through the exchanges.

The low grades pass through the exchange, and they themselves say it is too low, too comparatively low. The high grades do not pass through the exchanges at all. The price is made by the demand, just like all other prices on all commodities are made.

The spinners in the largest measure are not demanding a bale through the exchanges, and their usufruct, as I have stated in my own case, is a hedge. Our company yesterday and to-day closed out 5,000 Mays which we were carrying as a hedge, and bought advance months as a further hedge. There was not a bale of exchange cotton, good, bad, or indifferent, delivered.

We use the exchanges as they are; yes, as explained in a previous speech, we use them as a hedge; but there is no gainsaying the fact that it would be incomparably better hedge if it was a reliable, stabilized value hedge, and that is all we ask.

The question again is, Is it safe to let the exchanges write the laws governing their relation to the public? Would it not be in the highest degree prudent to write the laws governing the public's relation to this big business, protecting the people, free from exchange environment and dictation?

Among the "buggers" used by the exchange propagandist is, "Cotton is now high, and the amendment might be followed by decline." In answer, the gamblers on the exchange, with their power to assemble and tender low grade, have tried this season time and again to break the market, but have been defeated by the strength of the spot holders. This, I say, with the assembly of the whole contract tenderable in low grades. How much less could they make a fictitious market when half of the contract is high grade? Conditions being equal, it is easy to prophesy that with the amendment in operation the exchange market will be relatively higher. At any rate, the spot holders will be in a stronger position. It is also claimed that it will hurt cotton as a banking proposition. On the contrary, just as you get rid of the fictitious variations on the exchange prices the contract will be stabilized and the collateral will be more veritable. Who ever heard of a bank objecting to a more stable collateral?

In the New York Exchange, February 20, March cotton was 36.52; March 24 it was 43.18. To-day May cotton, New York, is 42.25. For the first time in years the spot market has escaped the thralldom of the exchange market and is writing records of its own value. This is what the amendment is designed to accomplish in all futures contracts, that exchange values should approximate spot values; that any legitimate dealer should hesitate it is difficult to understand. To escape the fictitious exchange records, substituting value record, can hurt no legitimate interest no matter what the grade may be.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. COMER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator if it is his idea that in case his amendment becomes law, restricting or giving the buyer the option of accepting 50 per cent of his contract, namely, 25,000 pounds of lint cotton above middling, that those purchasing the contract will not demand specific delivery, but will simply use it as a hedge, as they do now, but that the effect on the exchanges of this restrictive delivery, knowing that in case they are called for specific delivery they would have to deliver at least 50 per cent of that character of cotton that the Senator claims has not been heretofore carried, would tend to stabilize the relationship between the future market and the spot market and to make the exchange a true reflection of the actual value of the thing dealt in.

Mr. COMER. The Senator has the question exactly right. I want to compliment the Senator. That is exactly what is intended to accomplish by the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The reason why I ask that question is that the amendment that I had introduced and which was agreed to restricting delivery to 10 grades was for that very identical purpose; but unfortunately the Government of the United States, through some one's advice, issued an order during the war that no goods made from cotton for Government account should be made from any grades below middling. The public was not advised of the fact, as the Senator from Alabama is advised of the fact, that, barring waste, which is greater in low grades on account of foreign substances, having stayed in the field and there being more or less trash and dirt, the tensile strength and the cloth-making qualities of the present discredited lower grades, they are quite as valuable as those of the higher grades; but that has nothing to do with the psychology of the American public to-day, because from time immemorial the public has been educated to believe that the difference between middling and low middling and strict low middling in the lower grades, and strict middling, good middling, and strict good middling in the upper grades, is so great as to warrant this arbitrary fixing of the difference. That being the fact, it was necessary, in order to protect the public, to restrict the exchanges to delivery of such grades as the mills and the dealers would readily take up, so that they could not pile up a lot of dog-tail and snap at every point they could to absolutely control the prices on every grade.

As to the proposed amendment of the Senator, just whether or not it will have the effect that he desires and that seems to be indicated is problematical. Perhaps it would have been better if, instead of the 10 grades they had been restricted to in the first instance, as far as hedging is concerned, to have restricted them, as it is purely a hedging business that the exchanges do, in New Orleans to a greater extent than they do even in New York, and even there spot business is more or less divorced from the hedging exchange, and it is done by the spot merchants, and their exchange simply reflects the condition of the market from which the types from the table are selected.

But I wish to ask the Senator again, as I did in the first instance, if he does really think as a practical mill man that this difference between spot and future, which has misled the public heretofore, because here is May, June, July, August, and September, all the future months, quoted from about 2 to 3 or 4 cents under spot market when they know that out of the spot supply they have to supply these markets—that is, they know they can be called to a specific fulfillment out of certain grades to at least 50 per cent, and then it will have a tendency to draw the spots and futures together and bring about what we desire, and that is that the future market which must be supplied out of the present supply should be at a premium rather than at a discount. I am contending that May, June, and July cotton, the future cotton, ought to be higher than the present spot cotton if there is going to be a shortage in supply, whereas now they are lower. The Senator has introduced the amendment hoping that that condition will come about.

Mr. COMER. The Senator's reasoning is along the correct line. The amendment simply intends to carry out the full purpose of the Smith-Lever bill of last year, and that is to stabilize contracts on spot cotton. The Senator put in 10 grades last year. Under the usufruct of the exchange more than half of it is outlawed—I am using their own expression; in other words, middling and above are never tendered in an exchange contract, and yet you intended it to be so used because you put in the 10 grades. You never intended that they should go and select only the very lowest, and you never intended that by doing so they could weaken the contract. You intended to make the contract represent the market, and that is what the contract should be. Every contract that you buy should fairly represent or reflect the commercial spot market value. That is all that is intended to be accomplished by this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to ask the Senator another question, and then I will not interrupt him further. I do not know just in what condition the amendment now is in conference, but studying the Senator's amendment closely, I wondered if it would not have been improved, as they now admit, upon grades on delivery if the amendment had read that the buyer should have the option to demand 50 per cent of the contract that he purchased at his option out of the 10 grades that are admissible.

The reason I suggest that is that arbitrarily fixing middling and above as his optional ground, and selling middling and below as his option of ground, the buyer being the bull ordinarily and the seller the bear, it has a tendency in the minds of the public to take the grades that the buyers may not have an option on and put them in that category where it will have the effect of still further widening the differences between the grades; whereas, if the amendment had read that the buyer should have the option to select 50 per cent of the 10 admissible grades at his option, perhaps it would not have had that effect, and yet would have served the very purpose that the Senator has in view.

Mr. COMER. I understand thoroughly what the Senator states; but the law is not just that way. The Government passes on all the grades that are offered to be delivered on contracts. Contract cotton has to be certificated by the Government. They certificate it in lots of 100 bales; and if the amendment is passed, it will be certificated, one-half of it middling and above, at the seller's option, and one-half at the seller's option from any one or combination of the 10 standard grades. If the law had been made as the Senator suggests, they could not have the certificated stock. They have to be ready to deliver. Under the law the seller has the option of tendering the cotton any time between the 24th of the preceding month and the 24th of the month itself.

The amendment is intended to accomplish the purposes of the Senator's very wise bill. If the amendment goes through and half of the delivery is limited to middling, one can easily understand that the basis price then will be middling; that it will not be a composite price, that it will be the basis middling, the cotton middling price.

The telegram I am about to read was received at Scottsboro, Ala., and I ask Senators to listen to it:

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Have all your merchants, farmers, and bankers to address your Senators and Representatives, that such important legislation as the Comer amendment to the cotton-futures act as a rider to the Agricultural appropriation bill is vicious legislation and is inimical to the producers, bankers, merchants, and entire cotton trade, and should be killed.

J. W. BARKDULL.

Signer of this flash is manager for H. & B. Beers, New Orleans.

The telegram from J. W. Barkdull, manager for H. & B. Beers, commission cotton brokers on the New Orleans Exchange, to Mr. Stubbs, cotton dealer, at Scottsboro, Ala., does not say that the amendment is inimical to the exchanges at all, yet this is an exchange man who is telegraphing to various people to wire their Senators objections to this bill because it hurts the farmer. That is the cue, it helps the spinner and hurts the farmer. You know they always say it hurts the farmer.

Here is another telegram from Georgia:

CUTHBERT, GA.

Hon. B. B. COMER: Here's hoping that your amendment will be made a law; also that our Georgia Representatives up there will stick to you. In our opinion there has never been any bill introduced that is of as much vital importance to the South, and especially the cotton farmers.

KING LUMBER CO.

The statement of the King Lumber Co. is true; there has not been a more important measure introduced at this session.

Here is a telegram from Mr. J. S. Wanamaker:

ST. MATTHEWS, S. C., April 5, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER: Tide has turned very much in favor of your amendment. Receiving telegrams assuring support. If you can prevent misunderstanding concerning meaning, think it will pass. Report sent out that you use the word "cotton" has option where it should read "buyer." That amendment so poorly worded will be subject to various interpretations if passed. Urge that you give out interview to-day clearing defining amendment and reasons for its passage—

The exchanges understand it; they know what it means—

Stick to your boat like Columbus when a green bush has been found.

J. S. WANAMAKER.

Mr. DIAL. Who is Mr. Wanamaker? I know myself, but I should like to have the Senator state who he is.

Mr. COMER. He is president of the American Cotton Association.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. He is president of the American Cotton Association.

Mr. DIAL. And is a large planter in South Carolina. I know him, but I wanted the information to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. COMER. Yes; and when a planter, no matter where he lives, and when the ordinary dealer, no matter where he is located, is not in favor of the amendment it is because he has been made not to understand it.

I now read a telegram from Hon. M. C. Allgood, commissioner of agriculture of Alabama:

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 6, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER: Fully indorse your amendment and ready to do anything that will assist you in any passage. Best evidence that it will benefit general public is shown by opposition coming from the Wall Street manipulators. In regard to Calvin, he was under fire last year at New Orleans cotton meeting.

Of course, Mr. Calvin is simply an exchange lobbyist; that is all.

I have here a letter from Hon. Harvie Jordan, who is national campaign director of the American Cotton Association, thoroughly indorsing the amendment:

AMERICAN COTTON ASSOCIATION,
Atlanta, Ga., April 6, 1920.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to a recent amendment offered by Senator B. B. COMER relative to a change in the delivery of cotton grades on contracts purchased through the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges.

The present contract is unfair to legitimate dealers on the exchanges and enables the sellers of contracts to make deliveries in a variety of low grades, which tend to depress the spot market for cotton and harass the growers and manufacturers. It is a contract which can be manipulated in the interest of the sellers and which is exceedingly detrimental to the legitimate cotton industry. Senator COMER'S amendment seeks to remedy this evil only in part by requiring that at least 50 per cent of all sales shall be made deliverable in good spinable cotton. This is no hardship upon legitimate transactions on the exchanges, as a large majority of the cotton crop each year consists of the better grades.

The American Cotton Association has fully indorsed this amendment in the interest of the cotton growers and legitimate business, and urges that you support the amendment and exert your full influence to secure its passage.

Thanking you for your valued support in this important matter, and with best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

HARVIE JORDAN,
National Campaign Director.

I also have a telegram from Mr. J. J. Brown, commissioner of agriculture of Georgia, who says:

ATLANTA, GA., April 3, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER:

Have just sent the following day letter to the Georgia congressional delegation: "I have always urged that the cotton-futures act should be amended to provide that deliveries on futures should average middling. I understand that the Comer amendment does this. I hope you will vote for this amendment and do all in your power to influence others to do so."

J. J. BROWN,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

I am told that Mr. Brown is one of the most prominent farm administrators in Georgia, and is in thorough touch with the farmers.

Here is a letter from Hon. C. S. Barrett, president of the National Farmers' Union:

APRIL 9, 1920.

Senator B. B. COMER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Answering regarding your proposed amendment to the cotton-futures act securing that one-half of a contract shall be delivered middling and above and one-half at the option of the seller within the 10 standard grades, I am sure that the cotton farmers of all the States are in favor of it; I am sure that it is very much to their interest and I would earnestly advise all representatives, House and Senate, to secure its passage.

Yours, very truly,

C. S. BARRETT,
President National Farmers' Union.

Mr. Barrett seems to know exactly what he is talking about and entirely comprehends that the propaganda against the amendment is for the exchange interest and not the farmers.

Here is a telegram from Columbia, S. C.:

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 9, 1920.

Senator COMER, Washington, D. C.

Cotton buyers and commission brokers here yesterday received telegrams from exchange sources urging them to wire their Representatives and Senators to kill your amendment to cotton-futures act—

I have no doubt the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is receiving many such telegrams—

Leroy Springs, widely known cotton manufacturer, made definite statement here yesterday that if your amendment was adopted cotton bears would be eaten alive. Stick to your guns.

EDMUND A. FELDER,
Cotton-Futures Broker.

Surely it will make it hard for the bears; I mean the people who gamblingly attempt to manipulate the market, depressing values. I do not mean the man who believes that cotton is going down and sells the market, but the man who takes the low grades and depresses the market with them. That is what it means, and nothing else.

Here is a circular from Dallas, Tex., which was sent to the Montgomery Exchange, and is one of the worst I have seen. In this circular they propose to go back to the system prevailing before the passage of the bill of the Senator from South Carolina, before the Smith-Lever bill, and to reinstate the 21 grades. They go further than that; they want to make New Orleans, instead of being a commercial market, a partial spot-value market, as it is to-day, get the basis middling by the composite price from 10 spot markets. Listen! This is their recommendation:

We also strongly recommend that the differences between grades for cotton tenderable on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange be regulated in the same manner as those of New York, namely, by the average of the 10 designated spot markets.

Whoever heard of such nonsense as that? It is a swindling proposition. If they had the writing of laws, what would they not write?

To the circular the Montgomery Cotton Exchange replied as follows:

Telegram received. Opinion majority our membership is favorable to Comer amendment, and it is unanimous that the present contract, at least, be not weakened. We do not believe reinstatement contract prevailing prior to 1919 would in anywise remedy present condition prevailing as to low grades, but we do think it would be sure to cause further widening of differences between spots and futures, which would be undesirable to all legitimate interests.

They themselves say they do not want a further widening of the differences between spots and futures. Of course it is best for every legitimate interest to get the middling.

Here is a telegram from Jenkinsburg, Ga.:

JENKINSBURG, GA., April 8, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER:

Your telegram received. I have read your proposed cotton bill. Highly favor it.

J. H. MILLS,
State President Farmers' Union of Georgia.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. COMER. Certainly.

Mr. DIAL. Assuming that a cotton mill does not want to buy its supply through the exchange; and, of course, as it is now they buy the cotton and sell the goods, and indulge in the practice of hedging in a great many instances, but assuming that they do not want to buy the cotton through the exchange, and that they buy a large number of bales, then if the seller has the option under the law as it is now to tender cotton, he might tender a great quantity of one grade.

Mr. COMER. He can tender a hundred bales of one grade.

Mr. DIAL. Suppose the mill wanted to buy a year's supply, say 50,000 bales; would it not be much better for everybody that the mill have the option of selecting the kind of cotton it could spin? If the seller could tender all the contract of one grade it would not be to the best advantage.

Mr. COMER. It is claimed that if a contract was shortened to one grade, or two grades, or even four grades the market could be squeezed. That is one reason there are so many grades let in. I do not agree with that fully; but in milling the mills do not buy the hedge; they do not buy the contract for the purpose of milling; but they buy the contract for the purpose of hedging the cotton wanted. They go into the spot market and buy the cotton that they are going to consume, and after they have bought it then they sell the hedge; that is the way that is done. It is not intended for speculation, but safety.

Mr. DIAL. That is true, but assuming that the contract matures, where would there be any harm in getting the actual cotton? Take the New England mills—of course, it does not affect us in the South, because we have the cotton at our doors—suppose a New England mill bought a contract for a thousand bales, what is the reason it should not let the contract mature and take the cotton?

Mr. COMER. I see what the Senator means. It is expensive to run cotton through the exchange; it will cost possibly 3 cents a pound to put it through the exchange and take it out; and of course that is a charge on the value of the cotton. Any man who undertakes to do business through the exchange in that way is simply adding to the cost. I have taken cotton in that way; in fact, last year I sent Senator SMITH, from South Carolina, a grades list of cotton taken by me in that way. We took up two contracts—200 bales—in New York, 100 through Hubbard Bros. and 100 through Carpenter. That was when we had 21 grades contract tender. They were given 12 different styles of cotton in the hundred bales, and it was not such cotton as we could use. We wrote them and telegraphed them time and time again to sell the cotton, but they could not get an offer for it, so that the only thing to do after three months of trial was to sell 200 bales on the market and redeliver it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in that connection, in studying the Senator's proposed amendment, and in studying the provision which I have already had enacted into law, the very point the Senator has brought out to-day has always seemed to me to need proper legislation, for the reason that every buyer on the spot market wants to buy those grades that are the nearest of value.

With 10 grades admissible, it would be possible for the exchange to deliver some of all the 10 grades, so that the millman or the buyer accepting it, even if he were a broker who wanted to handle it for some man, would have a mixed lot, out of which he might not be able to get even 50 per cent of the kind of cotton that he needed to fill his contract. So I have been wondering if it would not be a very good thing to further amend the act at some time, so as to provide that the deliveries when made by the exchanges should be within certain groups, so that the seller could not deliver some of all grades, and thus not make the lot, as we who are familiar with cotton call it, a smooth running lot, but a mixed lot impossible of being sold.

That leads me to ask the Senator a further question in reference to his proposed amendment. It has been brought to my attention that perhaps a buyer might demand the 50 per cent that he wants of middling fair. He has bought a contract. He has the option of demanding any grade, or demanding the fulfillment of his contract from middling and above. He might demand middling fair. He might serve notice that he was going to take up the cotton—as the Senator and I know, there is very little middling fair cotton made anywhere—and thereby cause the exchange to cease to be even a hedge market under that possibility. Now, in order to obviate that, after the Senator's suggested amendment shall have been tried to see to what extent it will have that tendency, I wondered if we might not have a law providing, in justice to both buyer and seller, that where one demands the cotton it shall not be possible for him to demand the specific fulfillment of any one grade unless it be possible for the seller to meet it, but that he might have his contract filled with cognate grades, or grades that are in juxtaposition to it, like middling, strict middling, and low middling, say, so that he could not just demand the specific fulfillment in any one specific grade, and then, unless the buyer wanted it, that the seller could not specifically fulfill in any one grade.

Mr. COMER. Just one minute, Senator, please. The amendment does not read that way. It provides that the seller can deliver the 50 bales of any grade the seller selects, or any combination of grades he may select, from middling above. He could make it 10 each of the 5 different grades, or he could make any combination he wants.

Mr. DIAL. Not only that, but the Senator's amendment is not mandatory on the purchaser. There is no reason why he and the seller should not agree to take under middling if they want to. It just gives him the option of taking middling and above.

Mr. COMER. Yes. It can be done that way. But back in the old days, when 50,000 to 100,000 bales of low-grade cotton was assembled in New York convenient for delivery on contracts, then the cotton gamblers had a picnic. A man buying a thousand bales of cotton, say, 10 contracts, the seller would tender him an assortment of many low grades. The buyer would go into the warehouses and select out of the conglomerate collection the cotton that he could best use. Say he selected 500 bales out of the 1,000; then he sold back the 500 bales balance and redelivered the cotton he could not use on the contract market, to go through the same mill again.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And settled on margin.

Mr. COMER. Yes. That was the way they used to do it.

Mr. DIAL. No; but what I am trying to do is to get a contract to represent actual value, to represent cotton. That is what I want. Now, of course, I know the expense of running through the exchanges; but if the sellers knew that the purchasers would not go to that expense of taking the cotton, then of course the seller would bear the market all the time.

Mr. COMER. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. I am trying to get this amendment—and I hope it will be adopted—in shape so that the purchaser will not run the expense, and, if it should become necessary, then take his cotton.

Mr. COMER. If the Senator will read my previous talk along this line, it discussed that very question, and it was handled by a letter from my son, who is the manager at Avondale; and he states that we, the Avondale Mills, who can use any grade, and have the ability to take up any tender, can protect ourselves right along the line we are talking about.

Mr. DIAL. You mean you are manufacturers?

Mr. COMER. Yes; but there are people who can not take up hedges, and the gambler will get him every time; but the dealer that knows what he is doing, as I am sure you would, can hold the cotton and take the delivery. It is not a delivery they want. The exchanges never want to deliver—never, never—and when you take up the cotton on the exchange you have made a big surprise. They do not intend it at all.

Here is another letter I have received:

STATE OF FLORIDA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Tallahassee, April 7, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your telegram of the 1st instant, with reference to the amendment proposed by you to stabilize the price of cotton on the exchanges, etc., has been thoroughly gone into by me, and I am asking our entire delegation in Congress to back your amendment.

Assuring you that I am glad to do anything to help the situation and trusting that the amendment may go through, I am,

Yours, very truly,

WM. A. MCRAE,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Here is the last that I have:

BIRMINGHAM, April 16, 1920.

Senator B. B. COMER,
Washington, D. C.:

Convention—

The American Cotton Association convention—indorsed your amendment 16 to 15—

I am sorry it did not pass by the whole number, but I understand there was a prominent cotton-exchange man down there, a smart, competent man, who got some delegates buffaloed; but it passed 16 to 15—

Alabama, Florida, Oklahoma, Georgia, Tennessee voting for; Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, and both Carolinas voting against—

Now, I am sure that the Carolinas are for it, are they not?

Mr. DIAL. They are.

Mr. COMER (reading):

W. B. Thompson, ex-president New Orleans Cotton Exchange, led the fight on the floor of convention.

DONALD COMER.

The cotton-futures act intends to secure that the conduct of the exchanges should be equitable and commercial; that there should be no advantage to the buyer nor the seller, no protective anchorage to the junkers of trade, but the widest protection to all transactions from producer to manufacturer. If the exchanges can not exist under such rules, then the exchanges are authorizing vampires on the world's greatest product, and lose their usefulness, lose the intent of their existence.

The proposed amendment to the cotton-futures act is not intended to impair in the least the purpose of the act. The amendment is intended to enable the cotton-futures act to accomplish the evident design of the statute; that is, to stabilize contracts with spots. In specifying 10 grades it was not the purpose to outlaw all except 4 or at the most 5 of the grades. It was not intended that the seller should be able to take the statute and make a delivery of cotton of such grades and in such a manner that three-fourths of the dealers and manufacturers can not use. It was never intended that the higher grades of cotton, middling and above, should be nondeliverable on a contract, but under the practice of the exchanges such is a fact. The law never intended to put the buyer at any such disadvantage. The Federal Government does not knowingly put its seal on such transactions. It was never intended that a contract delivery should be at such a basis price, a price from the very nature of the case shifting and unreliable and arrived at in such a way as to be impossible, as in the case of the New York Exchange market.

The pricing of 10 different types of cotton in 10 different spot markets the same day, and out of it making a composite price validating the contract price, is, I say, absolutely impossible; and however honest the intention of the Bureau of Markets, the making of such a price is like the new way of measuring the distance to the fixed stars—guess one-fourth of the distance and multiply it by four. This part of the present law will be very greatly relieved by the amendment from the very fact that the middling basis will be taken from the middling of actual cotton, and it will be one of the chief benefits of the law, and the difficulty of the Bureau of Markets in validating the basis price by the present law will be greatly relieved.

The exchange propaganda charges that this amendment will make the contract market a spinner's market and can be worked to the hurt of the producer and dealer. This charge is dogmatic, absolutely untrue, and not a scintilla of experience or economic reason can be brought to sustain the charge—absolutely exchange propaganda, unbelievable by any disinterested man and impossible of proof.

The spinner wants a market exactly like the market best suitable to the legitimate dealer, a stabilized market, one in which the contract price and the spot price will carry relative differences from month to month, according as the expense of carriage and the faith in the natural and economic conditions surrounding the crop. Stabilizing the market will benefit the spinner, because he can sell goods and buy or sell cotton, hedging on the contract market with approximate safety. The legitimate dealer will do the same. These taken together will help—is obliged to help—the farmer. Any charge that it will hurt the farmer or the dealer is a camouflage of the junker class, a junker that has preyed on cotton so long—the junker class, I say, who wish to Germanize this great product and place a tribute on it forever.

The exchanges are the reflex or the recording index of cotton values. The exchanges were never intended to be the masters of cotton values, the makers of it, and the propaganda which they are getting out claiming the exchanges make or unmake the price of any grade of cotton is absolute nonsense, and they know it. The only arguments they use or can use are dogmatic—from the very nature of the case impossible. Any business proposition by which the seller can give the buyer unusable delivery at an unreliable price is dishonest, and rendering the exchange back to an equitable transaction can not hurt any legitimate commercial business.

A large cotton firm writes me that a man or a firm can be sincere and be wrong, but he can not see how a house that does trading and takes no part in bear raids can be opposed to the Comer amendment, "for it would make bear raids history." He further writes, "With the good grades embodied in the delivery the contract would be a hedge, which it is not now. Water seeks its level. No matter how many grades are made tenderable, contracts are entered into with the expectancy of delivering the lowest grade of those tenderable, the least usable to the majority of buyers."

In all its past history whenever the exchanges attempted to make the price of cotton legitimate interests have suffered incalculable losses. The exchanges are now using every possible agency in reflex telegrams to Representatives in Congress, alleging that in the interest of the farmer—those blessed farmers—the Representatives must defeat the Comer amendment; that the amendment will help the spinner; that it will make it a spinner's contract, but that it will hurt the farmer and outlaw low-grade cotton.

Now, who ever heard of such immaculate nonsense as that? The exchange does not "inlaw" or outlaw anything. If it was in the outlaw business, has it not got middling and above knocked higher than a kite right now? You never hear of those grades being tendered. Have they hurt the price of them? It is the demand that makes the price. It is the usufruct from the mills that makes the demand, and the kind of cotton they can best use is what they buy. They are not cutting out low-grade cotton because they want to depress the price of it. They are taking high-grade cotton because they can make more money with it. Of course that is the reason. Any other reason would be nonsense.

The greatest objection the exchanges have to the amendment is that in a great measure it takes the "bear" out of the transaction. The exchanges want the low grades kept in the tender, not for the purpose of helping the low grades, not for the purpose of benefiting legitimate trading, but for the purpose of increasing the opportunity to "bear" the market. They know what is the reason. They know it. This is all they have used the low grades for the past year and all the years back, and they know it, and all this stuff about a spinner's contract as against the farmer's and dealer's contract is simply intended to retain an advantage in which the game can be played with marked cards, and they know it.

They never like the game unless they can mark the cards. It is worse than a negro crap game where loaded dice are used.

Yesterday's cotton market, May contracts, in New Orleans was 41.25; July contract, 39.65; October contract, 36.35; December contract, 35.27; March contract, 33.40. If you had a stabilized contract, one in which the spinner could have confidence, he would, of course, buy March cotton and sell his goods against it. This would be a legitimate hedge and one authorized by every condition of trade, and the verity of it should be guaranteed by this law.

Senators, when you can not verify a contract, when you make a law which does not verify a contract, then you vitiate the very principle for which that law is made.

With the amendment requiring one-half of a contract middling and above, the danger of "bear" raids will not be so apprehensible. The spot and futures market will trot along side by side more evenly than now—conditions which the Smith-Lever bill clearly designed should carry.

Taking the lower grades out of the lawful tender, as was done by the Smith-Lever bill last year, did not in the least affect the value of the cotton so outlawed, did not decrease in the least the buying and consumption of same, which alone makes the price.

It is the buying and consumption of it which makes the price. It is not the power of tendering it on the exchange. It simply prevents the gambler on the exchange from assembling a lot of off-grade cotton, cotton not easily merchantable, and tendering it on contracts not for the purpose of helping the low grades, not for the purpose of helping the contract market, but for the purpose of depressing it and making a gambler's gain.

That is so, and we all know it from history all the way back. There is nothing else to it; there can not be anything else to it. Otherwise middling and above, which are tenderable on a contract under the law and which are never used, are absolutely outlawed by the use of the exchange. What keeps the price of these grades up? A simple answer—the law of supply and demand, and it is operating to-day on all grades.

I call attention to an article from the Times-Picayune, in the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which Mr. DUPRÉ, of Louisiana, read. I have great respect for Mr. DUPRÉ and also for the Times-Picayune. It is a great paper, but according to every law of trade, to every condition of cause and effect which surrounds this great southern product, there was never a more erroneous conception of the purpose and I am sure of the effect the amendment will have. If Mr. DUPRÉ and the Times-Picayune will stop for a minute and consider the law can not make the price of any grade cotton.

You do not make prices of cotton by law, unless it is war-time prices. In the open trade of the world the price of cotton is made and of every grade of it. It could not be made any other way. The law can only protect the natural economic conditions, and this amendment simply intends to carry out the true purpose of the Smith-Lever bill, to carry out the true purpose of all legislation, to secure fair dealing in all law-protected institutions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. COMER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator means to say that the seller be restricted to deliver 50 per cent of his contract for middling and above, at the option of the buyer, and then the seller have the right to deliver 50 per cent from middling and below, and the object which the Senator has is to make middling the real basis and reflection of the value of the contract.

Mr. COMER. That hits the nail on the head.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just reread the Senator's amendment a moment ago, and I see that it provides that in the settlement of this contract the seller must, at the demand of the buyer, deliver 50 per cent of the grades above middling.

Mr. COMER. Middling and above.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Middling and above?

Mr. COMER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. While in settling the seller's option is middling and below?

Mr. COMER. Anything he wants within the 10 standard grades.

Mr. DIAL. Not necessarily below.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand; but he would hardly deliver the 100 per cent above, unless he is more fortunate than a great many are. But the object, as the Senator has brought out in his argument, is that whereas now the seller having the option of delivering what he pleases of the tendered, admissible grades pleases to deliver low grades all the time to the exclusion of any high grades, he thus vitiates or renders misleading the quotations on the market, which are not based actually upon middling, but upon the average of the lower grades that he sees fit to tender on the contract; whereas if the law were so that the average would be middling, then the price necessarily must reflect the value of middling on the market, and so one picking up a paper and seeing cotton quoted at 41 cents knows that they are quoting 41 cents on the basis of middling, and middling would be delivered at 41 cents.

Mr. COMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the tendency of the market has been since his amendment was agreed to in the Senate?

Mr. COMER. For the first time in years the futures market in New York is reflecting the spot market. To-day the futures market in New York is 42 and a fraction. The futures market in New York to-day is a cent a pound higher than the futures market in New Orleans.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But I think the relative difference between the spot and contract, even for the spot month, is about the same as it was heretofore. In other words, spots to-day in New York are somewhere around 43 cents, while May, which is now considered, I believe, about the spot crop, is about 42¼.

Mr. COMER. No; that is the contract. I think spots are about that price.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think spots are about 43. From a cent to a cent and a half has been the difference, I think, and yet that should not be permitted. The futures contracts ought to be equal to or a little in advance of the spots, whereas the thing which I have been trying to remedy ever since I have been in the Senate is that the market should reflect the actual value of the middle grade and reflect the law of supply and demand.

Mr. COMER. That is exactly right.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The reason I sought to restrict the grades of delivery was for that purpose. Aside from the disastrous effects of the Government order in widening the difference between the grades arbitrarily, irrespective of the action on the market, it had a psychological effect; and then there was an oversupply of these low grades, which tended to lower it. But the Senator in his speech has emphasized the fact that he is striving to do exactly what I have been striving to do, to formulate a contract and enact it into law, and restrict the action of the exchanges to where, when they quoted the price of cotton, it would be the price of middling grade; then put the premiums on the higher that are legitimate and the discount on the lower.

Mr. COMER. I take off my hat to the Senator from South Carolina. He is exactly right. I am just following right along in his footsteps, and I am simply trying to help him accomplish what he has been working for and nothing else. I desire now to read a short extract from a speech in the Senate delivered by the Senator from South Carolina:

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is simply to provide that, in the contracts for delivery of cotton, cotton of unmerchantable grades shall not, as now, be tendered on a contract. Under the present cotton-grading law the cotton-grading committee has standardized a great variety of grades of cotton, so that the exchanges are tendering these very low and unmerchantable grades to such an extent that it has driven legitimate business away from the exchanges and has practically converted them into mere gambling places and not a place for legitimate business.

That was a pretty good story he told them, and it was the truth, too. I continue reading:

In other words, there is now a difference of anywhere from $25 to $30 a bale between the contract and spot market.

That was outrageous, but true. No wonder the Senator made complaint about it. The Senator further said:

The amendment is simply to make the exchanges legitimate trading places and make the contracts commercial.

That is all it is. That is all this amendment is intended to do. The Senator was just exactly right.

I have here the report of the Commissioner of Corporations, Part I, on cotton exchanges, which I suppose was ordered printed by the House in an investigation made some years ago.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is that the Herbert Knox Smith report?

Mr. COMER. I can not say. I want to read from this report to show how nearly right I was:

It is obvious that an abnormal depression of the price of future contracts as compared with the spot price of middling cotton, such as results from errors in contract differences, must cause loss to a large number of holders of contracts. The number of persons affected by such losses is vastly greater than the number who actually receive the cotton on contract at overvalued differences; for, as is well known, vast numbers of contracts are purchased, not with the intention of taking up cotton but with the idea of reselling them. Of course, the losses of one class of operators through such relative depression of the contract are at least partly balanced by gains of other operators. This, however, does not justify a system which will permit such abnormal depression of the contract price.

That is what the exchanges are for. This continues:

As will be shown more clearly later, the risk of the seller is much less than that of the buyer. Moreover, the fact that either party to the contract instead of only one may be injured is no justification of improper differences; on the contrary, both risks should, as far as possible, be avoided.

You can not say that it is right that one man should carry a bigger risk in a business transaction than another. It is immoral. I continue:

Such disturbances in the normal parity between the spot middling price and the contract price therefor increase the risks attending future operations. Any increase of risk which can be prevented is clearly an evil. Abnormal disturbances of the parity between the two prices increase the difficulty of forecasting the course of the price of future contracts. Operators in futures base their transactions, in the main, upon a study of the conditions in the spot market. Under a proper and normal difference system they can assume that conditions which tend to advance or depress the price of middling cotton in the spot market will likewise tend to advance or depress the price of basis middling future contracts.

It was just the same story back there as it is now. It is like the old hymn, it is the old, old story, and always true. This proceeds:

As a matter of fact, most operators, as a result of failure to understand thoroughly the influence of grade differences, do make that assumption even when, because of improper differences, there is really no such parity. Where such parity does not exist, conditions affecting the value of middling in the spot market become practically worthless as a guide to the operator in futures, since the prices become dependent on artificial rather than on natural conditions.

The Senator from South Carolina is trying to get rid of artificial conditions; that is what he is working for.

A few operators of unusual resources and cleverness may find profit in such abnormal disturbances in this parity between spot middling and contract prices; but it is apparent that the rank and file of operators will find their transactions much more hazardous in case the two prices do not move in substantial harmony.

An absolutely constant margin between the two prices can not be hoped for, since, as already stated, the future market fluctuates more frequently and often more violently than the spot market; but under a proper working of the future system such disturbances should not continue for any considerable period of time.

I read further:

The injury resulting from a disturbance of the normal parity is perhaps best illustrated in the case of "hedging" transactions. Hedging is a legitimate and one of the most important functions of future trading. Whereas a vast amount of business in futures is unquestionably of a highly speculative character, the hedging function is primarily intended to reduce the element of speculation in transactions in spot cotton. Hedging, in other words, is a sort of insurance against loss, the theory being that by means of hedges the merchant can calculate with approximate certainty on a fixed margin of profit, foregoing hopes of extraordinary gains for the sake of protection against extraordinary losses.

That is what we want. We want legitimate hedging. We want hedging that is as certain as the stars, as certain as business can make it.

The principle of hedging, especially in so far as buying hedges are concerned, rests on the assumption that the price of future contracts for the current or spot month will maintain a fairly constant parity with the spot price of middling cotton. A cotton merchant who has purchased a future contract as a hedge at a certain margin or discount below the spot price of middling cotton will suffer a loss if, by the time he is ready to sell out his hedge contract, the discount in the contract price has been increased. If the buyer had the option of demanding on his future contract grades which he required for his engagements with spinners, he would, of course, be protected. But, as repeatedly stated, that option lies entirely with the seller.

This was written away back yonder, and it is the same thing we are talking about here to-day. That is what we are trying to avoid. The exchanges have no right to demand anything other than that.

I read further:

Near the close of September, 1906, there was a terrific Gulf storm which caused immense damage to cotton over a large area of the cotton belt. The result was an abnormal proportion of low grades. Commercial differences widened sharply; that is, the price of the low grades fell relatively to that of middling and the price of high grades advanced relatively to middling.

* * * * * * *

The price of spot middling on February 1, 1907, was 11 cents, while that of future contracts maturing in February was only 9.04 cents.

* * * * * * *

It is important to emphasize that the losses resulting from the increase in the margin between the spot and the contract price as a result of this improper revision fell also very heavily upon cotton merchants who, instead of speculating, had purchased contracts in the New York market as hedges for the very purpose of avoiding speculation in their transactions in spot cotton. Instead of thus escaping speculative risks, such merchants found that they had lost enormously because of such hedges.

You have no right to lose because of hedges; and all that is intended in all this is to give honest business an honest chance. That is what the law is intended to guarantee to every dealer; and what the exchanges should do is to go to work studying the conditions with reference to low grades or any other grades and state them honestly to bankers or merchants or anyone else, and they should state the facts just as they are and not use scareheads.

AWARDS OF DAMAGES TO VESSELS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the House of Representatives messaged to the Senate two enrolled bills—Senate bill 1005 and Senate bill 1222—for the relief of certain owners of vessels. In both of the bills will be found this provision:

That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said schooner Henry O. Barrett—

And in the other case of the said steamship Matoa—

the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

These bills passed without the usual amendment striking out that section. In all other bills of a similar character that provision has been stricken out. In order that these bills may follow the course of the others and not establish a precedent of appropriating an unknown amount for any claim that may be decided to be due from the Government, I offer the following concurrent resolution—Senate concurrent resolution 26—and I ask for its present consideration.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to cancel his signature to the enrolled bills:

S. 1005. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa; and

S. 1222. An act for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett.

That upon the cancellation of such signature the Secretary of the Senate be directed to reenroll said bill, S. 1005, with an amendment as follows: Strike out of section 2 the following words: "That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owner of the said steamship Matoa, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided,"

And further, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to reenroll the said bill, S. 1222, with an amendment as follows: Strike out of section 2 the following words: "That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said schooner Henry O. Barrett, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided,"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which has just been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution offered by the Senator from Utah.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3792.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I anticipate that it would be somewhat difficult and perhaps impossible to secure the attendance of a quorum of the Senate this afternoon. Indeed, it has been very difficult upon other days. This being Saturday it will probably be more difficult than usual. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, it is my purpose merely to offer two amendments which are committee amendments and which may be correctly described as corrective in their nature.

One of them, the first one, has to do with that provision of the bill which prescribes the form of oath to be taken by men enlisting in the National Guard of the United States. It so happens that in putting the bill together and having it printed, an error was made in that we copied, as I recollect it, the form of oath prescribed in the national-defense act. That form of oath is not in conformance in one of its details with other sections of the bill which relate to the National Guard and which result in placing the National Guard upon a different status than that which it occupied under the national-defense act. So I offer an amendment to correct that and to make the form of oath conform with the purposes of the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers the following amendment to the pending bill.

The READING CLERK. On page 78, line 4, strike out the words "to the following oath" and insert "to an oath in the following form."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 78, strike out lines 5 to 16, inclusive, and insert the following:

I do hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted this — day of ———, 19—, as a soldier in the National Guard of the United States for the period of three years under conditions prescribed by law, unless sooner discharged by proper authority, and I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America, and that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and of the officers appointed over me according to law and the rules and Articles of War. And I do solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the State of ——— and to obey the orders of the governor thereof subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Also, on page 80, line 7, after the word "act," insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That all officers of the National Guard who have taken and subscribed to the oath prescribed for officers in the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, may be commissioned as reserve officers in the several grades now held by them with original date of rank and be recognized as officers of the National Guard of the United States. All officers of the Organized Militia, of the several States and Territories, and the District of Columbia, and all persons hereafter to be commissioned as officers in the National Guard of the United States shall, upon being commissioned under the provisions of this act, take and subscribe to the following oath: "I ——— ———, having been appointed a ——— in the National Guard of the United States, do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic, that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States, that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States, that I take this obligation freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ——— in the National Guard of the United States upon which I am about to enter. I do further solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the State of ——— and to obey the orders of the governor thereof, subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States, so help me God."

Page 84, line 8, after the word "troops," insert "under the direct orders of the governor of the State or Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire now to offer another amendment to express more accurately the purpose of the section which provides that the troops of the National Guard of the United States shall be at the disposal of the governors of the several States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The proposed amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 84, line 8, after the word "troops," insert the words "under the direct orders of the governor of the State or Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now offer an amendment on a different topic, which was agreed to by the Committee on Military Affairs, and has to do with the retirement of those officers of the permanent personnel who have served for four years.

I will say in explanation of it that there is an existing provision of law enacted several years ago that officers who have served as chiefs of service in certain of the bureaus or departments which existed at the time of the passage of that act, upon being retired are to be retired at the rank which they held as chiefs of bureaus or service. The proviso which I now offer as an amendment to the pending bill brings that present practice up to date, and makes it conform with the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 49, line 18, after the word "act" and before the period, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That any officer who shall have served four years as chief of a noncombatant service and who may subsequently be retired shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the grade held by him as such chief, unless already promoted to a higher grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I said a moment ago, I think it would be profitless for me to offer one more committee amendment which might give rise to discussion and perhaps a roll call. Unless some other Senator desires to offer an amendment on the floor and take a chance on securing a quorum, I will ask that the Army reorganization bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer, but I imagine if it should be favored by those present the Senator from New York would want a quorum. So I shall not insist on it to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. With that understanding, I desire to offer an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, under those circumstances and with the same understanding that I——

Mr. NUGENT. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. NUGENT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me to ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am thinking about going out of town this afternoon, to remain over Sunday, but I do not desire to do so if there is any expectation that the Army reorganization bill will be brought up for further consideration to-day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not my purpose to bring up anything in connection with that bill this afternoon. Of course, I can not control other Senators.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. I should like to present an amendment and to have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table. The Secretary will now state the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

The READING CLERK. On page 20, line 2, after the word "purpose," it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That for the protection of the forest areas of the United States against destruction by fire, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to organize, maintain, and operate such aeronautical units as may be necessary for the maintenance of an aerial patrol of such areas for the period ending June 30, 1921: Provided further, That the areas to be covered by the aerial patrol herein authorized shall be designated by the Secretary of War upon request of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That for this purpose the strength of the permanent personnel of the Air Corps and of the Army as otherwise authorized by this act is hereby increased 160 officers and 660 enlisted men in such appropriate grades as the President may prescribe.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, with the view to asking that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill, with the same understanding that was heretofore had to-day.

Mr. NUGENT. I understand that there is no objection to the amendment which I have just proposed, and I suggest that it be now acted upon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask the Senator to excuse me; I thought the amendment was merely presented to be printed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not say on behalf of the committee that there is no objection to the amendment. I do not feel justified in saying that, in the absence of nearly all of the members of the committee, as to the amendment. I have not had an opportunity to examine its text.

Mr. NUGENT. I will say to the Senator from New York that the amendment I propose is the one which I submitted the other day, and concerning which I spoke to him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the amendment place a time limitation?

Mr. NUGENT. Yes; its operation is limited to the period ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had not expected that the amendment would result in the increase of the Air Corps by 160 officers and 660 enlisted men. Before accepting the amendment on behalf of the committee, I really think, in fairness to the other members of the committee, that I should show the amendment to them.

Mr. NUGENT. I have no objection to the amendment going over, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before passing from the subject involved in the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], I desire to emphasize the importance of the acceptance of the amendment by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if it is possible for him to do so. In the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill some weeks ago I offered an amendment whereby $60,000 was authorized to be appropriated by the Congress to continue the patrol work in the forests of the Northwest. The scheme contemplated the operation of airplanes from some twenty-odd bases in the States of Idaho, Utah, Montana, Oregon, Washington, and California. The sum which has been appropriated will be of no use unless the men are obtained for the service.

In view of the coming of summer, during which season so many thousands of feet of timber and millions of dollars' worth of property are destroyed, I sincerely hope that the chairman of the committee will follow the very excellent suggestion offered by the Senator from Idaho and accept the amendment. I plead with the chairman to do so, because of the fact that the season is fast approaching during which such destruction by fire is likely to occur and because of the very great effectiveness of this agency for anticipating, fighting, and exterminating fires.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In view of the statement which I very frankly made a moment ago, I suggest that the amendment be offered on Monday next. It will not hasten the legislation to adopt it to-day or to reject it to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11892, being the river and harbor appropriation bill, with the same understanding that we had when the bill was previously under consideration to-day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], on page 7, line 18, to strike out from line 18 to line 23, both inclusive. The Senator from Louisiana has made a request that the amendment may go over, and I ask unanimous consent that that course may be pursued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 7, after line 23, to insert:

Tansas River, La.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer a committee amendment to that amendment, to strike out "Tansas" and to insert "Tensas."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, would the chairman of the committee object if I offer an amendment at this point on this page, or would he prefer for me to wait until after the committee amendments have been disposed of?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We are operating under a unanimous-consent agreement, providing that the committee amendments shall first be considered.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 8, after line 2, to insert:

Galveston Channel, Tex.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 13, to insert:

The coast in the vicinity of Aransas Pass, Port Aransas, Corpus Christi, and Rockport, Tex., with a view to the establishment of a safe and adequate harbor, or harbors, for protection against storms and erosions, including the protection of the instrumentalities and aids of commerce located there.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that amendment may be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, I desire to offer a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 8 it is proposed to strike out from line 11 to line 13, inclusive, as follows:

Coast of Texas in the vicinity of Aransas Pass, Port Aransas, Corpus Christi, and Rockport, with a view to the establishment of a safe and adequate harbor.

And to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of engineers to make a survey of the coast of Texas in the vicinity of Aransas Pass, Port Aransas, Corpus Christi, and Rockport, with a view to the establishment of a safe and adequate harbor, or harbors, and to prepare plans and estimates for protection against storms and erosions, including the protection of the instrumentalities and aids of commerce located there.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if it is wise to limit the points where the survey is to be made?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I think it is, because otherwise they might cover the whole coast, whereas the object is and desire is to secure the information with respect to a particular portion of the coast. There was, I think, a very severe storm in that vicinity some time ago, which practically destroyed the works we have heretofore authorized at certain ports.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is correct about that. The amendment refers to that part of the Texas coast which a few months ago was swept by one of the most devastating storms which that section has ever experienced. This provision is similar to the one that was made for Galveston Island a year or so ago, which has resulted in a very comprehensive and beneficial report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say there is no desire for a general survey of the entire coast.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not the needs of commerce require this investigation and require the kind of improvement which, if the report is favorable, I presume will be made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so. A favorable report will not be made unless the needs of commerce so require. That is one of the matters, of course, upon which the engineers report. They report the facts with reference to the needs of commerce and their recommendations with reference to that aspect of the matter.

I will say that the Senator from Texas is very familiar with the situation and is satisfied that it is very important that the investigation should be made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to say to the Senator that one of the most important parts of the Texas coast is that in the neighborhood of Port Aransas. Millions of dollars have been expended there, and, therefore, it becomes very important that we should have a reexamination at this time in view of the ruin wrought by the storm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 8, after line 19, to insert:

La Grue River, Ark.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 24, to insert:

Tennessee River, Tenn., Ala., and Ky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator having this bill in charge how many new items have been added to the House bill by the Senate committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator means in the way of surveys?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know; I have not counted them; there are not a great many—that is, not an unusual number. Surveys, as the Senator understands, are really for the purpose of securing information and the views of the Engineer Corps with reference to projects that Senators and Representatives think ought to be investigated. As I have said, I have not counted the number, and do not know how many such items are in the bill, although that could be ascertained by counting and it would not take very long. There are some other items to be put in.

I will say that the committee is usually rather liberal in reference to surveys, because they are put in with the idea of securing information upon which action, either favorable or unfavorable, may be based, and therefore we have not been very restrictive in connection with such amendments.

Mr. KING. The Senator realizes that whenever a survey is made it ordinarily is followed by a large appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the Senator is mistaken as to that. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], some days ago, suggested that these calls for surveys were treated by the Engineer Corps as practically a direction by Congress to send in favorable reports. I was satisfied that that was wholly incorrect; that the engineers do not construe such provisions in that way; that they understand that they are simply to present the facts to us with their recommendations. I find that to be true. For instance, under the river and harbor bill of 1917 there were 84 surveys authorized, while the percentage of favorable reports was only 7.4; in other words, up to June 30, 1919, they reported on 54, of which number the favorable reports were 4 and the unfavorable reports 50. Also under the act of 1916 there were 128 investigations ordered; there were reported up to June 30, 1919, 109, of which 15 were favorable and 94 unfavorable, or a percentage of 13.7, and so on.

So that when we provide for a survey it does not by any means mean that it will involve an appropriation. As I said, these surveys are made simply for the purpose of getting information, getting the recommendations of the engineers, and then we do not always follow the recommendations of the engineers. We have a rule, however, or a practice, and it has been pretty generally followed, that we will not put in a river and harbor bill a project that has been reported upon unfavorably by the engineers. We do not put in all the projects that are reported favorably, and this showing demonstrates that a comparatively small number of these surveys are acted upon favorably.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that under the practice of the Senate a project is not put in the river and harbor bill unless it is favorably reported upon by the engineer. The Senator does not mean the local engineer?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator means when the local engineer has approved the project and when the project has in due course received also the approval of the board of engineers.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I mean when the report comes to Congress it comes from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, but it still has to pass from them, through the Chief of Engineers, to the Secretary of War, and then it comes down to us.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Have not the surveys been regarded as sort of consolation prizes? If it was impossible to get an appropriation, the Member of Congress would take a survey, and that has seemed rather to quiet him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why, no, Mr. President. The survey comes before the Senator attempts to get any appropriation. He may attempt to get an appropriation without a survey, but that is as far as he gets. It is simply in the nature of an attempt.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, is it not a further fact that when a survey is ordered it does not necessarily follow that the actual survey is made? The engineers make what is known as a preliminary general examination, and unless that general examination develops that a project is of distinct importance, they go no further.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 9, after line 4, to insert:

South Fork of Kentucky River, Ky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he would object to my offering an amendment immediately preceding the one just adopted?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we are working under the rule that committee amendments shall be considered first. This is a matter for a survey, however, and if the Senator will present it to me, I will offer it as a committee amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have presented the amendment to the Senator, and he has approved it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator has the amendment prepared, I will ask him to present it as a committee amendment. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment:

On page 9, at the end of line 4, add:

Trent River from New Bern to Trenton, N. C., with a view to a channel depth of 12 feet to Polloksville and 8 feet to Trenton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee about the item on page 8, line 20:

La Grue River, Ark.

What kind of a river is that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is a survey about which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is very anxious. I did not ask him for the details with reference to it. I have been satisfied that the engineers would present them. It is the only thing, I think, in which the Senator from Arkansas was especially interested in connection with the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I am sure he ought to have it; but does the Senator know whether this is a stream that has any water in it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not know anything about it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not; but I will learn something about it when the engineers report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator has just offered an amendment which directed an investigation with a view to fixing the depth of the channel of a river. Is it customary to do that?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that it has very frequently been done where there is already a project and that project has been completed, as is the case with reference to the Trent River. There is a project, and that project has been completed. The Government is now simply maintaining it. The commerce has developed considerably, and this is a suggestion that another survey be made with a view to ascertaining if there ought not to be a greater depth than that provided in the present project. That does not mean that they shall report for a 12-foot channel or an 8-foot channel, but it is offered with a view to determining whether there should be a greater depth than the present project provides for, which I think is 6 feet part of the way and 9 feet the rest of the way. That is a very usual way of providing for these surveys.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that the construction of this project is feasible, and that there is sufficient commerce to warrant further expenditures by the Federal Government?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that the Trent River is the river which runs right by my home. Let me read to the Senator an extract from a letter that I have here. A part of that project is from New Bern to Polloksville, which is a distance, I think, of about 15 or 16 miles by water. As a matter of fact, the present depth from New Bern to Polloksville is more than 12 feet, the depth mentioned here, except a little stretch of less than a thousand yards, where the depth now is only about 9 feet, or probably a little less than 9 feet, the project depth; and the sole purpose here is to secure a report which would enable the engineers to remove that shoal, so as to make the depth there conform to the general depth of the river. The general depth from New Bern to Polloksville, with the exception of this little stretch, is, I think, about 15 feet.

I will read an excerpt from a letter I have received from a gentleman who, because he is largely interested in a manufacturing plant located at Polloksville, is thoroughly familiar with the situation there. He says:

This is a very important matter, and I hope you can find time to push it to a finish. After going up Trent River and showing Col. Mathewson and the Baltimore colonel—

These are two colonels who were down there making an investigation—

what two or three industrial plants were doing, and the possibilities of that section, they suggested that if another order were made for an examination and report on Trent River for a 12-foot channel from New Bern to Polloksville, a turning basin in Mill Creek, and a deeper channel from Polloksville to Trenton, it was possible that the next time we would get a favorable report.

Trent River is already 14 to 17 feet deep from New Bern to Polloksville, except a short stretch about 7 miles up the river over these shoals, where there is a depth of only about 6 feet of water. Now, the 12-foot depth up to Polloksville which is suggested in this amendment is simply to enable the engineers to recommend a project which would permit the deepening of the channel of the river above that point so as to make it conform more nearly to the general depth of the river. That is the only purpose. Above Polloksville it is proposed to ask a survey with a view to having the river for the whole length made a bit deeper than at present, because the commerce along that stretch of the river has developed very considerably since the last project was adopted and completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 10, after line 11, to strike out:

Survey to determine the advisability and cost to the United States of the following improvements of Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors, Calif.: (1) Dredging to 35 feet deep the main entrance channel, including an area of approach to the outer harbor, and the reclamation of an area near Reservation Point for the use of the United States; (2) dredging a channel at least 300 feet wide and 30 feet deep around the perimeter of west basin proper; (3) dredging a channel 300 feet wide and 30 feet deep from turning basin to southeast corner of east basin; (4) extension of San Pedro breakwater to a point between the Long Beach Harbor entrance and the sea outlet of the flood-diversion channel; (5) dredging 30 feet deep and 300 feet wide the Ceritos Channel from the east basin of Los Angeles Harbor to the turning basin of Long Beach Harbor; (6) acquisition of suction dredge and accessories.

And to insert:

Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors, Calif.: For the purpose of ascertaining the cost of improvements, as follows:

(1) Dredging to 35 feet deep the main entrance channel, including an area of approach to the outer harbor, and the reclamation of an area near Reservation Point for the use of the United States.

(2) Dredging a channel at least 300 feet wide and 30 feet deep around the perimeter of the west basin proper.

(3) Dredging a channel 300 feet wide and 30 feet deep from the turning basin to the southeast corner of east basin.

(4) Extension of San Pedro breakwater to a point between the Long Beach Harbor entrance and the sea outlet of the flood diversion channel.

(5) Dredging 30 feet deep and 300 feet wide the Ceritos Channel from the east basin of the Los Angeles Harbor to the turning basin of Long Beach Harbor.

(6) Acquisition of suction dredge and accessories.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, inquiring of the chairman of the committee, I should like to know whether he has had a conference with respect to these items with the Navy Department. I understand the Naval Affairs Committee has been giving some little attention—or, at least, will give some special attention—to the question of one or more naval bases upon the Pacific coast; and, of course, the question of harbors upon the Pacific coast is a matter that is important in the consideration of the naval defense of our country. Did the Senate's committee have in view in recommending this amendment the naval necessities of our country, or did they have in view primarily the commercial needs of the Pacific coast?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, our committee had in view primarily the commercial needs of the Pacific coast. I will say, however, with reference to this amendment, that the Senate committee did not attempt to change the House provision, except to put it in language more like the usual and ordinary way of making appropriations for surveys. We did not go into the details of the matter especially. We found from the hearings that the House committee had been satisfied as to the desirability of this survey, and so about all that the Senate Commerce Committee did was to rearrange the language and put it in a little different form. Primarily, however, we thought this was for the benefit of the commercial needs of the coast.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator if it would not be a wise idea, in the consideration of this question, to take into account the naval needs of the Government, if there shall be any such needs, in this harbor?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there should be any such needs, of course they should be taken into account, and I have no doubt but that the engineers will suggest those things if they have not done so already; but, of course, the Army does not consider especially the naval needs. In order to have them properly considered, of course there should be a sort of a joint commission; but I have not any doubt but that the engineers will suggest any naval needs that occur to them. And very likely the Navy Department, if they do consider that there are naval needs there, will suggest them to the Army Engineers, and they no doubt will cover them in their report as fully as they feel that they should.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will notice the first section of the bill, he will find that there is a provision there that requires the engineers to report not only upon the local advantages but upon all advantages.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator possibly was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Utah began. The Senator from Utah inquired about the naval needs.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; but I think that provision of the bill would require them to report not only upon the naval needs but upon all conditions. I may be mistaken about the extent of the amendment that the Senate inserted, but I think it is broad enough to permit the engineers to report upon all the needs.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is true. It does require the engineers to report upon the national benefits. Of course, that was primarily intended to bring about a statement with reference to the local benefits and the national benefits, with a view to having the locality put up what was just and proper on account of local benefits.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to that amendment to the bill, which has been agreed to, which I consider one of the most important amendments in the bill, and one of the most advanced steps with reference to river and harbor improvements. We have inserted a provision in the bill which requires the engineers, in submitting their reports, to point out as clearly and fully as they can the local benefits which will come from such an improvement, together with their recommendations as to the contributions that shall be made by localities. I believe that will result in very great good and very great improvement along the lines of proper river and harbor appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 8, to insert:

Tillamook Bay, Oreg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 9, to insert:

Tualatin River, Oreg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 12, after the word "Oregon," to insert "with a view of," and in line 14, after the word "and," to strike out "including," so as to make the clause read:

St. Helens, Oreg., with a view of connecting deep water in the Willamette Slough with deep water in the Columbia River, and any proposal of cooperation by local interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 16, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "including" and insert "with a view of the," so as to make the clause read:

Nehalem River, Oreg., with a view of the removal of submerged rock near the inshore end of south jetty and any proposal for cooperation by local interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 23, before the word "Duwamish," to strike out "Duwamish waterway, Seattle Harbor, Wash."; in the same line, after the word "Harbor," to strike out "with the report on the practicability"; and in line 24, before the word "of," to insert "Washington, with a view," so as to make the clause read:

Duwamish Waterway, Seattle Harbor, Wash., with a view of widening or deepening, or both widening and deepening, the channel to accommodate present and future commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 3, before the word "Wrangell," to strike out "Wrangell Narrows, Alaska," and in the same line, after the word "Narrows," to insert "Alaska," so as to make the clause read:

Wrangell Narrows, Alaska, with a view of deepening the channel to accommodate present and future commerce, and the determination of the relative advantages and practicability of the above improvement of Wrangell Narrows, as compared with the improvements of Dry Straits, recommended in House Document No. 68, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is an amendment I want to offer after line 9, page 13. I move to insert the words "Wrangell Harbor, Alaska."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, after line 10, on the same page, I desire to present this amendment, which was asked for by the commission which recently visited the Virgin Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 13, after line 10, insert the following:

Harbor of Christiansted, St. Croix, Virgin Islands, with a view to securing suitable channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in reading section 3 of the bill I notice that a most wise provision of existing law is repealed. I think a leeway of 40 per cent in excess of estimated cost of any project is large enough, as provided in existing law. The pending bill repeals this wise provision, and the estimated cost in a report upon a project may, if this provision of the bill is agreed to, be one-tenth of the amount which the project would cost. Evils have arisen in the past from just such estimates, and based upon experience in the past Congress passed the law now sought to be repealed. Now, Mr. President, this bill provides that it shall be repealed. I know it is not a committee amendment, and I simply want to state that when the bill is up for amendment I certainly shall ask the Senate to strike that part of the bill out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that is not a committee amendment, but is a provision in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. SMOOT. I stated that, and give notice now that when the committee amendments have been disposed of and the bill is open for further amendment I shall move to strike section 3 out of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 13, at the beginning of line 19, to strike out "SEC. 4" and insert:

"SEC. 4. That the following provisions relating to projects heretofore approved and adopted by Congress be enacted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I understood that the Senator from Washington had some amendment to offer at the end of line 10 with reference to Porto Rico. I direct his attention now to that item. I rose to inquire whether there is any provision for any contribution to be made by the Territory of Porto Rico?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That will be passed upon by the engineers in making their report. If the Senator will turn to page 3 he will see an amendment, which we have agreed to, to this effect:

Every report submitted to Congress in pursuance of this section or of any provision of law for a survey hereafter enacted, in addition to other information which the Congress has heretofore directed shall be given, shall contain a statement of special or local benefit which will accrue to localities affected by such improvement and a statement of general or national benefits, with recommendations as to what local cooperation should be required, if any, on account of such special or local benefit.

That applies to every survey in this bill and every survey that will be hereafter provided for.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the committee has taken into consideration the question of general legislation requiring, under certain circumstances, contributions to be made by the States in which the Federal appropriation is to be expended?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We expect that to be covered in this report of the engineers.

Mr. KING. That is a mere recommendation; but has the committee taken into account the enactment of any legislation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is as far as the committee has gone at this time.

Mr. KING. The reason why I make the inquiry is that I understand the State of Oregon, perhaps the State of Washington, the State of Massachusetts, and other States, have made very large contributions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator is mistaken. I do not think it is the States that have done it, but it is the localities. In Washington, for instance, they form what they call port commission districts, and within that territory they can levy taxes to be used for the purpose of improving the harbors.

Mr. KING. The local community or the State?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That will be covered exactly by this provision. That is the very purpose of this provision.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 2, after the word "cost," to insert "at present prices," so as to make the clause read:

Yaquina Bay and Harbor, Oreg.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, in requiring compliance with the conditions precedent to the prosecution of the project adopted in the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919, to credit the local interests with the cost at present prices of so much of the work performed by the port of Newport and the port of Toledo in the construction of the south jetty and the channel in the inner harbor as, in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers, conforms to the project plans and standards of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 7, before the word "Milwaukee," to strike out "Sec. 5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 12, before the word "Delaware," to strike out "Sec. 6."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, at the beginning of line 19, to strike out "Sec. 7."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 15, to insert:

Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to proceed with the prosecution of the existing project for lock and dam construction on that section of the river located in the State of Tennessee when the local interests in that State have complied with the conditions precedent imposed in the river and harbor appropriation act, approved March 2, 1919.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to state that that is simply a rearrangement of a provision in the bill as passed by the House, so as to bring it under the section.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether the investigations thus far made demonstrate the necessity and wisdom of putting in lock and dam construction and making the improvements called for?

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely. The Cumberland River runs from north to south in that part of our State, from Kentucky into Tennessee, for about 500 miles. For quite a distance it is the only means of communication. I have traveled the river, and I know how necessary is this improvement. The Corps of Engineers has recommended it, and I know from a personal examination that it can and ought to be utilized. It will open a productive country rich in farm products and rich in minerals, and there are no railroads in that part of our State. It is a matter of vital interest to a large area of my State, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not raise any objection to its inclusion in the bill.

Mr. KING. I will state to the Senator that I made some very exhaustive inquiries last year and the year before, with respect to such rivers and the projects covered by river and harbor bills, some in the Senator's State and some in Kentucky, and I found that on a number of those projects money had been wasted, that there was no necessity whatever for the appropriations, and that there was less traffic upon the streams now than there was many, many years ago, before the appropriations were made.

Mr. McKELLAR. That does not apply to this stream, where it is being improved. I hope the Senator will come to Tennessee so that I can give him an ocular demonstration of the facts. I shall be glad to do it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 7, to insert:

Willapa Harbor and River, Wash.: The sum of $71,775, when deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Secretary of War, shall be accepted by said Secretary of War as the total cash contribution required to be made by the city of Raymond and other local interests in connection with the project for improvement of Willapa Harbor and River, Wash., authorized by the river and harbor appropriation act approved July 27, 1916, and the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for improving Willapa Harbor and River, Wash.," approved September 19, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 18, to insert:

Houston Ship Channel, Tex.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, in requiring compliance with the conditions precedent to the prosecution of the project adopted in the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919, to credit the local interests with the cost of so much of the work performed by the city of Houston and the Harris County Houston Ship Channel navigation district in the construction of the turning basin and channel as, in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers, conforms to the project plans and standards of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 3, to insert:

The seagoing dredge Cumberland may be transferred to the appropriation for improving Savannah Harbor without charge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 7, to change the number of the section from 8 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 9. Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to proceed with the prosecution of the existing project for lock and dam construction on that section of the river located in the State of Tennessee when the local interests in that State have complied with the conditions precedent imposed in the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 6. That, within areas to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited from any source whatever, any free acid or acid waste, or oil, in any form, either directly or indirectly, into any navigable water; and every person and every corporation that shall violate, or that shall knowingly aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500, nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) for not less than 30 days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That this section may be enforced as provided in section 17 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved March 3, 1899, the provisions whereof are hereby made applicable thereto.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask that section 6 may be passed over. There is some question about whether we ought to put an additional amendment on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, section 6 will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 13, to insert:

SEC. 7. That there shall be printed 2,000 copies of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors passed between March 4, 1913, until and including the laws of the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, of which 400 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House, and 600 copies for the use of the War Department. Said compilation shall be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Washington if there is any real necessity for section 7, and if there is an appropriation for it why is the item in this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state that Col. Taylor came before the committee, and we set out his testimony in the report. He urged that this be done, and he said:

It has been customary to compile these laws from time to time and print an edition of 3,000 copies. I am making it 2,000 copies. I am making it 2,000 copies because we have found actually we have need for only 2,000 copies.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN. Does that include all of the river and harbor acts?

Col. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN. Does it collate affirmative legislation?

Col. TAYLOR. It does both. It takes in the river and harbor acts and all the bridge acts and matters of that kind which relate to river and harbor work. It has been customary to have this authorization in the river and harbor act about once in five or six years.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, the compilation is made in the Secretary's office?

Col. TAYLOR. It is made in the office of the Chief of Engineers.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN. When was the last one made?

Col. TAYLOR. In 1912 or 1913.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN. The list was made when?

Col. TAYOR. 1912 and 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the special requirement for it?

Col. TAYLOR. So that in referring to these matters we get them all together, and they can be readily found. They are of very great use in our office and apparently there has been considerable call for them from different Members of the Senate and House and by committees, where they seem to use them a great deal.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not present these matters to the House committee, did you?

Col. TAYLOR. No, sir; I had no opportunity. I had expected to do so, and then they suddenly decided to report the bill within a day or two and I had no opportunity. I did tell them I had some matters to take up with them and they promised to give me an opportunity to do it, but on account of the sudden decision to report the bill they failed to do it.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN. Have these publications heretofore been had out of this fund, or has it been done under the bill?

Col. TAYLOR. It has been done under the bill in exactly this same way.

The CHAIRMAN. What provision do you make for paying for it?

Col. TAYLOR. There is an allotment for printing these made to the War Department. We are given a certain allotment and it is paid for out of that.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, this does not mean any increased appropriation?

Col. TAYLOR. No, sir. We have not asked for any increase in appropriation on account of this at all. It comes out of our annual allotment, the same as the printing of the Chief of Engineer's report does.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no authority to do it?

Col. TAYLOR. No, sir; we have no authority.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to have authority?

Col. TAYLOR. We have to have special authority.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not understand why that is the case. If the appropriation has been made it was no doubt made in a lump sum and the War Department had a perfect right under the law to spend the money for printing. I know of no provision in the law that specifically states that such printing shall not be done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have just read the reason.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe the statement made is correct, and I wanted to know if the Senator had looked into the question further since I spoke to him about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Utah, of course, knows more about the printing laws than I do, and I think probably more than any other Senator. I did not look it up further, because Col. Taylor said he did not have authority to do it, and I took that as a statement of fact, thinking that the Engineer officer ought to be thoroughly familiar with it. He said they always had to get special authority at this time. I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be that the printing of 2,000 copies falls within the limitation of the number of copies that can be printed. If it does, then, of course, they would have to have authorization not by Congress but, under the printing law, by the Joint Committee on Printing, to print an additional number. That is all I can think of. I am sure if it is necessary the Joint Committee on Printing will not object.

I will not make objection to the item, only I do not want the different departments of the Government to think that they can come to Congress and have the printing laws repealed on appropriation bills without question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want them to do it, either. If the Senator from Utah thinks that this is not necessary, if he thinks that authority can be given to them for the printing of this document without express legislation, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to ask the Senator to withdraw the amendment, because I take it for granted that 2,000 copies will not be too many to meet the demand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore I am not going to object.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 17, after line 22, to insert:

SEC. 8. That appropriations heretofore, herein, or hereafter made for works of river and harbor improvements, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used for maintenance and for the repair and restoration of said works whenever from any cause they may have become seriously impaired, as well as for the further improvement of said works.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me the provisions of this section are very dangerous, and will permit a license that will prove very expensive to the Government. One of the maxims which ought to be followed in making appropriations is to designate with particularity the amount of the appropriation and the purpose for which the appropriation is to be expended. That makes for honest and efficient administration and tends to keep a check upon appropriations made.

If we allow the latitude that the proposed section 8 permits and authorize employees of the Government to utilize unexpended balances for other purposes in their discretion, it will lead to abuses which, in my opinion, will in the end prove very extravagant and harmful to the Government. I think it is very unwise to have a provision that the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may use an appropriation which is made for a specific purpose to maintain and repair and restore work. It may be that Congress, upon investigation as to what has been destroyed, may conclude to abandon it, and after an improvement for which an appropriation has been made has been destroyed, to permit some official of the Government without further authorization by Congress to divert an appropriation, which was made for some purpose, to the rehabilitation of the destroyed work is an example which, I think, will come back to vex the Government and will be very harmful in its operation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator misapprehends the purpose and effect of the amendment. The amendment does not permit the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers to take the money that has been appropriated for one project and use it on another project. It does authorize, however, as I understand it, where money is appropriated for the improvement or maintenance of a project, if the necessity requires more money for maintenance than we have appropriated, and there is more money for the carrying on of the improvement of the project, a part of the money may be used for the necessary maintenance.

The Senator will understand that in making these provisions where we specify the items in the bill, the amount for maintenance, for instance, is an estimated amount.

It is the amount estimated by the engineers that may be necessary to maintain the project. They may be mistaken. It may not be sufficient. This may occur from various reasons. Some unexpected storm or disturbance of some kind may come up that will require a larger sum for maintenance. If there is money appropriated for the improvement, it seems to me that it is economical and wise that part of the money could be used to take care of such an emergency. That is the purpose of this appropriation. It has been carried in almost all river and harbor bills for many years. Col. Taylor stated in his testimony that it was carried so frequently that he thought it was permanent law, and urged that before the House committee; but when they got to looking it up they found that it was not, but that it was carried in each river and harbor bill, and therefore only applied for the year. That is the purpose of the amendment. I think myself it is a wise one, and in the interest of economy and efficient conduct of these works.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Washington is mistaken when he says that the provision applies only to each particular project. The wording, I think, is in the plural all the way through, and I think it covers all projects, and can be used in any way that the Secretary of War may designate. It reads:

That appropriations heretofore, herein, or hereafter made for works on river and harbor improvements, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used for maintenance and for the repair and restoration of certain works whenever from any cause they may have become seriously impaired, as well as for the further improvement of said works.

I think that means that in an appropriation bill such as this, where a certain amount is appropriated for improvements on the rivers and harbors, and a certain amount is appropriated for maintenance of the rivers and harbors, that if it is found through any cause that any project is seriously impaired, then the part of the money that was appropriated for improvements can be expended upon the project so impaired for maintenance and for the repair and restoration of such work. I do not believe that it applies to the appropriation made for the particular project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, I did not mean that it applies only to one project. It applies to all projects, but I did not understand, for instance, that if we have appropriated money for the repair and improvement of harbors on the Atlantic and we have also appropriated money for maintenance and repair of harbors on the Pacific, and there should be a serious disturbance in some harbor on the Atlantic that required more money for repairs than they had there, that they could take, for instance, money from the improvement on the Pacific to that harbor on the Atlantic to repair it. However, if there is money appropriated for that harbor for improvement, a part of that money can be taken for maintenance.

Even if the construction that the Senator makes is correct, that they could take from money appropriated for improvements anywhere for repairs at a particular place, I see no serious objection to that in view of the language. The language is:

So much thereof as shall be necessary, may * * * be used for maintenance and for the repair and restoration of said works whenever from any cause they may have become seriously impaired.

It might be very important that those repairs should be done promptly. All this work must be done upon the estimate of the engineers. We take their judgment in the matter; we have to do it. So even from the standpoint that the Senator presents I do not see any serious objection to it, although I did not understand that the language went that far and I hardly think it will be construed that way now.

Mr. SMOOT. This does not apply only to this appropriation bill. It applies to appropriations heretofore, herein, or hereafter made. Appropriations heretofore have been made so much for improvement upon each project and so much for maintenance and for repairs. Under this amendment they can take money from the appropriation that was made originally for improvement of a particular project and use it for the restoration of an impairment of any project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it has been seriously impaired, what objection does the Senator see to that? Does not the Senator think the repairs should be made?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly they ought to be made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If they are not made, then the whole of the money that we have spent for improvements is lost or may be lost.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not rise to discuss the question whether it ought not or ought to be made. I simply wanted to call attention to the construction of the paragraph, as I understood it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize the fact that if there is a serious impairment to any project, it must be repaired, and there is no question about that. I recognize the fact that former projects have been appropriated for, so much for improvement and so much for maintenance, and the appropriations for improvements have not been all spent and the maintenance appropriation has been expended, and if serious impairment came to the project the only way it could be remedied would be to come to Congress and ask for additional appropriation for maintenance.

According to the manner in which river and harbor appropriation bills have been framed and enacted in the past—I mean prior to about three years ago—specific amounts were appropriated for improvement and specific amounts for maintenance.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I will conclude in just a moment. In the reports now submitted by the Engineers we find that they show the amount of money expended for improvement and the amount expended for maintenance. I think, however, Mr. President, the amendment of the committee goes a little too far by putting in the words "hereafter made." I think Congress ought to have the right to say how appropriations shall be hereafter made without repealing a law. I therefore think the Senator ought to modify the amendment by striking out the words "or hereafter made," so that it would read:

That appropriations heretofore or herein made for works of river and harbor improvements.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to such an amendment. It would necessitate, however, in the event we pass a subsequent bill, the insertion of a specific provision similar to that in the committee amendment; but of course that would not be difficult.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason for my making the suggestion is that we do not know whether the next river and harbor appropriation bill will be a lump-sum appropriation or on the old plan of making separate appropriations for improvements and maintenance.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. And I think that if a provision were now inserted in this bill to apply to appropriations hereafter it would hardly be wise.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator has no objection to my amendment, I hope he will allow it to be acted upon.

Mr. KING. I have no objection; I approve of the amendment; but as soon as it is disposed of I shall resume the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, on page 17, line 23, in the committee amendment, after the word "heretofore," it is proposed to insert the word "or"; and, in the same line, after the word "herein," to strike out the words "or hereafter," so as to read:

That appropriations heretofore or herein made for works of river and harbor improvements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have a suggestion——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me to conclude my observations, I shall then be glad to yield.

Mr. President, I have listened very attentively to the reply which has been made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and I do not think he has quite met the suggestion which I made a moment ago. I repeat that, in my opinion, it is very unwise to give this unlimited authority to the Secretary of War. I do not think that an appropriation that is made for a specific purpose, for instance, for the deepening of a channel or of a harbor, should be used for the purpose of improving it in some other particular. It seems to me that this section, if it is to be carried in the bill, ought to be modified. I repeat that many appropriations are made for a specific purpose. The sum of $100,000, for instance, may be appropriated for the deepening of a harbor or a channel, upon which other improvements have been authorized, and which perhaps are being made, and it seems to me it would be wholly improper, if all of that fund were not used in the deepening or widening of the channel or the harbor, to use it for other improvements which had been authorized in and about the harbor or in or about the channel; and yet this language, as I interpret it, would be sufficiently broad to permit the diversion of funds which had been appropriated for a specific purpose for use for some other purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is mistaken as to that. The department has no authority to use the money which we appropriate except for the projects which we approve. Whenever the Congress approves a project, that project and its limits are fully described in the reports of the engineers, which are referred to in the provision making the appropriation. Under no circumstances could they take any of the money thus appropriated and inaugurate a new project or use it for any purpose that Congress had not passed upon and authorized. I do not think there is any question about that. They can only use the money—and the section so provides—"for maintenance and for the repair and restoration of said works." That means works that the Congress has authorized and provided for. They can not expend it upon new works and new projects that have never been submitted to Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I respectfully dissent from the view of the Senator, if I interpret him correctly. From the language of the section, where an appropriation has been made for the construction of a harbor and $100,000, say, has been provided for deepening and $100,000 for widening the channel in the harbor, I have no doubt that if only $75,000 of it were used for deepening it, under this language, the other $25,000, in the discretion of the Secretary, might be appropriated for some other purpose in connection with the general project which had been authorized by Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It could not be used for any purpose, except repairs, where the work has been seriously injured and where repairs are needed.

Mr. KING. It could be used for repairs on the general improvement; not on the specific one but on the general one, of which the specific improvement may be a part. This amendment will permit the utilization of funds appropriated for a specific purpose, which constitutes a part of the general plan, for the improvement of the general plan, where all of the appropriation is not used for the specific part of the general plan.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator that the language in this clause will not bear that construction. The money can not be used except for repairs, where the work has been seriously impaired; that is, for maintenance.

Mr. KING. I beg the Senator's pardon. If the Senator will indulge me, in the last line and fraction of the section these words appear:

As well as for the further improvement of said works.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That means the work that Congress has adopted.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, if Congress has adopted a project, has authorized and appropriated for it, if there is money available for carrying it on, why should it not be done?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have a suggestion——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I simply have a suggestion to make in connection with the argument presented by the Senator from Utah. Would there be any objection to adding at the end of the section, after the words "as well as for the further improvement of said works," language similar to this:

Provided, however, That no appropriation shall be diverted from one project to another.

I think that really makes clear the intent of the Senator from Washington, as he, I think, correctly interprets the section; but there is certainly a question as to the meaning of the language as it now stands, and what I have suggested, it seems to me, would entirely clear it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. KING. That, in part, meets the criticism which I have suggested.

Mr. EDGE. I offer that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. But let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that if the word "project" could be interpreted in the proper way perhaps that would cover most of the criticism which I have offered; but the word "project," I am afraid, could be construed as the entire plan of improvement and not a particular part of the plan of improvement.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is a little too technical. In my opinion the word "project" has generally been considered to mean a scheme of improvement. Whatever it may be, it covers the whole question of a particular improvement.

Mr. KING. There may be a project within a project, as the Senator knows.

Mr. EDGE. Then I very frankly say that money may be used for a project within a project when maintenance is necessary.

Mr. KING. I object to that. I think that would be very unwise, because a portion of a project, constituting a project in itself, might be destroyed, and the appropriation made for that particular project, which is a portion of a project or a project within a project, might be diverted to the general project; and Congress might not be willing, with the destruction of that specific project, that the money should be diverted to the use of the general project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator that when we use the term "project" in referring to an improvement authorized by Congress all that it embraces or includes is what Congress has provided for. I will cite an example to illustrate that to the Senator. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and the people of his State in the particular locality were extremely anxious to secure an appropriation in this bill for the Jamaica Bay project. When that improvement was reported upon several years ago by the Engineers they recommended a certain project embracing certain improvements and ultimately providing for a depth of 30 feet, but they suggested that the first step should be a channel of 18 feet.

The Chief of Engineers approved the project generally but stated that, in his judgment, no improvement should be authorized by Congress to start with except for the 18-foot channel, and that nothing beyond that should be done without further authorization of Congress. The engineers hold that that project—and that is the rule of Congress—embraces only the 18-foot depth and not the 30-foot depth. That is what the appropriation was made for, and none of that money, under the language of section 8, could be used for anything outside of an 18-foot depth. The engineers so hold, and the Secretary of War so construes the law, that they can not expend any money to secure anything except the 18-foot channel until Congress authorizes something different; so that while there is a general big project looking to a depth of 30 feet, the only project within the contemplation of the law is the 18-foot project.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to express the hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] will be agreed to, because I think that that amendment clears up the section and makes it plain that if an appropriation is made for a certain project it can only be diverted from the improvement of the project to the maintenance of the identical project. Perhaps objection could be raised even to that, because that is not what Congress intended the money to be expended for, but with the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey I am quite positive that the money can not be diverted any further than as suggested by me.

Mr. KING. I am quite in accord with the views announced by my colleague, and I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey will be accepted.

Mr. EDGE. I offer this amendment to the amendment, namely, in section 8, on line 5, page 18, after the word "works," to add the words "Provided, however, That no appropriation shall be diverted from one project to another."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understand, this is a provision which has been carried in river and harbor bills for years; in fact, it has been carried so long that the department considers it as existing law rather than a year-to-year provision. I do not understand that there has ever been any construction placed upon it otherwise than that proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey; I believe there has been no abuse of this proposition, and, therefore, it seems to me that the provision is absolutely innocuous in so far as any danger is concerned such as that to which the Senator from Utah has called attention.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator is right, but I do not share the optimism which the Senator has expressed in reference to the manner in which these laws are administered.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator having this bill in charge to the last line of section 8 and ask whether he will accept as an amendment the following: After the word "further" and before the word "improvement," in line 5, page 18, add the word "authorized," so that it will read "as well as for the further authorized improvement of said works."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KING. That will eliminate some of the objection which I have to the provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee is adopted. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I wish to give notice to the Senator from Washington that I shall, perhaps, offer a further amendment to section 8, and I ask that I may do so when the bill gets into the Senate. I do not wish to defer the action upon this section now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey has been adopted, as has the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, and the committee amendment as amended has been agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 18, after line 5, to insert:

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to transfer, free of charge, to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for use in the execution, under his direction, of any civil work or works authorized by Congress, such material, supplies, instruments, vehicles, machinery, or other equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment as are or may hereafter be found to be surplus and no longer required for military purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if he has made inquiry of the Military Affairs Committee as to whether or not there are any supplies available for the purposes indicated?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not.

Mr. KING. We have been appropriating now in four or five bills, as I supposed, all of this paraphernalia not used by the Secretary of War to various other committees and instrumentalities of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state that Col. Taylor, representing the War Department, appeared before the committee and urged this provision very strongly, and it seems to me that it speaks for itself. If the War Department has material and machinery that could be profitably used in connection with this work, why is it not an economical thing to allow it to use it?

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator that in my opinion legislation of this kind is very unwise, and it has been demonstrated with respect to automobiles and a large amount of the surplus products that were the aftermath of the war. As the Senator knows, at the conclusion of the war there were thousands and tens of thousands of automobiles, and millions and tens of millions of dollars' worth of equipment, which were not needed any longer by the Army. We authorized the disposition by the Secretary of War to the Public Roads Department and to the Post Office Department, as well as to other departments, of some of these surplus automobiles. I am informed that some of the agencies of the Government to which allocations were made made exorbitant requests. They said: "The Government has these supplies on hand. Let us get as many of them as we need, and as we may need"; and the result was that their demands were very extravagant.

I think legislation of that kind is improper. The property ought to be sold, or a committee ought to be authorized to make a survey, and upon that survey and a determination of the imperative needs of any agency of the Government, then to make an appropriate allocation; but to make the general distribution which we have been making without limitation I submit is unwise, and leads to extravagance and waste.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator in many respects as to what he has said about extravagant use; but in other bills we have opened the door for that, and departments that have not been in the habit of using such material may have been, and doubtless have been, extravagant.

In this matter, with the engineers for rivers and harbors, I think that it is the safest place and the safest department where we could permit the use of those things; and, having done what we have, I think the move is all right. In addition to whether it is right or not, I assume that that department, as well as some others, is already in possession of and using material borrowed from the War Department, because, as a matter of fact, river and harbor work is itself within the War Department under the Engineer Corps.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator that this does not transfer the property to a new department. It is now under the Secretary of War, and the Engineers are under the Secretary of War; and it seemed to me that this was in the interest of economy, the interest of making proper use of what the Government might have, if it has anything. If the Senator can suggest any way in which better use can be made of any supplies that they have, I would welcome it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is needless to invite attention to the fact that if there are quantities of automobiles—and I use the word "automobiles" because we are familiar with the large number which the Government has—if the Government is in the habit of transferring to departments and to agencies and to executive instrumentalities supplies upon their request upon the theory that those supplies are not needed by the Government those instrumentalities and agencies will make exactions far beyond their needs. The men who make them may think that they are acting prudently, but the very fact that there is an understanding that the Government has supplies that are available, that will not be used, will lead to extravagant exactions. I have understood that we have made distribution of the automobiles and other articles that are called for here to various other departments, and that is the reason why I inquired of the Senator whether he had made inquiry to ascertain whether there were any supplies left available for distribution, as provided in this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take it that it would not be automobiles that would be used here. This is a supply of things that would be of special use in connection with carrying on river and harbor improvements. It struck me as such a wise provision in the statement of the engineers, and such a wise use of the supplies, that I did not inquire any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 18, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 10. That section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved June 25, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That whenever any vessel belonging to or employed by the United States engaged upon river and harbor works collides with and damages another vessels, pier, or other legal structure belonging to any person or corporation, and whenever, in the prosecution of river and harbor works an accident occurs damaging or destroying property belonging to any person or corporation, and whenever personal property of employees of the United States, who are employed on or in connection with river and harbor works is damaged or destroyed in connection with the loss, threatened loss, or damage to United States property, or through efforts to save life or to preserve United States property, the Chief of Engineers shall cause an immediate examination to be made, and if, in his judgment, the facts and circumstances are such as to make the whole or any part of the damages or destruction a proper charge against the United States, the Chief of Engineers, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall have authority to adjust and settle all claims for damages or destruction caused by the above designated collisions, accidents, etc., in cases where the damage or expense does not exceed $500, and pay the same from the appropriation directly involved, and to report such as exceed $500 to Congress for its consideration."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in my opinion there ought to be general legislation covering all such cases, not only in connection with rivers and harbors, but in connection with the Navy and Army. Within the last 30 days at least 12 or 14 bills have been passed by Congress for the purpose of allowing certain claimants to go to court. I think we ought to have a general bill covering this whole subject. As this is general legislation changing existing law, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold that point for just a moment. This amendment was urged very strongly by Col. Taylor. I can not lay my hand upon his statement just at this moment, however.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires, I will ask that the amendment go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the Senator to let it go over so that I can look up the statement of Col. Taylor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does my colleague withdraw the point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. KING. I shall raise it if he does not.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that this amendment is strictly limited to cases where the damage is done by vessels or craft employed in river and harbor improvements, that it does not cover anything else, and that no case can be passed upon where the damages are more than $500. I want to say to the Senator further that Congress has passed a law allowing suits to be brought against the United States in all cases of collision except in the case of warships or naval vessels—all merchant vessels. The act approved March 9, 1920, covers all cases of merchant vessels, allowing suits to be brought against the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Some 14 special bills dealing with this subject have been passed by Congress within the last 30 days.

Mr. NELSON. I can not help that. There is a general law by which they can go to court in all cases of merchant vessels. We have a general law covering them, and I will give the Senator a copy of it, so that he can see what it provides.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the Senator would; but I will ask that the amendment go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have found what I was looking for awhile ago, and I want to call it to the attention of the senior Senator from Utah and to the attention of the junior Senator from Utah also. I should like to have the junior Senator from Utah notice this, and then, after I make this statement, if the point of order is insisted upon, very well.

We have a law now, section 10 of the river and harbor act referred to here, which provides:

That whenever any vessel belonging to or employed by the United States engaged upon river and harbor works collides with and damages another vessel, pier, or other legal structure belonging to any person or corporation—

The Chief of Engineers can cause an immediate survey to be made, and he can settle the claim if it does not exceed $500. The only addition we make by this section is this:

And whenever personal property of employees of the United States, who are employed on or in connection with river and harbor works, is damaged or destroyed in connection with the loss, threatened loss, or damage to United States property, or through efforts to save life or to preserve United States property—

Then they can settle the claim, if it does not exceed $500.

If the Senate prefers to allow this law to stand as it is, under which they can settle a claim resulting from a collision where it does not exceed $500, and is not willing that they should settle the claim of a poor laborer or a man who is employed upon these works whose personal property is destroyed in his attempt to save life or save property of the United States, very well. That appealed to the committee, however, as a change that we could well afford to make in this legislation; and Col. Taylor submits, and there is included in the report, a list of the claims that have been pending. They are small claims; and, as the Senator from Utah says, we have passed legislation of this kind. During this session of Congress we have passed legislation of this kind for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, allowing them to settle such claims; and Col. Taylor called the committee's attention to the fact that we have a law to authorize the settlement of claims growing out of collisions between vessels, and things of that kind, but that we did not have a law allowing the settlement and adjustment of claims for the destruction of the personal effects of any man employed on river and harbor work, and so forth, and we felt that that ought to be put in.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In other words, we have an existing law which provides for the settlement of claims of corporations or large concerns to the extent of $500, but we are not willing to allow that same right to the poorer people, the employees and others, who may have been engaged in rendering very valuable services to the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The committee thought that that was the purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I still say that claims of this kind come up in the War Department and the Navy Department, and many others are referred to the Claims Committee, and there is hardly a deficiency appropriation bill passed by Congress that does not include a list of them.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Do you want to say to these poor laborers on river and harbor work, who have their property destroyed or injured, that they must go into the Court of Claims for a little claim that does not amount to over $50 or $100? Is that what you want?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had waited I would have told him what I want. I want the employees on river and harbor work to be treated exactly the same as employees of other departments of our Government and no differently. If there is to be a law passed providing that any employees of the Government shall have their claims adjudicated by the head of the department or by some individual in that department, and the amount paid, it ought to apply to all the employees of the Government. We ought to have a general law covering the whole question. There is no difference between the poor man working on rivers and harbors and the poor man working for the Navy or Army or any other department of the Government. When we talk about a law, if we are going to have it let us have a general law so that all these claims for the destruction of personal property can be settled by some one in the department, just as this amendment provides. It is general legislation, Mr. President, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator withhold his point of order for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. This is a somewhat new departure. For years the departments could not settle for a penny, except as it was sent up to Congress in the way of an estimate or audited claim. This is more open and wider than anything I have seen, because, in the first place, it says the Chief of Engineers. It does not say there shall be a board of survey, and that report should be sent up. Besides, it makes the limit very large and leaves the claims out of the reckoning of matters of appropriation entirely. I think all these matters should be passed upon by a board of survey and be sent up in the regular way, and should be promptly paid; but I do not like to see $500 as a limit that can be paid in the manner in which they propose to pay it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Wyoming says this is a new thing. The section amended was in the act of June 25, 1910—10 years ago.

Mr. WARREN. That is for vessels.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly; for vessels.

Mr. WARREN. I am speaking of it as a new thing so far as it is incompatible with other departments. I do not know any reason why a river and harbor bill should be in all respects entirely lawless, as compared with other appropriation bills and matters. Perhaps I should not use the term "lawless," but I do not know why it should have such a privilege over any other measures.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We are not asking for any special privilege in the river and harbor bill. We are asking for some consideration, however, for men working on river and harbor improvements, where their property is destroyed, and if we can not get that special legislation and can get it on the river and harbor appropriation bill, we want to do it.

Mr. NELSON. My recollection is that the Navy Department has the same power to settle small claims for collisions.

Mr. WARREN. That provision is only for the settlement of small claims.

Mr. NELSON. Up to $500, according to my recollection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know whether that is true or not, but whether the Navy Department has the authority or not has but very little weight with me, if it is a just proposition. If there is an opportunity to provide for the men on one class of work, I do not see why we should hold off and continue to do injustice to them because we are not covering everything in the Government service. I would like to see a general law, covering everybody. I think that would be very wise. But we have not done it, we are not doing it, and we will not do it. However, we have provided for claims of this kind, as well as other claims, with reference to various departments of the Government. As I said awhile ago, we provided for the Coast and Geodetic Survey just a short time ago, and we did it largely upon the basis that another branch of the Commerce Department had authority to settle claims, I forget now what it was, but it was shown in the report and shown in the RECORD here, and the Senate passed the bill.

Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to look the matter up, but my recollection is that the House of Representatives, at any rate, has held the river and harbor bill to be different from the ordinary appropriation bill. It has held matters to be in order that would not be in order upon a regular appropriation bill. But I am not going to make any particular contention because of that.

I know this appeals to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I know he is just as anxious to do justice to these people as I am, but it does seem to me that he ought not to insist, in a case like this, upon the point that it is general legislation.

The Senator from Wyoming suggests that there are large claims of this character. At the same time he refers to collision of vessels, damage to property, and destruction to property. If the engineers can safely settle those claims, and nobody can point out where they have not properly settled them, why can they not settle claims of this character?

Mr. SWANSON. In the Navy Department there were a great many small claims accumulated for damage by aircraft and damage of various kinds arising from collision of vessels. After looking at those claims and taking the time of Congress, we authorized the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims not exceeding $500.

Mr. SMOOT. For collision.

Mr. SWANSON. It is for damage by aircraft, and is not confined to collision. As I understand the law, take the aircraft, a man may injure somebody's farm or house. All those little things accumulated, and in France there were many of them, and we authorized the Navy Department to settle claims not exceeding $500. We saved time by it, we saved money by it, and we saved worry by it; and it seems to me it is a pretty good policy where the amount does not exceed $500.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator remember what appropriation is made? What amount per annum is appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. SWANSON. We did not make an appropriation per annum. These reports have to come in, and appropriations are made subsequently for them. But I do not think it is very much. We made no general appropriation for it.

Mr. WARREN. How much per annum? Perhaps $5,000?

Mr. SWANSON. I could not tell. I have no idea, except that I know in France, having airplanes, and at the navy yards, vessels going everywhere, trouble coming, little burnings, and so on, the claims accumulated, and it was nearly impossible to settle them in Congress. We thought it was better to let them settle claims not exceeding $500. Some wanted to make it more, but we refused, because we felt satisfied that these little claims could be satisfied that way better than by litigation.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure that in the Army there is a fund for settling such claims as damages arising from firing big guns in the neighborhood of houses, where they shatter windows, and that sort of thing.

Mr. WARREN. I suggested that for years there was nothing of that kind, and finally a small amount was allowed in our regular annual appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. We authorized it. I think a fund was given to the War Department and they settled the claims.

Mr. SWANSON. If you were to repeal that provision as applying to claims of $5, $10, $25, or $50, requiring them to be settled in the Court of Claims, it would cost any amount of money.

Mr. LODGE. I know the War Department settle such claims themselves.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to these facts, which, I think, will appeal to him: During the last 10 years they have settled under the authority they had claims amounting to $7,240.13, or an average of $814.14 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for collisions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is right. They have settled, for instance, claims of the Norfolk & Southern Railway Co., the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., the Tucker Stevedoring Co., the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co., the Columbia River Packers' Association, and a long list of others. That is the general character of the claims they have settled. What about these other claims? The engineers say:

> The desirability of additional relief legislation is shown by the fact that there have accumulated during the past 10 or 15 years under the Engineer Department a total of about 25 claims, which have been carefully investigated and found to be just, all but 5 of which have been submitted to Congress with recommendations that appropriations be made to authorize payment. No appropriations have been made in response to the recommendations. The five which have not been recommended have likewise been investigated and found to be just and reasonable, but have not been recommended because their adjustment has been only recently completed. The total of these claims is $9,960.58, or an average of less than $1,000 per annum.

What is the character of these claims?

Here is a list of the claims:

> Reimbursement for value of personal effects destroyed as result of explosion on ship Alum Chine.

That is for the ordinary individual, no company being involved there.

> Reimbursement for value of personal effects lost by burning on U. S. dredge General C. B. Comstock; 22 civilian employees of the Engineer Department at large.

They are the ones who suffered from that loss.

> Reimbursement for windows broken by concussion from blasts; Mr. P. C. Grimm, Lincoln, Wash.
> Reimburse crew of dredge Captain C. W. Howell for private property lost when dredge sank, September 14, 1911; 16 men, composing the crew of the U. S. dredge Captain C. W. Howell.

That is the character of claims the engineers want to settle. They have adjusted these claims. They have decided what is due. They have sent their recommendations down to Congress, and we have not provided for them, and these men must go without their money. They can not afford to hire an attorney and go into the Court of Claims. It would cost much more than their claims, and it does seem to me that we ought to make this provision, and that we can safely make it. If we are not going to do it, we ought to repeal the legislation for the settlement of claims of great companies with reference to collisions, where we have provided for their settlement. It seems to me that ought to appeal to the Senator from Utah, and that we ought not to hold these things off because we have not a general proposition. I appeal to the Senator to allow this to stand.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, these claims from the department have come to the Appropriations Committee, not 5 or 10 or 25 claims, but hundreds of claims. This is the first time I have heard that there has been a refusal of such claims when submitted, and submitted in the regular way. The Secretary of the Treasury may have refused to submit them to the committee; I do not know; but I do know that hundreds of claims have been paid. They are in almost every deficiency appropriation, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has already stated.

As far as general legislation is concerned, I am perfectly willing to support such legislation; but I want it to be a general law, and not apply to any particular employees of the Government. If it is fair for one employee, it is fair for another. I still insist upon the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that it may go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a question as to whether or not it is out of order, and I hope the Chair will see fit to submit it to the Senate when it comes up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment goes over with the point of order pending. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee also recommends, on page 19, after line 15, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 11. Specifications for work authorized in this or previous or subsequent river and harbor appropriation acts may be printed locally, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, anything in the law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. SMOOT. I make a point of order that that is general legislation upon an appropriation bill and changes existing law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Utah has spoken to me with reference to that provision. The sole purpose of the committee in putting that provision in was in the interest of economy. Col. Taylor told the committee that the present practice or method resulted in not only a great deal of delay but also in considerable expense. The committee took his word for it. The chairman of the committee, at any rate, knows very little about these printing regulations. The Senator from Utah has assured me that it is in fact cheaper to have it done under the Joint Committee on Printing. That committee, as I recollect, has already issued an order under which the Engineer Department can have these things printed at their district offices—for instance, at the district office on the Pacific coast—so as to cause little delay, and the Senator from Utah calls my attention to a copy of the order. If that is the case, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment, or rather ask that it be rejected independently of the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care how it goes out of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Still the purpose of the amendment was economy and efficiency and quick service.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say in answer to Col. Taylor that there are certain forms and publications that have been printed in private printing shops in different parts of the country for the Government. When the Government Printing Office is asked to bid upon them they have to set up all the type, they have to get the form in shape, and they have all the expense attached to the first order, whereas the private printing company already has the form set up, and perhaps there are not more than two words to change in the form, and all of that original expense is not taken into consideration by them, and therefore they can, in the particular order, do it more cheaply, perhaps, than the Government Printing Office can. But after the Government Printing Office gets a form set up and in the same position as those private printing offices throughout the United States, then the testimony shows that their bids run from 2 per cent to 400 per cent less than the outside bids.

I will assure the Senate that the Joint Committee on Printing had no other idea, and never will have, than to save money for the Government of the United States. When it can not be saved at the Government Printing Office, as in the case of the printing of facing slips by the million for the Post Office Department, the committee readily issues an order to the Postmaster General or to any other department whereby they could be printed in different parts of the country.

When this very matter was up before the Joint Committee on Printing—for it has been there—the question arose then as to the question of time; but we found that the great bulk of such printing was done in Baltimore; and I could not see how time was saved by having a letter come from San Francisco to Baltimore or having it come from San Francisco to Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator this: This relates only to specifications, as I recollect it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The specifications for one project will be entirely different, probably, from the specifications for another project. They are not general blanks.

Mr. SMOOT. The general terms are the same, but particular items and locality are different. If the Senator has seen them, he will know that a large part of the specifications are similar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I said a while ago, the action of the committee was based entirely upon a matter of economy. We took the statements of Col. Taylor with reference to their procedure and what they had to do.

I recognize the fact that the Senator from Utah is more familiar, as I said, with printing matters than any other Senator and probably than almost anyone else in the country, and I am willing to take his judgment on matters of that kind, just as I am willing to take the judgment of the engineers upon matters within their line of work or within their province. So I am perfectly willing for the Senate to reject the amendment, and I ask that it be done that way instead of on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah withdraw his point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, with that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 19, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 12. That the agreement entered into by the Secretary of War on behalf of the United States with the Groton Iron Works, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Maine, and others, on the 1st day of December, 1917, and recorded in deed book 66, page 381, of the land records of Alexandria, Va., granting to said Groton Iron Works, its successors or assigns, an option to purchase 46.57 acres, more or less, of land located below high-water mark, and made in the course of river improvement upon the submerged soil of the Potomac River in what is known as Battery Cove, on the western bank of the Potomac River, in or near the city of Alexandria, Va., "subject to the approval of the Congress of the United States, and upon the express condition precedent that authority to that effect be first conferred upon him by statute," for the sum of $70,000, and which said agreement was by said Groton Iron Works assigned to the Virginia Shipbuilding Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Virginia by an indenture dated April 15, 1918, and recorded in deed book 67, at page 515 of the said land records of Alexandria, Va., be, and the same is hereby, ratified and approved; and whenever title to the whole of said reclaimed area, comprising 46.57 acres, shall be vested and confirmed in the United States either by final judgment in the action of ejectment now pending in the courts of the District of Columbia, entitled The United States of America, plaintiff, against Marine Railway & Coal Co. (Inc.), a corporation, defendant at law, being case No. 54872 on the docket of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or by concession of the party or parties now claiming title adverse to the United States, the Secretary of War shall, on behalf of the United States, execute, acknowledge, and deliver to the Groton Iron Works, its successors or assigns, a deed in fee simple to the said tract of land known as Battery Cove, being the whole of said reclaimed area, comprising 46.57 acres, which adjoins the upland and is claimed by the Marine Railway & Coal Co. (Inc.), Michael B. Harlow, and the estate of Park Agnew, deceased, the estate of Cecelia L. Carne, the Southern Railway Co., and their grantees, for the sum of $70,000 therefor, which sum shall be credited to the proper fund as provided under existing law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think before it is read I should say a word with reference to the amendment inserting section 12. This amendment was not really submitted to the committee. I intended to submit it to the committee and had it prepared and had the report from the department and expected to do it, but we were rushed and we came to a conclusion upon another amendment, I think, just when the bells rang for a roll call in the Senate. The committee authorized me to put in an amendment with reference to surveys, and so forth, and this amendment was inserted.

I feel that I ought to say that strictly it is not really a committee amendment. With that statement, if any member of the committee should prefer that it be not treated as a committee amendment, I will withdraw it, but I thought I ought to make that statement in fairness to them and to the Senate.

I will say that I have a letter from the Secretary of War giving all the facts with reference to the amendment and giving all the facts that I have in regard to it. He recommends it very strongly. He made this contract, I think, about the time we got into the war and in the hope of hastening shipbuilding construction. It is for the purpose of carrying out contracts actually made and entered into by the Secretary of War, of course subject to approval by Congress, and I present it in that way.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to ask the chairman to give a very brief explanation of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not do it better than by reading the letter from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 7, 1920.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to reply to your letter of the 6th instant, inclosing for my consideration a copy of an amendment intended to be proposed by Senator SWANSON to the pending river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 11892). The purpose of the proposed amendment is to sanction an agreement made by me for the sale of a tract of reclaimed land in the Potomac River and to authorize the sale of the said land in accordance with the terms of the agreement.

The pertinent facts are as follows:

The river and harbor act of June 25, 1910, made provision for the improvement of Potomac River at Alexandria, Va., and in the prosecution of this work it became necessary to select a place for the convenient deposit of the material dredged from the channel. It was decided to use for this purpose a certain submerged area known as "Battery Cove," a shallow indentation in the shore line of the river just below Alexandria. A riprap wall was built along the river edge of the cove and dredged material was deposited behind the wall and between it and high-water mark on the Virginia shore, thus converting into fast land an area of approximately 46.57 acres. The surface was built up to about the line of ordinary high water, and being the proprietor of the bed and banks of the Potomac River within the District of Columbia through cession of the State of Maryland, the Government claimed ownership of the filled-in area. This claim was disputed by the owners of the adjacent upland, who asserted ownership and possession; but as a result of negotiations an agreement was reached to let the question of title remain in abeyance until judicially decided. Thereupon the United States brought an action in ejectment in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against one of the upland owners to recover a part of the land, and the final judgment in that action will settle the disputed question of title to the whole of the reclaimed area.

In November, 1917, the Groton Iron Works, a corporation having a contract with the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation for building vessels in Alexandria for Government use, submitted to the department an offer to purchase this land, with a view to its improvement and utilization as a site for a shipbuilding plant. As immediate possession was desired, and under exsting conditions a sale could not be effected, it was also requested that a temporary lease be given. In considering the proposition the department, after carefully estimating the value of the property, decided that $1,500 per acre was a fair and reasonable price, if disposed of in its entirety, and that 6 per cent on this valuation would be a fair annual rental charge.

It was well understood that the Secretary of War could not lease the property, as it was not in the possession of the Government, and that, if in its possession, he could not sell it without the authorization of Congress. Consideration of all the facts and elements in the case resulted in a formal agreement being entered into December 1, 1917, between the Secretary of War and the several parties in interest embodying the following terms:

1. That the persons in possession of the property and claiming title thereto adverse to the United States might lease it to the Groton Iron Works for a period not exceeding five years at an annual rental of $4,200.

2. That the lease shall be subject to the action in ejectment pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and to any right of title and possession which may be affirmed in the United States by said action.

3. That the rent accruing under the lease shall be deposited in an approved depository for safe keeping until the action in ejectment is decided, and then paid to the United States if successful, otherwise to the lessors.

4. That, subject to the approval of Congress, and upon the express condition precedent that authority to that effect be first conferrred on the Secretary of War by statutes, the Groton Iron Works shall have the option to purchase the property for the sum of $70,000 in case the title of the United States shall be established or conceded.

In pursuance of this agreement the owners of the adjacent upland who were in possession of the disputed area made a lease by virtue of which the Groton Iron Works entered into possession and constructed its plant. The proposed amendment, if adopted by Congress, will authorize the Secretary of War to consummate the agreement to sell the property, and I recommend its favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

There are the facts with reference to the amendment. It seemed to me that it presented a case where we could very properly and should very properly give our consent to it. I overlooked calling it up in the committee. It was printed by mistake as a committee amendment. If any Senator thinks we ought not to consider it as a committee amendment, I will gladly withdraw it. Those are the facts, and if no Senator makes any objection it can properly be considered at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask what is to be gained by having this matter disposed of at the present time and on the pending bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know that there is anything special to be gained. It has been nearly three years since the option was given. I do not know of anything special to be gained, except I suppose the people who have built their shipbuilding plant on the property would like to have assurance, if the title is to be held by the courts to be vested in the United States, that the title will be passed on. But I do not see any special loss or advantage.

Mr. POMERENE. How can we by legislative act confirm that title so long as it is in the courts?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is expressly understood, of course, that the title does depend upon the decision of the courts. If the Senator thinks the amendment should be omitted, I will gladly withdraw it under the circumstances.

Mr. POMERENE. I see nothing to be gained by it. It seems to me it is a question that is to be disposed of by the courts, and we can not by any legislative act deprive the riparian owner of rights to which he is entitled.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will permit me, the only thing I see is that if the supreme court should decide that the land belongs to the United States, the title can not pass until legislation of this character is enacted; and, of course, they would have to come in and wait until we could get the legislation considered. Of course this does not pretend to divest anyone of his rights, except if the court should hold that it is land of the United States, then it authorizes the Secretary of War to make the transfer that he agreed to make.

Mr. POMERENE. The entire legislation is based upon the game of "if." I think I shall object to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I feel under the circumstances that I should withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it seems to me it is only a question of good faith of the Government in an emergency of war. These people in Alexandria went to great expense to put up this great plant on the property under an agreement made by the Secretary of War on the part of the Government so far as the Government was concerned. It is a very doubtful question whether the Government can obtain riparian rights. So far as the Government is concerned, it said, "If you will put your plant there when it is necessary for the prosecution of the war, we will agree to recommend to Congress that you shall be given an option to purchase the land." I think the amount involved was $70,000.

It seems to me that for the Government to repudiate the contract which was made in an emergency by the Secretary of War, after hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended in buildings, on the assumption that Congress would carry out the promise made by the Secretary of War, would be very harsh on these people. There is involved simply a question of good faith.

It is a litigated question. It was very urgent that the ships should be built and they could not be built without the construction of the plant on this land. So the Government said, "If you will build the plant on this land and go ahead with the construction of the ships, we are satisfied Congress will consent to our agreement, but we can not say it will do so." It was agreed that if the Government should win the suit and obtain title to the 46 acres of land, the shipbuilding company would be allowed to have it for $70,000 and take the chances with the riparian owners. Suppose the Government should win the suit and obtain title to the land, do you think it would be honorable for the Government to require them under this agreement, when they have put a million dollars' worth of buildings on this land, to pay a hundred thousand dollars? They are at the mercy of the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I shall be ready to pass upon that question when it arises. I suspect the riparian owners claim title to this made land.

Mr. SWANSON. This does not interfere with the riparian owners.

Mr. POMERENE. I object to the amendment at the present time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I withdraw the amendment. I think I have the right to do that, for it really is not a formal committee amendment. Then, of course, later the Senator from Virginia can offer the amendment in connection with the bill, if he desires to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, has the Senator from Washington more committee amendments to present?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have another committee amendment which I desire to offer, on page 3, line 24. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

Camden Harbor, Me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 10 there is a provision mbraced in lines 10 and 11 which really belongs on page 4. I do not desire to change the language, but simply desire to transpose it to where it properly belongs. I send an amendment to the desk to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to transfer to page 4, between lines 7 and 8, the item found on page 10, which is embraced in lines 10 and 11, as follows:

Twelve-foot channel from Peconic Bay to Jamaica Bay, N. Y.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 7, after line 17, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

Gulfport Harbor and Ship Island Pass, Miss.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, those are all the committee amendments, except the amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi properly, under the unanimous-consent agreement, can not be taken up until the other committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that all committee amendments had been disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There were some committee amendments which were passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. Some committee amendments have been passed over; but I understood the agreement was that any committee amendments which would cause discussion or require a roll call would not be taken up.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That they would not be taken up to-day.

Mr. HARRISON. This is not a committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under the unanimous-consent agreement reached when I asked for the consideration of the bill, the Senator would really have to wait until we dispose of the committee amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. I will wait. I thought all the other matters had gone over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think some Senators would prefer that the course as originally agreed upon should be followed, though I myself would have no objection to the Senator from Mississippi offering his amendment at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That disposes of the committee amendments, and we shall not proceed further with the bill to-night.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Washington what has been done with section 6 of the pending bill, the section relating to throwing of acids, and so forth, into any navigable water?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That section has been passed over.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply want to suggest a question to the chairman of the committee. The language reads, in part, thus:

SEC. 6. That, within areas to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited from any source whatever, any free acid or acid waste, or oil, in any form, either directly or indirectly, into any navigable water.

Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that a steel plant is on a small nonnavigable creek which flows into a navigable stream, would such a stream be included under the language of the section?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am inclined to think that, probably, it would, although I have not thought about any case of that kind.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not entirely clear about it; but it must be borne in mind that this is a criminal statute, and it would be strictly construed. I simply want to suggest to the Senator that I have some uncertainty about the point I have mentioned, and, as it is a criminal statute, it ought to be made perfectly clear as to what is the intention of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I have not looked up the decisions, but I understand that the Supreme Court has held that in the case of a navigable stream the tributaries also are navigable.

Mr. POMERENE. There has been some holding to that effect; but I wanted this to be made perfectly clear, in view of the fact that it was a statute of a criminal character.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Supreme Court has held that a stream is navigable if it can, in fact, be navigated in its ordinary and natural condition. I desire, however, to call the attention of the Senator to what is attempted to be met by the provision.

There is now a law, I understand, substantially the same as this, which applies only to the harbor of New York. It is a very important matter. The supervisor of the port of New York has been seeking additional appropriations in order to secure further assistance to take care of and enforce the law. Col. Taylor told us of one instance not very long ago where some one threw a cigarette, I think it was, over the side of a ship in the harbor close to one of the piers. It set fire to the oil that was on the surface of the water and burned up the pier and placed several ships in very great danger of destruction. The law at present applies apparently only to the harbor of New York. At Norfolk, Boston, Baltimore, and other ports there is a similar provision, which is attempted to be met by this provision. That is its purpose. I desired it to go over, because some Senators are rather concerned as to whether we should incorporate the word "willfully" in the section.

Mr. POMERENE. I rather assumed that one of the purposes of the section was to preserve the fish in the streams and rivers. I know that many of the States have statutes controlling that situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This amendment is really intended to apply to harbors?

Mr. POMERENE. I simply wanted to suggest the difficulty that was in my own mind for the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We will carefully look into that phase of the matter.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I did not intend to discuss, and will not do so at this time—because I have already discussed it with the chairman of the committee—the question of inserting the word "willfully" before the word "violate" in the section. I really think the section as it appears is rather broad. As I have advised the chairman of the committee, I do not want to make a point of order against it, for I think it has some merit, but I think that innocent violators of the provision should be protected in some way; and when the section is before the Senate I will discuss the matter a little further.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That phase of it will be very carefully considered. We do not want to work any hardships that can be avoided upon anyone.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I submit the amendments which I send to the desk to the Army reorganization bill, being Senate bill 3792. The amendments are for the purpose of carrying out the views which I expressed in my remarks some three days ago, to wit, that instead of the proposed college training, even though it be voluntary, we shall have one-third of our Regular Army enlisted for one year and two-thirds for three years, to the end that the one-year men at the end of the year may be released from service and put into the reserves, their places to be taken by new men for the next year, and so on, until we secured an Army of a half million men, instead of the system provided in the Army reorganization bill. My amendments involve a good many changes in the pending bill, and I will ask to have the bill printed with the amendments in it which I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be received, printed as requested, and lie on the table.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if there is nothing further, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 19, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 17, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Out of the deeps we cry unto Thee, our Father in heaven, a very present help in trouble. We find ourselves with the rest of the world confronting grave and stupendous problems which affect seriously the individual and every home throughout the land.

Our prayer is that we may follow Thee in our relations with mankind through that subtle and mysterious quality we call conscience, which points the way to truth with the same accuracy as the needle points the mariner over the trackless sea; that we may move forward to larger life, liberty, and justice; under the spiritual leadership of Thy son Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 12610.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 40, 42, 43, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 67, 68, 76, 80, 84, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 100, 102, 112, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 145, 154, 158, 159, 160, 167, 168, 174, and 185.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 63, 64, 65, 66, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 77, 82, 87, 88, 89, 90, 98, 99, 101, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 141, 142, 143, 144, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 155, 157, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, and 189, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$24,060"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"The duty placed upon the Secretary of the Interior by section 4 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883, shall be performed on and after July 1, 1920, by the Civil Service Commission.

"For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Civil Service Commission, including furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto; supplies; telegraph and telephone service; freight and express charges; fuel, heat, light and power; window washing; street car fares not to exceed $100; stationery; law books, books of reference, directories, newspapers, and periodicals, not to exceed $350; charts; purchase, exchange, maintenance and repair of motor trucks, motor cycles and bicycles; maintenance and repair of electric conduit; postage stamps to prepay postage on matter addressed to postal-union countries; and special-delivery stamps; in all, $50,000.

"For rent of building for the Civil Service Commission, $16,875."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the sum stricken out by said amendment and strike out lines 15 to 20, inclusive, on page 32 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For temporary employees in the Department of State, $402,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum and not more than 8 persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: Four at $4,500 each, 3 at $4,000 each, 10 at $3,500 each, and 5 at $2,500 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,060"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"Section 3595 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, providing for the appointment of an Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, San Francisco, Cincinnati, and Chicago, and all laws or parts of laws so far as they authorize the establishment or maintenance of offices of such assistant treasurers or of Subtreasuries of the United States are hereby repealed from and after July 1, 1921; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to discontinue from and after such date or at such earlier date or dates as he may deem advisable, such Subtreasuries and the exercise of all duties and functions by such assistant treasurers or their offices. The office of each assistant treasurer specified above and the services of any officers or other employees assigned to duty at his office shall terminate upon the discontinuance of the functions of that office by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to transfer any or all of the duties and functions performed or authorized to be performed by the assistant treasurers above enumerated, or their offices, to the Treasurer of the United States or the mints or assay offices of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, or to utilize any of the Federal reserve banks acting as depositaries or fiscal agents of the United States, for the purpose of performing any or all of such duties and functions, notwithstanding the limitations of section 15 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, or any other provisions of law: Provided, That if any moneys or bullion, constituting part of the trust funds or other special funds heretofore required by law to be kept in Treasury offices, shall be deposited with any Federal reserve bank, then such moneys or bullion shall by such bank be kept separate and distinct from the assets, funds, and securities of the Federal reserve bank and be held in the joint custody of the Federal reserve agent and the Federal reserve bank: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to deny the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to use member banks as depositaries as heretofore authorized by law.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to assign any or all the rooms, vaults, equipment, and safes or space in the buildings used by the Subtreasuries to any Federal reserve bank acting as fiscal agent of the United States.

"All employees in the Subtreasuries in the classified civil service of the United States, who may so desire, shall be eligible for transfer to classified civil-service positions under the control of the Treasury Department, or if their services are not required in such department they may be transferred to fill vacancies in any other executive department with the consent of such department. To the extent that such employees possess required qualifications, they shall be given preference over new appointments in the classified civil service under the control of the Treasury Department in the cities in which they are now employed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "two at $2,200 each, one at $2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$852,790"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

On page 83 of the bill in line 23 strike out "$68,290," and insert in lieu thereof "$68,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 156: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$171,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendment numbered 53 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1 to 35, inclusive, relating to the Senate: Appropriates for the compensation of employees and expenses of the Senate in the manner and the amounts proposed by the Senate amendments.

On Nos. 36, 37, 38, and 39, relating to the Joint Committee on Printing: Increases the compensation of employees of the Joint Committee on Printing, as proposed by the Senate, as follows: Clerk from $3,000 to $4,000, inspector from $2,000 to $2,250, and a stenographer from $1,000 to $1,500.

On Nos. 40 to 52, inclusive, relating to the Library of Congress: Appropriates $7,500 for the salary of the Librarian, as proposed by the House, instead of $7,000, as proposed by the Senate; increases the compensation of the Assistant Librarian from $4,000 to $4,500, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out an assistant chief clerk at $1,800 and a stenographer and typewriter to the chief assistant librarian at $1,600; authorizes the employment of one person at a compensation not to exceed $3,000 per annum in the legislative reference service; makes $500 of the appropriation for "temporary services" immediately available; makes $625 of the appropriation for "Sunday opening" immediately available; increases the amount for the purchase of books and other additions to the library from $80,000 to $90,000; increases the amount for contingent expenses from $8,500 to $9,000; and provides an additional telephone switchboard operator at $720.

On No. 53, relating to the Bureau of Efficiency: The committee of conference have been unable to agree.

On Nos. 54 and 55, relating to the Civil Service Commission: Inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, permitting the detail of clerks or other employees to the Civil Service Commission from the executive departments in the District of Columbia for duty in the fourth civil-service district; inserts the language, stricken out by the Senate, placing the appropriations for contingent expenses and rent for the commission directly under its jurisdiction, and modifies the language of the appropriation for contingent expenses so that it will include the items of expenditure now permitted under the current appropriations for contingent expenses.

On Nos. 56 to 63, inclusive, relating to the State Department: Strikes out the change proposed in the designation of a "law clerk" and provides for the following additional employees on the temporary roll, as proposed by the House, instead of on the statutory roll, as proposed by the Senate: Two drafting officers at $4,500 each, 3 drafting officers at $4,000 each, 5 drafting officers at $3,500 each, 2 assistant solicitors at $4,500 each, 5 assistant solicitors at $3,500 each, 5 law clerks at $2,500 each, and reduces the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses from $20,000 to $15,000.

On Nos. 64 and 65: Provides for a mechanical superintendent at $2,250 in the office of the chief clerk of the Treasury Department.

On Nos. 66 to 70, inclusive, relating to the General Supply Committee: Provides an additional clerk of class 3 at $1,600; strikes out the additional clerk at $1,400 and the additional clerk at $1,200, proposed by the Senate; and increases the sum for expenses of handling surplus material, supplies, and equipment from $80,000 to $100,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 71 and 72: Reduces the appropriation for salaries in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance from $9,000,000 to $8,500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 73: Authorizes the use of not to exceed $1,200,000 of the appropriation "Expenses of loans" for temporary employees in the office of the Register of the Treasury, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $550,000 for that purpose, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 74 and 75: Provides for a principal clerk at $2,000 in the office of the Comptroller of Currency, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 76: Restores the paragraph, stricken out by the Senate, prohibiting the detail of enlisted personnel of the Coast Guard for duty in the office of the Coast Guard in the District of Columbia.

On No. 77: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the authority for the expenditure of $4,020 for rent of a branch office in the District of Columbia for use of the collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland.

On No. 78, relating to the Independent Treasury: Restores the language stricken out by the Senate abolishing the Subtreasuries, and so modified it as to make clear the manner in which the funds now required by law to be kept in the Treasury or in the Subtreasuries may be hereafter deposited or kept in the Federal reserve banks.

On Nos. 79 and 84, inclusive, relating to the appropriation for temporary employees in the War Department: Appropriates $3,000,000 instead of $2,500,000, as proposed by the House, and $4,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; provides an allotment of $1,850,000 for The Adjutant General's Office, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate; authorizes the employment from the appropriation of three additional employees—one at $2,500, one at $2,200, and one at $2,000 in the office of the Secretary of War; and strikes out the authority for the employment of an additional employee at $2,400, and one at $2,000 in the office of the Surgeon General.

On Nos. 85 and 86: Appropriates for the pay of the chief clerk in The Adjutant General's office, at $2,750, instead of $2,500, as proposed by the House, and $3,000 as proposed by the Senate; and increases the compensation of the chief clerk in the office of the Chief of Ordnance from $2,250 to $2,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 89, 90, and 91, relating to public buildings and grounds: Provides an additional sergeant of the park police at $1,580 in lieu of a private at $1,360, and readjusts the proportion of the total appropriation to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

On Nos. 92 to 98, inclusive, relating to the State, War, and Navy Department buildings: Strikes out the appropriations for "sign writers" in the various office buildings and inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the removal of any of the temporary office buildings erected on private property if the consent of the owners can not be obtained to a continuance of the lease and the occupancy thereof by the United States.

On Nos. 99 and 100, relating to the appropriation for temporary employees in the office of the Secretary of the Navy: Authorizes the employment of an additional person at $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the employment of two additional persons at $2,000.

On No. 101: Authorizes the employment of an additional person, at $3,000, from the appropriation for temporary employees in the office of the Solicitor for the Navy Department.

On No. 102: Strikes out the authority, proposed by the Senate, for the employment of one person, at $4,000, from the appropriation, "Naval records of the war with the Central Powers of Europe."

On No. 103: Provides for two temporary employees, at $3,000 each, in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy.

On No. 104: Provides for two employees, at $2,000 each, to be paid from the appropriation for temporary employees in the office of the Chief of Naval Operations.

On Nos. 105 to 108, inclusive, relating to the Naval Observatory: Provides for an additional astronomer, at $3,200, and a chief clerk, at $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, and reduces the appropriation for temporary employees from $10,000 to $5,000.

On Nos. 109, 110, and 111, relating to the Nautical Almanac Office: Provides for an assistant, at $2,500, as proposed by the Senate, and reduces the appropriation for pay of computers on piecework from $3,000 to $1,500.

On No. 112, relating to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: Strikes out the authority proposed by the Senate for the employment of additional persons above the rate of $1,800 per annum under the appropriation for temporary employees.

On Nos. 113 and 114: Provides for a clerk, at $840, in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 115 to 120, inclusive, relating to the Indian Office: Appropriates for additional employees in the Indian Office, as proposed by the Senate, as follows: Two clerks, at $1,800 each; 6 clerks, at $1,600 each; 2 clerks, at $1,500 each; 8 clerks, at $1,400 each; and 8 clerks, at $1,200 each.

On Nos. 121 and 122: Provides for six additional clerks, at $1,600 each, in the Patent Office, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 123: Increases the appropriation for investigation of kindergarten education by the Bureau of Education from $5,000 to $6,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 124 to 140, inclusive: Appropriates for the offices of surveyors general in Alaska and the various States in the amounts proposed by the House, instead of in the amounts proposed by the Senate. The total amount restored to the bill by the Senate's recessions on these items is $4,920.

On Nos. 141 to 146, inclusive, relating to the Post Office Department: Appropriates $4,500 for an additional assistant attorney, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $76,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the transfer to the statutory roll of certain clerical employees now paid from the appropriation for railroad transportation; strikes out the appropriation of $2,000, proposed by the Senate, for painting and increases the appropriation for publication of the Postal Guide from $40,000 to $43,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 147–153, inclusive, relating to the Department of Justice: Increases the compensations of the chief clerk from $3,000 to $3,500, the private secretary and assistant to the Attorney General from $3,000 to $3,600, the pardon attorney from $3,000 to $3,600, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the appropriation of $2,000 for an assistant chief clerk; increases the appropriation for official transportation from $2,500 to $3,000; and inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the Department of Justice a 1-ton motor truck.

On Nos. 154–157, inclusive, relating to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Increases the compensation of clerks to commercial attachés from $1,500 to $2,000 each and strikes out the provision for two additional clerks to commercial attachés, at $2,000 each; appropriates $171,000, instead of $165,000, as proposed by the House, and $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the commercial attaché service; and increases from $63,000 to $75,000 the amount of the appropriation for "promotion of commerce" which may be expended for branch offices in the United States.

On Nos. 158, 159, and 160, relating to the Steamboat-Inspection Service: Strikes out the two assistant inspectors at $1,100 each proposed for Mobile, Ala.

On Nos. 161–166, inclusive, relating to the Bureau of Navigation in the Department of Commerce: Provides for shipping commissioners at Bath, Me., at $1,000; Rockland, Me., $1,200; Charleston, S. C., $1,200; and increases the compensation of the commissioner at Galveston from $1,500 to $1,800 and the commissioner at San Francisco from $3,000 to $4,000; and increases the appropriation for operation of vessels in the enforcement of navigation laws from $60,000 to $75,400, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 167 and 168: Strikes out the appropriation of $2,000, inserted by the Senate, for an expert optician in the Bureau of Standards.

On Nos. 169, 170, and 171: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, for the expenditure of $6,000 for stationery for the commercial attaché service in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

On Nos. 172, 173, and 174, relating to the Department of Labor: Provides for a carpenter, at $1,200, in the office of the Secretary of Labor, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $100,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, for commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes.

On Nos. 175 and 176: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, for nine law clerks, one for the chief justice and one for each associate justice of the Supreme Court, at not exceeding $3,600 each.

On Nos. 177 and 178: Increases the compensation of nine clerks of United States circuit courts of appeals from $3,500 to $4,500 each.

On No. 179: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, making the total appropriation for compensation of district judges available for the salaries of all district judges who may lawfully be entitled to compensation during the fiscal year 1921.

On Nos. 180, 181, and 182, relating to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia: Increases the compensation of the chief justice from $8,500 to $9,000 and the compensation of the clerk from $3,500 to $4,500.

On Nos. 183 and 184: Increases the compensation of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from $7,500 to $8,000.

On Nos. 185 and 186, concerning the paragraph relating to the purchase of typewriting machines: Strikes out the language, proposed by the Senate, prohibiting the purchase of a machine through exchange if it is of a different make than the machine given in exchange, and inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, prohibiting the sale or exchange of any typewriting machines that have been used less than three years.

On No. 187: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, granting increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum to certain civilian employees of the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1921. The section inserted by the Senate is in the exact terms of a similar section of the bill as it was reported to the House.

On No. 188: Corrects a section number in the bill.

On No. 189: Inserts the section, proposed by the Senate, extending the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on Printing to mimeographing, multigraphing, and other processes used for the duplication of typewritten and printed matter.

WILL R. WOOD,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement showing the net results of the conference, the report upon which has just been read.

The amount of this bill as it originally passed the House was $104,368,671.11.

The amount of the bill as it passed the Senate was $105,761,081.11.

The net increase added by the Senate was $1,392,410.

The Senate receded as to items amounting in the net to $1,025,355.

The House receded as to items amounting in the net to $367,055.

The amount of the bill as agreed upon in conference is $104,735,726.11.

The amount of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for 1920 was $127,165,683.63.

This bill as agreed upon is less than the appropriations for 1920 by $22,429,957.52.

The amount of the estimates for this bill for 1921 was $122,453,685.52.

The bill as finally agreed upon is less than the amount of the estimates by $17,717,959.41.

I wish to say that I feel indebted to, and I know that the Members of the House, all of whom appreciate his high-grade service, will be pleased that I shall make public acknowledgment of the splendid service rendered on this conference committee by my coconferee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. [Applause.] By reason of his long experience upon conference committees, by reason of his thorough knowledge of the appropriations as they are considered by the committee and as they pass the House, he has become peculiarly competent to render service of the most valuable character. From first to last, in the committee room, in the House, and in the conference, he has been actuated by but one purpose and one desire, and that to serve his country well through conscientious endeavor to save the taxpayers some money in this appropriation bill. I therefore feel that this public acknowledgment is due to him, and I am more than pleased to make it. [Applause.]

The important changes made in this bill are very few in number. One of them is with reference to the lump-sum appropriation made for clerk hire in the War Department. The bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation of $2,500,000.

The Senate restored the amount of the estimates, $4,000,000. In conference the Senate receded to the amount of $1,000,000, and the House receded to the amount of $500,000, making the total appropriation as finally agreed upon $3,000,000, $1,850,000 of which was allotted to The Adjutant General's office for the purpose of getting out the lists and records of ex-service men for the adjutant generals throughout the United States, and for the purpose of aiding The Adjutant General's office to furnish the information required from that office to the finance section of the War Department, the War Risk Bureau, and others who have to do with making final settlement of the claims of ex-service men.

Another item was that abolishing the Subtreasuries. That item carried in the House bill was stricken out by the Senate and restored in conference, so that as the bill now stands the Subtreasuries of the United States will be abolished at the end of a year.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. In that connection I should like the gentleman to explain just how the abolition of those offices affects the mints and assay offices in the United States?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does not affect them at all?

Mr. MILLER. I ask my question because of the phraseology in the second paragraph on page 3 of the report.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only way in which they might possibly be affected is that the language abolishing the Subtreasuries provides that the United States Treasurer may use the vaults of the mints for the storage of bullion.

Mr. MILLER. There is nothing in the bill affecting the running of those institutions?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Not at all as far as their operation is concerned.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. The saving to the Government by the abolishing of the Subtreasuries will amount to about $500,000 a year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; a little over half a million dollars a year.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman state why it was that the date fixed was July 1, 1921, instead of July 1, 1920?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Committee on Appropriations and the conference committee were of the opinion that possibly the time fixed here would be required, for the Secretary of the Treasury must make provision for taking over the various activities or whatever is left of these Subtreasuries, and it was done in order to meet the convenience of the Treasurer's office.

Mr. DYER. You thought all that time would be necessary, up until July 1, 1921?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; but they may be abolished before that time. They must be abolished within that time. Some of them will no doubt be abolished before the end of that time. It will be easier to get rid of some of them than others.

Mr. DYER. Who has that discretion?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DYER. He has the authority to do that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and in addition to the saving of $500,000 to which the gentleman refers, the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury is that there will be a saving to the United States Government of more than $2,000,000 a year in interest.

Mr. DYER. I think this is one of the greatest accomplishments of the present Committee on Appropriations, and I want to congratulate them that they have finally overcome the partisan desire to keep a lot of fellows in public office purely for politics, and that we now at least are getting down to some evidence of a desire of the Congress to have its way on behalf of the people and save them a lot of money that has been spent on these Subtreasuries in the last six or seven years, or since the Federal Reserve System was established, uselessly and, in my judgment, purely to keep people in public office for partisan reasons.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for the commendation, not only for myself but on behalf of the Appropriation Committee and the conferees, because we have received much condemnation, and this will tend to offset much of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under the conference report is the appropriation continued for Subtreasuries during the fiscal year of 1921?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And thereafter they are abolished.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the net increase in this conference report over the bill as it left the House?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Three hundred and sixty-seven thousand and fifty-five dollars.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think the conferees have done very well to come out of it with that. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what consideration apparently overwhelmed the House conferees resulting in the increase of the salary of the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know that we were entirely overwhelmed, but we yielded to the amendment made by the Senate increasing the salary of the chief justice by reason of the fact that he is the chief justice and is entitled to a little more compensation in recognition of his exalted station in comparison with the associate judges.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, that is the method taken to increase salaries all along the line. It is something like the increase in the cost of living and increase in wages, one follows the other. The proper place for the increase of salaries of justices, as the gentleman will recognize, is within the jurisdiction of another committee. I am not criticizing the House conferees or the House committee. I think they have done a splendid work on this particular bill and are entitled to a great deal of commendation. But I wish to point out to the gentleman that there is a great movement organized apparently on foot trying to secure an increase of the salary of judges within the District of Columbia, and not only that, but to get more judges. I trust the gentleman will have that in mind when the next bill comes up before his committee.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman a further question, and that is in reference to the amendment shifting the Bureau of Efficiency. Did the House conferees have any proposition to make in reference to it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state that the House conferees did not spend a great amount of time in the consideration of the Senate amendment for the reason that the House conferees announced to the Senate conferees immediately that we were instructed to report this item back to the House for consideration.

There was this consideration, however, with reference to that portion of the Senate amendment which provides the manner in which the Director of the Bureau of Efficiency may be removed. It was agreed that in the event that this item stayed in the bill an amendment should be had that the same authority that appoints the head of the bureau, the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, should have the power to remove him.

Further than that there was no considerable consideration of the amendment, except that the conferees, I think, were unanimous in the opinion that the Bureau of Efficiency should report in some way or other to the Congress of the United States; that as long as it continued to operate as it does now it could not be the Bureau of Efficiency that it was the intention of Congress it should be, because of the opposition it received in every executive department of this Government with two or three exceptions.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman intends to make no recommendation with reference to it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we brought it back for the deliberation of the House, as we agreed to in the outset. There is another item I wish to call the attention of the House to of some importance. The House appropriated $9,000,000 for the clerical hire in the War Risk Bureau. The Senate reduced that to $8,500,000, making a reduction of $500,000. The House conferees acceded to that amendment on the belief that the clerical force can be reduced within the year so that those who wish to work can have plenty of opportunity to work, and I am confident they can be fully compensated by the sum allotted.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. With reference to the bonus provision, does that include the clerks in the War Risk Bureau?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does not, except to the extent of $120. The bonus provision as it now appears in the bill is the exact provision that appeared in the House bill which went out on a point of order. The Senate made no amendment to it and no amendment was made to it in conference for that reason. Under the bonus provision those who are now employed in the War Risk Bureau receive $120. It will be recalled that it was fixed at that amount as compared with $240 for clerks doing like service in other branches of the Government a year ago. That was for the reason that under the classification adopted for the employees of the War Risk Bureau they were receiving more pay proportionately than those doing like work in other departments.

After consideration of this item and the passage of this bill in the House we were informed by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance that it was the intention of the War Risk Bureau for the next fiscal year to reduce the classification, so that they would operate on the same basis as the clerks in other departments now operate. But whether that classification has been completed seems not to be entirely clear, and under the operation of the War Risk Bureau their present classification may be continued as it is now, without reduction; and if so, the employees in the War Risk Bureau will get substantially the same increase that the other clerks now get by reason of the fact that their basic pay is larger than that of clerks in other departments doing similar service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What is the word used in the bill? You do not use the word "bonus."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. "Increased compensation."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is in fact a temporary increase of salary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is an additional compensation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But only temporary in character.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The reason I asked is that we often hear of the Federal clerks having been given a bonus similar to something now asked by the soldiers. In the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee various witnesses referred to the fact that the employees had been given a "bonus," but as a matter of fact they were given a temporary increase of salary. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. GARD. In taking up the matter of the bonus and other matters in connection with compensation to employees, did the committee take into consideration the report of the Commission on Reclassification of Salaries that has been filed in this House?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The House bill was made up and this bonus provision inserted and the bill was passed by the House before the report of the Reclassification Commission was submitted.

Mr. GARD. I know that; but it was submitted after the bill passed the House and before the bonus was added to it in the Senate.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct, and I would state that the conferees did not take into consideration the reclassification report.

Mr. GARD. They gave it no consideration whatever?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They did not. We had no jurisdiction over it, and in consequence our considering it would heve produced no possible result.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does this increase of pay for employees of the Federal Government include the employees of the Federal Board for Vocational Education?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does not.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state why they have been left out, as usual?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They were left out originally under the limitation in respect to those institutions that were established after a certain date—January 1, 1916—and because of the fact that they receive lump-sum appropriations, and the heads of the department graduate their salaries; also because, in fact, they are paid higher salaries than are the clerks operating under the salaries fixed by the statute in the old established departments. The committee left the matter exactly as it was. It became an original Senate provision by reason of its going out of the House bill on a point of order.

Mr. DYER. I have examined the salaries of the employees of the Federal Board for Vocational Education in comparison with the pay of the employees in other departments to which this increase is granted, and to all intents the pay is substantially the same, with the exception that the other employees get an increase in the way of this $240 extra compensation. It is not fair to the employees of the board that they should be left out.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is a matter that the heads of that department will have to solve for themselves. Their appropriation is a lump-sum appropriation, and they fix their own salaries, as I am informed.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman recall whether or not they asked to be included?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. No one appeared for them before the House committee, and no one appeared for them before the Senate committee, but certain members of the committee received letters from them, and after the Senate had passed the bill some representatives of the Vocational Education Board came to see some members of the committee. It was absolutely impossible for us to give them any relief in conference, because of the fact that the conference committee can not raise the amount of the appropriation or increase the salaries of those who are benefited by it.

Mr. DYER. I suppose the gentleman feels as we all hope, that before the next appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, following the one under consideration now, the salaries of the various employees will be adjusted under the advice of this great Reclassification Commission.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know whether it will be done as a result of the work of that commission or not, but there is no doubt of the necessity for a reclassification and a refixing of the salaries.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman thinks that will be done within the next fiscal year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I hope it will, because of the patchwork by which the classification and fixing of salaries has been built up here. It is absolutely inconsistent. You find in many departments where there are variations of three or four hundred dollars in the pay of clerks who are doing exactly the same thing.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the heads of the department just referred to receive a lump-sum appropriation and fix the salaries themselves?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is my understanding. That is true with reference to the War Risk Bureau. The original bonus provision carried $120 for the war-risk people as against $240 for like employees in the other departments.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Under those circumstances I do not see how the committee of conference could have done anything else than it did do.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It could not do anything else.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As long as that system prevails whereby they fix the salaries.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In fairness to those who are in charge of the Vocational Education Board and the War Risk Bureau, I would suggest that they might save considerable trouble to themselves and avoid complaint about the disparity of pay by putting their employees under the same classification as the employees of the other departments, so that they would receive the same amount of bonus received by the clerks in other departments, and personally I regret that this could not be done.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I see that amendment No. 158, on page 138, provides two assistant inspectors of hulls and boilers to be assigned to Mobile at a salary of $2,100 each. Was there any discussion in the conference regarding the equalization of these salaries of assistant inspectors of hulls and boilers on the Lakes and the Atlantic and the Pacific seaboards?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The item to which the gentleman has called my attention went out in conference, so that it does not appear in the bill. There was no discussion with reference to the equalization of these salaries. We could not equalize them in conference, and consequently any discussion that might have been had there would have been of no avail.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman appreciates the inequalities in these salaries?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no doubt about that. That is only one of many inequalities in the pay of officers and servants of the United States Government.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House still further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 53, relative to the Bureau of Efficiency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 53.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that ultimately the activities and jurisdiction of the Bureau of Efficiency should be in the control of the Congress, and ultimately I have no doubt but what that will be, but I have very grave doubt of the wisdom of making the transfer now for these reasons: The House some months ago passed a bill providing for a budget. The House is very insistent that there shall be budget legislation this session of Congress. [Applause.] The House is equally insistent that the budget legislation shall be thoroughgoing and effective and not a makeshift or a camouflage. I do not say—I am not justified in saying, because I do not know—that this amendment was placed on this bill by those not friendly to a thoroughgoing, effective budget system, but I do know, or at least I believe, that the adoption of this amendment would make it much easier to avoid and defeat the adoption of a budget system at this session.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And if the provision was not put in the bill for that purpose, I can not imagine what the purpose could have been. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman considered the contingency that possibly this very provision will have to be considered in conference again if budget legislation ever gets to conference?

Mr. MONDELL. I have considered that, and that is one of the very reasons why this should not be considered at this time and in connection with this legislation and in this form. It should not be, because it confuses the situation. It interjects into the legislative situation a condition tending to make it easier to defeat an effective budget bill; it affords an excuse for not providing a thoroughgoing and effective budget bill in the due course of time.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. In the due course of time and in connection with the general question of the budget this matter should be considered, and it will be then logical to consider it. It can then be considered on its merits in connection with the other important propositions of which it would be a part. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. The budget bill which we passed in the House and went over to the Senate contained two propositions. One was an executive budget and the other a legislative budget and an independent audit system. Now, this would tend to take the place of an independent audit system, and if we adopt both we would have a duplication of work which, I think, is wholly unnecessary, and I can not conceive of this legislation being proposed for any other purpose except to defeat the budget bill which we sent to the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. Whether that be the purpose or not that will be the effect, and I can not think of anything more illogical than having started to develop a budget system, a thoroughgoing and effective budget system, we shall, in the midst of the prosecution of that essential work, turn aside and pick up a makeshift or partial substitute for some features of a budget. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is about all I care to say about the matter. I feel very earnestly about this matter. I think the House is called upon again to say whether it stands squarely, unequivocally, honestly, and with determination for budget legislation.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. GARNER. I think the gentleman ought to say in that connection, in order that we may get a parliamentary situation so we can get a budget system, that unless something develops between the time we pass the sundry civil bill or the deficiency bill or some other bill that must become a law before this Congress adjourns which will make the parliamentary situation such as to make it possible for us to consider some kind of budget legislation—one gentleman remarks that we put it through, but the Senate has not put it through, and the Senate may not consider and may not pass the legislation—we should put it on some appropriation bill. Then they will be compelled to consider it, and this House will have an opportunity to force legislation of that character.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. I think I have sufficiently evidenced my earnestness in the matter, and while I think we ought to proceed along the usual legislative lines, if it becomes necessary to do otherwise that is a matter that certainly ought to be considered. I will now yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman if the House did not pass the budget bill by an almost unanimous vote?

Mr. MONDELL. It did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where does the opposition come from?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know, I will say to my friend, definitely; but I do not like to see a provision of this kind that, to my eye, has the complexion of the proverbial African in the woodpile. It may not be, but it has that appearance to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will state to the gentleman that I heard this morning, which looked to me to be straight, that one of the most powerful Republican Senators over in the Senate was fixing to kick the slats out of this whole budget business.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure that the Senate, as the House, is practically unanimously in favor of a budget, but I think it is always our duty to make the way easy to those who desire to pursue the path of righteousness.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield for another question. What brought about the suggestion that if we pass this thing now and then pass a budget bill that we will have another case of duplication? Can not we bring in a bill one day legislating this efficiency concern out of existence?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, that might be done. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire some time?

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield a minute to me?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to invite the majority leader's attention to a proposed amendment to the Constitution, which would permit the President to veto items in an appropriation bill. Now, if the majority leader is really in earnest about economizing, I think the giving of the President the power to veto separate items in an appropriation bill will do more to bring about economy, or as much to bring about economy, as anything else that could be done. I have taken occasion—and I hope to have the opportunity of addressing the House on the subject in the near future—to write to the governor of every State in the Union, and I have collected a great deal of data concerning this matter. A great many of the States of the Union have similar provisions, and this provision is not criticized by the governor of any State, but most of them commend it, and say it has done a great deal of good in the various States where they have such a provision. And I can not see any argument against such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] desire some time in opposition?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. How much? Five minutes?

Mr. SISSON. I would like to take a little longer time than that. I would rather not be limited for the present. I am not going to talk very long, but will talk directly on this item.

Mr. MONDELL. Ten minutes?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the gentleman from Wyoming is unnecessarily alarmed about this item. If I may get the attention of the House, I believe I can convince it that this item has nothing to do with the budget. If you have a budget and you make the allotment to the various departments of the Government and follow the budget to the letter, this Bureau of Efficiency has to do with the money after it has been allotted or appropriated to the departments. They have made a great many recommendations which have been carried out by the various departments of the Government, and in one instance, in the Treasury Department, the Treasurer was able to dispense with the services of 400 men by adopting the method suggested by the efficiency committee. This Bureau of Efficiency will have nothing to do with the budget and can have nothing to do with it. They simply go through the various departments, and under the present arrangements they have been going only into the departments where they have been invited to go. Your Committee on Appropriations have repeatedly aided and assisted them in getting into the departments by making the request themselves. Now, unless you have some influence outside of the bureau chiefs, outside of the chief clerks, outside of those men who have been operating the departments for quite a while and who imagine that the bureaus which they themselves are conducting are just exactly as they should be, you will never be able to get any reform in an accounting system, in the method of doing business in the departments, in adopting modern methods of keeping books, in adopting labor-saving devices, and all those instrumentalities which the commercial world is now using, and you will have to force them into the departments. If this Bureau of Efficiency could be under the control of Congress and not appointed by the executive department, they then would have room to make the investigations and make reports without fear of losing their heads.

Now, I do not believe there is a single Member of Congress who would vote to do any department an injustice, but if our professions on this floor and on the stump mean anything they mean that we want efficient service, and more efficient service, in the future than we have had in the past and more efficient service than we have now. Therefore when your conferees were confronted with this proposition they found some features of the amendment which the Senate put on, but they yielded to the House in reference to these items, and we could have agreed in conference, but the chairman of the committee had agreed that this item should come back to the House.

Now, we did not like the method of dispensing with services as provided in the Senate, because under that language they were afraid that it would be absolutely necessary to bring impeachment proceedings to remove those who were appointed under the language of the Senate bill. But eliminating that language, they are to be removed by the Speaker of the House and by the President of the Senate. So when you take into consideration the budget bill as it passed the House, even the legislative feature referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], this can in no wise affect that. This in no wise conflicts with it, this in no wise gives any man an excuse who favors the budget system. And I do favor it. And I say that your conferees, so far as I am informed—and I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will agree—that not a single member on the Appropriations Committee, so far as I know, objects to the budget bill that was presented here by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. Therefore, as a friend of the budget system, I do not believe, nor do your conferees believe, that this bill will be a duplication of work, because the administration of the budget system can not in any wise go into the departments, can in no wise investigate the methods used in the departments, and your budget system is going to be, in my judgment, a failure to a certain extent unless you can adopt economical methods in these departments and can bring about efficiency.

I mentioned the Treasurer's office. I could mention The Adjutant General's department, and while there is some little difference between The Adjutant General and one member of this Efficiency Bureau, the General testified before us that, with the exception of this one gentleman, they were all men who were willing to help him, and The Adjutant General admits that in nearly all of the recommendations of this Bureau of Efficiency their suggestions have been met, and that he has adopted nearly all the suggestions which they made.

I believe the present Adjutant General to be an accomplished Army officer and a man earnest in the performance of his duty. That is Gen. Harris. His testimony will show that this Bureau of Efficiency has accomplished good things in his department. So in the Post Office Department. Gen. Burleson, day before yesterday, when I was in his office, said that he had the Bureau of Efficiency there and had invited them to come into the Post Office Department.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman tell the House something about the work of the Bureau of Efficiency in the War Risk Bureau?

Mr. SISSON. In the War Risk Bureau?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. They have accomplished some good there, but I can not tell you the details of what they accomplished. But I do know that a great many clerks have been dismissed.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman would not agree with me that this Bureau of Efficiency came near wrecking the War Risk Bureau?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so. On the contrary, I believe their recommendations are reasonable. But the Postmaster General said the Bureau of Efficiency had gone into his department on his invitation, and although since he has been Postmaster General the business of his department has increased 70 per cent throughout the country, as the records will show, yet by the adoption of modern methods and by cooperation with the bureau he has been able to reduce the expenses about 5½ per cent below what they were before the increase of business.

He said, "We should have been, and would have been, justified, and could have come to Congress and could legitimately have said, 'The business throughout the country has increased 70 per cent, and, the business having increased 70 per cent, that is my reason for increasing my force in the city of Washington 70 per cent.'" But he did not do it. He adopted business methods, and the Post Office Department is doing 70 per cent extra business, and it is costing the people 5½ per cent less than the service cost the people before he adopted these methods. So that the Committee on Appropriations, coming in close contact with this situation, is able to say that while the Bureau of Efficiency has not accomplished all it endeavored to accomplish, because in many instances every recommendation it made was resisted, yet it is fair to say that while all their recommendations have not always been wise—because they do not claim to be all-wise—where it has been able to get the cooperation of the departments that bureau has done much good.

Now, we feel that under this method of direction that bureau will be the agency of the House and the Senate; the agency of the body that raises the money; and that they would then be free to make recommendations to the various committees as our agency, and would accomplish infinitely more good than if they were responsible for their places and appointments to the Executive, where they would feel that where they should overstep any bounds they might be subject to removal by the Executive.

Now, under the Parliamentary Audit of England, they do all the auditing, and I wish we could get that system here, because under that system the English Government absolutely not only has control of the appropriations and the purse strings when they take the money from the people in the form of taxes, but they absolutely control and follow up the expenditure of that money, follow it up to its legitimate purposes, for which it is expended, and see not only that the money has not been unlawfully expended, but see that it has been wisely and economically expended. That is the purpose of your conferees in agreeing to this amendment, that this Bureau of Efficiency may go into these departments after the money has been allotted to them, so that these gentlemen can report to Congress whether the money has been wisely or unwisely expended, and in case it is extravagantly expended, ascertain what is necessary to bring about economy.

I do not believe there are half a dozen Members of Congress who would fail to vote for this if they were convinced that it would be accomplished.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield the gentleman time?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. How many of you gentlemen can rise in your seats and say that any particular department is not efficiently run? And how many of you could explain to the Members of this House exactly what is needed to remedy the situation there? How many Members of the Senate could do that? You have to have an agency to go into the departments and make recommendations, so that we can act intelligently upon the matter. I do not believe it is always the mental attitude of Members of Congress in failing to economize so much as it is their failure to know just how to economize, to know just how to reduce expenditures without reducing the efficiency of the Government; and if this arm of the House and the Senate is agreed to in this conference report, we can at least make that effort, and with a small expenditure of money ascertain whether or not, under our direction, this Bureau of Efficiency will result in any good.

Entertaining these ideas, your conferees agreed to it. We feel that the House ought to agree to it. We feel that the Senate acted wisely in insisting on its amendment, and with the suggested changes it would be absolutely in the power of the House and Senate to change the personnel of this bureau at any time if it did not suit them. For that reason we believe that the Bureau of Efficiency will be worth infinitely more to us than it has been in the past, and it has been worth a good deal to us in the past, according to the testimony of the bureaus where this Bureau of Efficiency has made its investigations and recommendations.

I do not know that many of you gentlemen have had your attention called to this matter, but I do believe that if you had served on the Committee on Appropriations, where we patiently made the effort, especially the subcommittees that have directly to do with the departments, you would realize that we need this information, this concrete information, so that we can make appropriations in amounts sufficient to efficiently do the business of the Government. Without some information of this kind I am at an utter loss to know how you are going to be able to reduce expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I must disagree with my friend and colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. I am in favor of the motion made by the distinguished majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] that the House disagree to this amendment, and that a further conference be asked for.

I do not know that I would nave taken the floor to discuss this proposition but for the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi. Because I know the facts, I differ with what he had to say, and I feel it incumbent on me to call to the attention of the House, particularly to the attention of some Congressmen who may not in other days have known of the activities of the Bureau of Efficiency, some of the efforts made by the chief of that bureau to foist himself upon the executive departments where he was not needed.

Now, let it be said that this chief originally came into office in 1914, when the Committee on Appropriations gave him an appropriation that year, which was to take care of all of his efficiency work and his work of economy, of $15,000. In 1915 he jumped 100 per cent, to $30,000. In 1916 he went along with $30,000 and got a deficiency of $1,200 more. In 1917 he jumped to $69,0000. In 1918 he went up to $98,000. In 1919 he went up to $115,000; this year to $125,000, and next year more.

Here, in a nutshell, is the remarkable progress of the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, who has made a wonderful showing in these economies that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] refers to.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. He apparently is very efficient in getting money out of the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes; much more so than appears on the surface to the men of this House who have not been familiar with what Mr. Herbert D. Brown, chief of the bureau, has been doing.

Beginning some six years ago Brown spent three noisy and contentious years with the United States Civil Service Commission. Two more years were wasted fumbling and fiddling with his corps of efficiency experts and his train of efficiency devices in the United States Treasury until finally kicked out of that department by the Secretary of the Treasury. Later he broke into the War Department with his efficiency systems and disorganized methods. Quite recently he was engaged in a bitter warfare with The Adjutant General over the practicability of certain visionary schemes he is trying to force upon that department. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, saw him first, and despite his protests of injured innocence he was prevented from putting his efficiency devices in operation in that department.

Something more than a year ago, while the country was in the midst of war and at at time when capable men were hard to secure, Brown was named director pro tempore of the War Risk Bureau and for some nine months the operation of this bureau was under his absolute direction. If there is any doubt in the minds of any Member regarding the impracticability of the efficiency schemes of this man or of the utter incompetency of the man himself, I want such a Member to recall to memory the unsavory record of this same War Risk Bureau. On the floor of this House we have heard a number of Members testify regarding conditions prevailing in this bureau while under the management of this man Brown.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] stated that in one day there were 300,000 letters received which lay scattered on the floor of this bureau in an aimless pile unopened and unanswered. From every nook and corner of the country dependents and wives of our soldiers complained to Congress that they were neither getting subsistence checks nor, in fact, able to receive an answer to their correspondence. On numerous occasions the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] drew the attention of this House to the utter inefficiency of this man Brown and the hopeless condition of the War Risk Bureau under his management.

In fact, conditions there became ultimately so intolerable that with one voice the people of the United States arose in protest against its miserable administration, for which the director pro tempore, Mr. Brown, and his efficiency devices were chiefly responsible, nor was order restored until he was driven from further participation in its affairs. I have been reliably informed, Mr. Chairman, that during these nine months Director Pro Tempore Brown was generally known among the officials and the employees of this bureau as "Inefficiency Brown," and it was reported that he tried to administer this largest insurance business in the world from his own bureau by telephone. Had he given one-tenth the attention to this War Risk Bureau that he has devoted to his private penchant for lobbying and interfering with legislation there would not be this sorry record to set down. Among his contributions in the shape of efficiency devices in the administration of the War Risk Bureau was one extraordinary mechanical time-saving experiment for handling claims. In reality it was nothing more than a half-baked idea of some visionary inventor. More than a year has elapsed since Brown tried to introduce this device, but it is still in the blue-print stages, although I am reliably informed over $200,000 has been wasted on this experimental machine.

In the face of these utter failures, it would seem that Mr. Brown and his ideas would quietly disappear or that this imposing list of blunders would, at least, chill his effrontery. Instead his bureau has grown in influence and power. More money is required for its upkeep. Brown keeps on lobbying. He gets the money. Some two years ago he was directed by the United States Senate to prepare statistical data regarding the prospective cost of several plans for the retirement of civil-service employees. Practically two years and $100,000 of the people's money was used up in making this investigation, and the sum total of all these efforts is a compilation of figures that, in so far as their value to Congress or to anyone else is concerned, are worse than worthless. Quite recently, when Senate bill 1699 was up for consideration in the United States Senate, this very tabulation was the subject of long and heated controversy. Now there is a general agreement of opinion among both the friends and the opponents of this bill that Brown's retirement compilation possesses no value whatever.

On the contrary, Government Actuary Joseph S. McCoy, acting under orders of Secretary of the Treasury CARTER GLASS, compiled within a three-week period, at no cost to the Government save his own salary, a tabulation relative to the cost of the various retirement plans which is infinitely superior and infinitely more reliable than the figures presented by Efficiency Expert Brown. In this connection I will include here, as part of my remarks, an editorial from the Washington Times under the caption, "What a retirement bill will cost the Government":

WHAT A RETIREMENT BILL WILL COST THE GOVERNMENT.

(By Bill Price.)

Senator CARTER GLASS, when Secretary of the Treasury, submitted to Joseph S. McCoy, actuary of the Treasury, a request for full information as to what the proposed bill will cost the Government. This was done at the request of Senator STERLING, chairman of the Senate Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, who is strongly supporting the measure.

Mr. McCoy is regarded in Washington as the most wonderful mathematician the Government ever had in its service. His aid has been invoked for years by the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance in the preparation of revenue bills for which there was no precedent in Government taxation. How much revenue will a tax on so-and-so bring in is a question put by Congress to Mr. McCoy. He has for years come within a few dollars each year of informing the committee just what the Government could expect in revenues from a given item of taxation.

In his reply to the Treasury request for detailed information as to the cost of the bill this wizard of figures definitely states:

"While the plan will eventually cost the Government some $9,000,000 per year, it is very evident that the efficiency of the service will be increased at least 5 per cent, which is equivalent to over $18,000,000 (saved to the Government) per year."

Mr. McCoy substantiates his conclusions by tables of various kinds. The first year's cost to the Government would be only $6,000,000. He doubted whether the maximum contribution of the Government would ever exceed $15,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, this editorial gives further confirmation to my statement regarding the worthlessness of Chief Brown's figures and the merit of those submitted by Government Actuary Joseph S. McCoy. And I would have you remember that Brown's misleading figures represent an expenditure of some $100,000, while those of Government Actuary McCoy cost comparatively nothing.

In failing to attain even a measurable success as in this instance Brown is simply running true to form, but this will not check his ambitious designs. Brown is still lobbying. He is still busy with Senators and Congressmen. He is still nursing dreams of expanding power. He is still following the policy of paying little attention to efficiency and devoting much of his thoughts to the enactment of legislation that better suits his purposes.

In this connection I wish to especially direct your attention to Senate bill 3612, introduced by Senator KING, of Utah, which makes provisions for such a further wide extension of the powers of the Bureau of Efficiency as to almost stagger the imagination. Were this bureau a fit institution of proven capacity, these projects for greater power to be delegated to its charge would be highly extravagant, but in the light of the record of Brown and his bureau the proposal is unthinkable and absurd. Note the terms of this bill that promises so much power to the Bureau of Efficiency.

It provides that Brown, as chief of the bureau, shall have almost unlimited and unrestricted authority over all other Government departments. In its practical application it would put a club in his hands that would even bring Cabinet Members to their knees when wielded by an ambitious and designing man. This bill provides that in the matter of appointments, transfers, promotions, dismissals, personnel of the departments, allotments of employees to each department, and practically everything else, Efficiency Expert Brown will have the unrestrained right to pass judgment, issue edicts, see that his will is obeyed, and by the stopping of salary vouchers and otherwise enforcing his ideas of efficiency and discipline every departmental bureau and section chief of the District, or in the entire Government for that matter, will be subject to his whims and wishes. Think of this autocratic power being vested in one man, an individual who has won distinction, not by worthy service but by planning and plotting and by hollow promises and vain pretensions misleading Members of Congress. This power is now to be vested in a man claiming an unselfish concern for the public welfare and who has won influential converts to his scientific management philosophy. When his activities have been brought to book these friends have been quick and ready to take the floor in his defense and to excitedly proclaim his pretended virtues. Chief Herbert D. Brown, of the Bureau of Efficiency, is a lobbyist before everything else. That is his art. That is his craft. In that he has won distinction. As an efficiency expert or as a useful adjunct to the public service he is of no useful service whatever, but rather have his efficiency schemes disrupted orderly administrative processes wherever installed and their operation has been a constant drain upon the Public Treasury.

No matter how pure the motives, it is a questionable practice for any bureau chief to be continually lobbying around the Capitol, attempting to influence legislation and boasting of his prestige with the lawmakers. His business is in his office. He should be ready to respond to the call of Congress. No public official whose time is spent chiefly in lobbying is fit to hold public office or worthy of the confidence of the people. Steps should be taken at once to rid the service of this man Brown, and if needs be a congressional investigation should be ordered to see whether this Bureau of Efficiency performs any useful service or discharges any worthy functions in the public service.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to support the motion of the majority leader and send this bill back to where it came from with this objectionable amendment. I am confident that the House will do this practically unanimously.

Mr. GALLIVAN was given leave to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is very rarely that I find myself in a position of disagreement with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] on matters relating to appropriations, and I regret that on this occasion I can not agree with him with reference to this Senate amendment. I hope the motion made by the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment with respect to the Bureau of Efficiency will prevail. And I wish to say, gentlemen of the House, that in this position I am not influenced by any opposition, personal or otherwise, to the Bureau of Efficiency. I have had occasion heretofore, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and upon the floor of this House, to comment on the splendid service performed by the Bureau of Efficiency. It has rendered in many instances which could be pointed out a very valuable service to Congress in the matter of the expenditures made in the various departments. But I look upon this amendment, Mr. Speaker, as one which will endanger the chance of securing budget legislation if it is adopted. We can not have a successful and a proper form of budget legislation unless we go further than merely giving to some central authority in the executive branch of the Government the right and the power to revise the estimates before they are submitted to Congress. We not only must have some one connected with the executive branch of the Government whose duty it shall be to revise these estimates and to reduce them, cut out duplications, and so forth, before they are transmitted to Congress for its consideration, but after the appropriations are made we must have some authority under Congress that will see to it that the appropriations which have been made by Congress are expended as the Congress intended they should be expended. In other words, you can not have a successful and a proper form of budget legislation unless Congress has the control of expenditures after the expenditures are made.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] says that the adoption of this amendment will not interfere with the budget legislation. Let us see. I want the gentleman to examine the bill which was passed by the House last fall, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said, by practically a unanimous vote.

You will find that it not only provides that the President shall have the authority, but it shall be his duty to revise the estimates before they are submitted to Congress, but it also provides that a controller general shall be appointed, who will be under the control of Congress and who is given charge of a sufficient force for the purpose of doing, among other things, just what this amendment provides. In other words, it will be his duty with that force placed under his jurisdiction to investigate the various departments and to say whether or not those expenditures are properly and efficiently made, and render his report to Congress. I can not view this amendment in any other light than an effort to defeat the budget legislation which the country is demanding of Congress and which is favored on both sides of this Chamber. Both political parties favor budget legislation. The Democratic convention of four years ago declared for budget legislation in its national platform. Gentlemen almost unanimously on both sides of the Chamber, both Republicans and Democrats, are in favor of budget legislation. If you adopt this legislation, I want to serve notice on you now, as the gentleman from Wyoming said, you are placing in the hands of those who may oppose budget legislation a club to defeat it in the end.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What does the Bureau of Efficiency have to do in regard to the expenditure of appropriations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Absolutely nothing as far as the expenditures are concerned. The Bureau of Efficiency was created by a provision on an appropriation bill to establish standards of efficiency in the various departments by consent of the head of the department.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. May I ask what interference the Bureau of Efficiency have in the budget matter in the expenditures of money covered by the budget?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It will have this effect: It will result in positive and emphatic duplication of work. The gentleman from Nebraska is thoroughly familiar with the budget bill as it passed the House. If the bill becomes a law, it provides for a comptroller general with the force provided for in the bill, and his duties are prescribed in that bill, and I say with the Bureau of Efficiency under the control of Congress as the comptroller general will be, there will be a positive duplication of work on the part of the two bureaus. One principal reason why budget legislation should be adopted is to cut out duplication of work, and this Congress does not want to place itself in the position of actually providing for additional duplication while adopting legislation to prevent it in the various departments of the Government.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. This is a very important matter, and I desire to get at the gentleman's thought. As I understand it, the law of the accounting system would have to be materially modified in order to give the comptroller general any authority over the appointment of clerks, their grades, or their reduction or demotion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Undoubtedly. I do not mean to contend that the comptroller general would have any such authority if the budget bill passes as it passed the House. That is a matter for Congress. The comptroller general under the terms of that bill, if directed by Congress, or any proper committee of Congress, can go into any department, investigate the manner in which expenditures are being made, the efficiency of the clerks, and whether they have too many or too few, and make his report to Congress, and Congress can take such action as it sees fit on the report.

Mr. MAGEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MAGEE. I would like to know how you are going to get a budget system that amounts to anything without amendment of the rules of the House providing for the concentration of appropriations in one committee?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That proposition is now pending.

Mr. MAGEE. Is it not well enough to admit frankly, at least to ourselves, that if the Senate does pass the bill that is pending over there, and it becomes a law, we shall have nothing except an empty shell?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would not say that it was an empty shell, because I think that much good will result from the passage of the budget legislation. In my opinion the legislation that passed the House is of much more importance than the amendment to the rules, but I think, as the gentleman does, that they do go hand in hand.

Now, this is legislation on an appropriation bill. There is a budget bill pending in the Senate, and I understand it is to be shortly reported and discussed in the Senate. Everyone in the House hopes it will quickly pass the Senate, so that it can be enacted into law in time for the transmission of the estimates next fall. I think that rather than adopt this amendment put on an appropriation bill by the Senate we ought to reject it, and insist on the disagreement, and let it be regularly considered by the Senate with the legislation now under consideration, because they are similar and identical in many respects. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in what I may say I do not want anyone to think for one moment that I have any desire to throw an obstacle in the way of the passage of the budget bill. I have been advocating it ever since I have been in Congress, and the longer I am here the more necessity I see for such a system.

I hold no brief for the present head of the Bureau of Efficiency, but I do know that we need a Bureau of Efficiency, and need it to operate in such a way that in itself it can be of efficient service to the Government. Under the present plan it is absolutely or very nearly nil. It can not go into any executive department without the invitation of the head of that department, and they never receive that invitation. Whenever a proposal is made to make an investigation for securing efficiency it is resented; and one of the greatest pieces of impertinence that I ever saw thrown in the face of Members of Congress and Congress itself is the letter written by the Secretary of War in opposition to this provision, criticizing us for daring to assume that we should be the ones who should say when, where, and how the Bureau of Efficiency shall operate. To my mind the opposition of the War Department to having the Bureau of Efficiency report direct to Congress and to its being under the direction and control of Congress affords the best reason why this scheme should be adopted. One of the striking accomplishments of the Bureau of Efficiency as now constituted, and hampered as it is, was in demonstrating that $5,000,000 a year could be saved to the Government in the Quartermaster General's office by consolidating the various divisions of that department into one businesslike department. The report of this bureau confirmed the opinion of the Quartermaster General, who said the saving could be made by this consolidation, and result in the rendition of far more efficient service. The Quartermaster General undertook to make it, and cut 72 officers from the pay roll, and was preparing to release 500 civilian employees when the Secretary of War, at the suggestion of the General Staff, countermanded the order and directed that all these officers and men be put back on the pay roll, that they might continue this wasteful extravagance. Efficiency is one of the last things the War Department desires. Furthermore, the Secretary of War has the nerve to submit in his letter the kind of a provision he would have inserted in this bill, absolutely nullifying and making inefficient this Bureau of Efficiency, demonstrating, if you please, the necessity for an independent Bureau of Efficiency that will respond to the Congress of the United States, that is entitled to receive information which may be of service to it.

What is the situation? Take the various appropriating committees that are desirous of having information in formulating their several appropriation bills. All of the information that they get is the information that comes from heads of these departments. The committee hears only one side of the case, and they have no means of ascertaining the truth of their statements or of their bureaus' necessity as the law now is.

If we had a Bureau of Efficiency responsible to Congress to make an investigation in obedience to the committee that is desirous of knowing and that is entitled to know what the existing conditions are, there would be quite a different question presented. At this very time we know there are thousands and thousands of employees in these departments who should go home and who should be released from the civil-service rolls. Yet every one of these bureaus coming before these committees insist that their particular bureau shall be kept up at its present strength, and many of them even ask for increases, and why? Because they think they are being humiliated if their bureaus are decreased in number. If we had a Bureau of Efficiency that could go and make a survey of the work being done in these offices, that bureau could give information of value to the various committees of Congress. The only way we have now is just to blindly shut our eyes and reduce the appropriations, hoping that these gentlemen will conform to the reductions made. It is unscientific and utterly impractical the way it is now. I am not here for the purpose of interfering in any way with the creation or operation of a budget system. If I were assured, or if I can be assured, that a budget system will be passed by this Congress in which the machinery that is provided for in this proposed amendment will be inserted, then I say well and good, we should not have any duplication even in a Bureau of Efficiency system. But there is the most important urgency that this Congress before it adjourns shall make it impossible for the autocratic head of any of these departments to say to the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency or to the heads of these committees, "We are running this establishment of ours and we will give you the information that you desire, and that is the only information that you can get." That is what they are saying to us now, and they are even coming here and demanding that we pass legislation which will permit them to continue in this slipshod way of doing business. Every Member of Congress knows, and he has repeated it time and again on this floor and has written it to his constituents time and again, that these departments are reeking with inefficiency. We all know that there is not a business concern in the United States that would last a year if it conducted its business the way the business is conducted in these departments. We all know that the clerical force in Washington could be reduced one-half, if not two-thirds, if there was a business way of doing things, and that more satisfactory work could be done, with a reduction of expense amounting to at least one-half or two-thirds of what it now is. So that nothing can be said in favor of the defeat of a Bureau of Efficiency responsive to Congress. The only thing that can be said is the manner in which it shall be created, whether by the adoption of this amendment, or whether it shall be included in a budget system.

Everyone who has had anything to do with the investigation of these departments for the purpose of making appropriations knows that we are imposed upon every day and every hour, and that by reason of that imposition the Government is made to pay millions and millions of dollars each year. Something must be done, and it is our duty to do something, and to do it now, to remedy this situation. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, for a number of years the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was chairman of the subcommittee having in charge the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I served with him on that subcommittee. On numerous occasions we were called upon to defend the action of the Bureau of Efficiency. I can not agree with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] with regard to the work of the bureau. It may have made mistakes—all of us have—but it has done a great deal of good. I do, however, think that the amendment contained in this bill is destructive of budgetary legislation, and hence I can not support it; it is offered as a substitute for budgetary legislation. If there is one thing which the people of the country are demanding, it is budgetary legislation by this Congress. Almost six months ago to a day the House passed a bill for a budget system by a practically unanimous vote, only three votes being registered against it; yet not until six months after that did the Senate committee on the budget report out a bill. I realize there is a strong feeling in the House that the Senate is trying to kill this legislation. I know there is widespread feeling of distrust that we are not going to have a budget system. So many Members of the House have come to me personally and asked that the budget bill, which the House passed, be placed on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and, if necessary, a rule be brought out and adopted making it in order, thus assuring budget legislation, that I am constrained to believe that unless something is done at the other end of the Capitol some action of that kind will have to be taken by the House, because we are going to have budgetary legislation at this session of Congress, and such legislation will take care of this. [Applause.]
